Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns

Gotham Spends a Billion for Gifts

NEW York.—That $1,000,000,000, or an amount equal to the annual expenses of the national government, has been spent here this year to fill Father Knickerbocker's 5,000,000 Christmas stockings and those of relatives and friends of residents in his domain is the estimate of experts who have carefully followed one of the most remarkable holiday seasons in the history of the country.

Reports from other parts of the country reflect similar conditions and indicate a holiday business of $10,000,000,000 or more for the country at large. In spite of the alleged unsatisfactory business situation, Santa Claus has been patronized in a most lavish manner this year.

Even in this billion-dollar Christmas outlay, however, the much-talked-of increased cost of living has had a marked effect. Presents in the form of luxuries are fewer than ever before, and such articles as automobiles, expensive jewelry and high-priced decorations generally have given way to articles of more general use.

Merchants in all parts of this country agree that the Christmas shopper, whatever the cause, is learning to spend his money to better purpose than formerly.

Whatever other customs may change, there is one Christmas practice which goes on, apparently, forever. Santa Claus may come by reindeer-drawn sleigh, automobile or airship as modes of travel progress, but Christmas time on which his packages are hung continues to increase in popularity.

Promoter's Pulpit Talk Brings Coin

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—This city has always liked a "live wire" promoter, one who can go out and get money where money isn't if necessary, but Ben Blanchard played the game too strong. Fifty business men of this city who have invested $500,000 in an Arizona copper mine on Blanchard's seductive representations will no mighty soon to get back what they put in and will willingly sacrifice their hopes of gigantic profits.

Once, in Kansas City, he was in church, a stranger, when the minister was trying to raise enough money to send a missionary abroad. The contributions came so slowly the minister was discouraged and about to give up when Ben Blanchard arose and with the seductive voice that charmed so many into buying his stock, said how much it would require to put this missionary on the heathen firing line and keep bar there for a year. With o weary voice the pastor named the amount.

"Only that much?" asked Ben. "Why, if that is all that's worrying you come here and get the money. I believe I have that much in my pocket and if I haven't I'll give you a check for the balance."

"Will the kind brother please come forward," asked the pastor, while the congregation struggled to get a glimpse of the man with the money.

Ienats modesty kept Blanchard from going forward until three pillars of the church came to his seat and escorted him to the pulpit. There he made an eloquent speech on the happiness it gave him to be able to send a missionary among the heathen, not neglecting to tell his audience how easy it was for him to do this because providences had been kind enough to put him in possession of o copper mine in Arizone rich enough to send missionaries to the fatherment ends of the earth and keep them there till all tis heathen had seen the light.

It was a notable effort, dalivered with convincing simplicity and before a congregation was through with Blanchard he had sold $5,000 of stock.

Film Shows Kilgallen Kicking Count

CHICAGO. — Persons who attend moving picture shows will soon have a chance to see the Chicago romance of Count de Beaufort thrown upon the screens of 5 and 10 cent moving picture theaters. The Count has posed for a picture story of his affair with the Kilgallen heiress of Chicago and says he is going to get $25,000 and royalties for the venture.

The first scene shows the Count and Countess in the honeymooning act. Pa Kilgallen is evidently surprised when his daughter bounces in with her prize. In the next scene the Count is shown as a working man—just to win the old man's favor.

In the next scene the Count is shown presenting a fountain pen to Pa. Pa tells the Count that the pen is of no use to him because he has writer's cramp from signing checks and that he won't accept his rubber stamp signatures. Pa changes the subject and hopes the Count will find it convenient to get out before it becomes necessary to fill his cost tails full of hosts

Then a long line of insistent creditors is shown outside the Count's door and here is where his bulldog gets into the picture, by jumping out among the creditors, whereupon they disperse in confusion.

The scene at the hospital, where the Countess was taken when injured, shows the Count trying to "butt in," disguised as a Red Cross attendant. His nemesis, Po Kilgallen, ever on the job, is there and disperses the Count.

The last scene shows the Count literally rolling in wealth and two men with shovels such as are used by laborers in Pa Kilgallen's steel mills are keeping the Count from being buried by a flood of gold.

Kansas Has Champion Fresh Air City

WINFIELD, Kan.—This town, which has been known for years as the Athens of southern Kansas, because of its colleges, is now adding a health laurel to its crown. Winfield claims the distinction of having more bath tubs and more sleeping porches than any other town in Kansas.

In addition to its sleeping porches, Winfield has living tents. Those who cannot afford either step with their windows up.

Winfield, which is credited with having one of the best, if not the best, municipal waterworks systems in Kansas, officials encourages cleanliness by furnishing water for a six-room house, including bath and sewer connections and sprinkling, for less than a dollar a month.

Sleeping porches in Winfield are now the rule rather than the exception. When a new house is erected a sleeping porch is provided for as a matter of course.

M. W. Friedenburg, president of the state board of pharmacy, is preparing to outdo all the others in sleeping porches. He will construct a big sleeping porch extending around three sides of his residence. The porch will have four guest rooms, divided by screens.

Several citizens last summer started a new departure in outdoor living. A small house, half canvas and half screening, with canvas roof and floor, is erected on the lawn and the members of the family spend much of their time there, instead of in the house.

Winfield is becoming known as a fresh-air town as well as a center of learning, and isn't certain of which it is proudest.

In The Public Eye

NOW HEAD OF WESTERN UNION

The election of Theodore N. Vail to the presidency of the Western Union Telegraph company to take the place of Col. Robert C. Clowry, who resigned, furnishes a remarkable instance of resilted ambitions.

The father and mother of Theodore N. Vail lived in Morristown, N. J., where they owned the Speedwell iron works. For several years prior to 1846 Professor Morse had been working on the telegraph, undiscouraged by the remarks of friends that the scheme was impractical and ridiculous.

In 1837 Alfred Vail, a young and ambitious engineer, son of Theodore N. Vail, came to the inventor's aid. The dot and dash alphabet, known as the Morse code, was worked out by Alfred Vail, and the two men were at opposite ends of the wire when the historic message, "What God hath wrought," was sent along its line in 1844.

Theodore Vail had moved to Carroll county, Ohio, and there, on July 16, 1845, the young Theodore was born. Later the Vails returned to Morristown, and there the boyhood of the new president of the Western Union was passed.

The lad's first leaning was not toward telegraphy. He attended the Morristown common school and later studied medicine. The possibilities of telegraphy finally weaned Theodore away much against the desires of his mother.

He went to New York and got a position as operator. His parents soon after went to Iowa and young Vail got a place with the Union Pacific railroad in a small town west of the Missouri river.

He was twenty-one years of age then. In addition to his duties at the key he had also to perform those of station agent. His satisfactory work commanded the attention of Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, chief engineer of the Union Pacific. Seven years later he was made general superintendent of the railway mail service and sent to Washington. In Washington he became acquainted with Prof. Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, and at his request resigned from the mail service to go into the telephone business. Just as his uncle had developed the telephone forty years before, Vail in 1878 started to develop the telephone. The efforts of Theodore N. Vail were responsible for the gigantic Bell Telephone and Telegraph company of today, which controls the Western Union.

Mr. Vail is seven years the junior of Col. Clowry, who was born on a farm in Will county, Ill., September 6, 1838. It is doubly romantic in that Colonel Clowry started as a poorly paid telegraph operator about the same time that young Vail was trying to grasp the wonderful science of telegraphy, then being neglected by his uncle, Alfred Vail, the practical friend of Professor S. F. B. Morse.

KINDLY TRIBUTE FOR MOODY

A touching incident in connection with the retirement from the supreme bench of Justice Moody from the Supreme Court of the United States, on account of ill health, became known the other day when the court spread upon its records letters which had passed between the court and Justice Moody in regard to his resignation.

The members of the court who sat with Justice Moody sent him a letter to which Justice Lurton and Justice Hughes, appointed recently, concurred in a note, the letter being signed by Presiding Justice Harlan and Justices White, McKenne, Holmes and Day, reads:

"Dear Brother Moody: We cannot let you retire without an expression of our deep regret. Tha too few years during which we sat together on the bench hitherto has confirmed the prophecy of your arguments at the bar. They had proved that your unusual powers would be applied es faithfully and impartially to dispassionate analysis and wise law as attorney general they had been devoted to an always lofty presentation of a side. We grieve that the country so soon should lose services that it ill can spare, and which have so richly and well served it. But you have left a sample of your work in the reports, and, we believes, have earned the great reward—that the wins and good of the future, as well as of the present, will say it wos well and nobly done."

From his bed, to which the justice is confined in his home in Washington, Justice Moody responded:

"My Dear Brethren: I cannot let your letter go unanswered, but at this time I am unable fittingly to say more then that your words reach deep in my heart and mind and awaken there an echo which will live with the expression of this and of my respect and affection for each individual member of the court, I must be content."

NEW UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT

Dr. George Edgar Vincent, dean of the faculties of arts, literature and science, and professor of sociology at the University of Chicago, has been chosen president of the University of Minnesota by the board of regents of that institution. He will succeed President Cyrus W. Northrop on April 1 at a salary of $10,000 a year. Dean Vincent had been with the University of Chicago for eighteen years.

George Edgar Vincent was born at Rockford, Ill., March 21, 1864. His father, John H. Vincent, bishop in the Methodist Episcopal church, was one of the founders of the Chautauqua institution at Chautauqua, N. Y. After graduating from Yale in 1888 Dr. Vincent spent a year in editorial work and a year in European travel. In 1888 he became vice-principal of instruction at Chautauqua. In 1892 he received one of the first doctor's degrees granted by the University of Chicago. He was made dean of the junior colleges in 1900, and professor of sociology in 1904. He was made president of the institution at Chautauqua in 1902, at the same time becoming dean of the faculties at the University of Chicago.

NEWS FROM the CAPITAL

Uncle Sam in the Theater Business

WASHINGTON.—Uncle Sam has gone into the theatrical business. The federal government has expended $256,00: in the construction of a model playhouse, and will spend thousands of dollars more in producing plays annually.

The playhouse was built to afford amusement to 4,000 inmates of the Government Hospital for the Insane, commonly called St. Elizabeth's. The institution is the largest asylum of its sort in the world.

Specialists state that one of the greatest aids in curing insanity or of alleviating its sorrows is amusement. All of the large insane asylums of the world have regular diversions for the benefit of their patients.

St. Elizabeth's is the only insane asylum that has a theater. Heretofore the only amusements afforded the patients were athletic sports, in which only the more slightly demanded were capable of taking part—walks through the grounds or occasional drives about the adjoining country. All day long the large proportion of the patients stroll about the grounds in care of keepers and if this uneventful way find their only recreation. Few enjoy the drives, as model playhouse was limited in capacity and number.

The new theater stands in the center of the large grounds and is a model in its style of architecture.

A stringed orchestra has been formed, like wise a glee club, so entertainments may be diversified. The regular theatricals will be given in the afternoons and evenings. During the morning hours a moving picture apparatus will afford amusement. From breakfast time until bedtime the doors of the unique house of amusement will be open.

Congress Loses Many Wealthy Members

FIVE millionaire United States senators will lay aside their togas at the close of the present session of congress. There are others, of course, but these men are to be conspicuous because of their great wealth. Senatore declare that it will be the greatest change in the membership of this illustrious body that has taken place at one time since a senata first graced the nation dome. Only the future history assart that the senata of the sixty-second congress will break the record.

In the departura of the five men of great wealth the senata will lose a vary substantial block of members whose manifold ducats have caused them to be known disrespectfully in some circles as the "Millionaires' Club."

With the passing of Aldrich (Rhode Island), Hale (Maine), Kean (New Jersey), Depew (New York), and Scott (West Virginia), will disappear the personal leadership, the ultra-conservative spirit, the old-fashioned and close-corporation control of the Senate.

Aldrich and Hale have been senators for 30 years and both declined to be candidates for re-election. For at least 10 years they have been important factors in all the great affairs of the nation dealt with by congress. Kean came in 12 years ago, which is not a long time in the service of senators, but Depew is serving his end of his second term and owing to the New York tidal wave he will have no chance for another. Scott, another two-termer, was the bosom friend of the late Senator Hanna.

Souvenir Hunters Steal the Silver

THE waiter who isn't lynx-eyed is not needed about the senata restaurant these days, for the new silverware and china is hera and the souvenir hunter needs watching. For the first time since the senate and house restaurants were established the former has put into use cutlery and chinaware that is decorated. The words "United States Senata" stand out in bold relief about an attractive crest painted or embossed upon every piece. Every knife, fork, spoon or plata bears the words "United Stotes Senate," the telltale inscription indicating that statesmen have found the little instrument at meal time.

The averaga scuvanir hunter has distinct conscience when it comes to carrying away a small article of this kind which belongs to the government." In the souvenir collection of many American homes there soon may be hidden a piece of silverware or china, worth but little intrinsically, but highly prized because it came from the capitol of the United States. Therefore the waiters will have to be on the alert. Not that those who may dine in the senate restaurant are really bad folks, but simply because it's human to gather mementos and especially mementos that belong to Uncle Sam. Every taxpayer feels that he's paid for his little old thing a thousand times over, anyway.

In addition to the supply of new silver the senate restaurant also boasts of the installation of a teleautograph, an instrument that writes at long distance. No longer will it be necessary for the waiter to yell "Bring one" down an imitatich silver tube. The waiter will be within the restaurant room above and at the same time it will be reproduced by the teleautograph down where the chef holds sway.

American Navy to Sport Dental Corps

IN time of peaca prepare for war.' Uncle Sam's blackbeats and fighting ships may have to show their teeth to an enamy some day. So the house committee on naval affairs favors the establishment of a dental corps in the navy. To that end the committee reported favorably a bill introduced by Representative Dawson of Iowa a few days ago.

The bill creates a corps of 30 dentists, who, it is provided, shall enter the service as pasa assistant surgeons. The age limit for entrance is from twenty-four to thirty-two years. At the end of 12 years, by the naval system of promotion, the 30 will have received themselves automatically into one lieutenant commander, four pasa assistant surgeons and 25 assistant surgeons.

Any man with the toothache must acknowledge that a corps of dentists will add to the happiness, not to say the gayety, of the navy. Paternal Uncle Sam gives his sailorman ice cream for dinner three times a week. The hardiest tar cannot enjoy ics cream if an exposed nerve is throbbing in one of his molars. The ship's dentist will keep the crew's teeth well filled and well filed, so that every man jack can easily bite a chew of 'bacey from a plug o' navy. Also, presumably, the marine dental surgeons will sharpen the eye teeth and wisdom teeth of naval apprentices, so that they will learn quicker that a ship's port and starboard lights are not lamps in a drug store window.

If a man-o'-war is sailing in the teeth of the wind the dentist aboard can act as navigator, and if a "mountainous wave" destroys her bridge he can supply a new one easily. If a cruiser gets in the doldrums the pasad assistant surgeon can give her nitrous oxide gas and make her laugh.

COCKNEY AS A DIALECT.

The efforts of the London county council to drive out the Cockney speech from the schools of the English metropolis hardly needed the opposition given in a book recently issued in defense of the dialect. This book, which is, curiously enough, the work of a man named Mackenzie MacBride, contends that Cockney is an modern dialect, but that it possesses as ancient and honorable lineage running back nearly 1,000 years. When one born within sound of Bow Bells says "thet" for "that," "benk" for "bank," and "by-lyffe" for "bailiff," he is using no modern corruption of the English language, but the pronunciation of those words which has obtained not only in London, but in Kent and Surray for hundreds of years. Moreover, in ancient times, the words were spelled as the Cockney now sounds them. So, too, ere "ebahs" and "ahtades" justified for "about" and "outside," according to Mr. MacBride. He says that many Londoners have been laughed out of their ancient pronunciations, and he advises them not to change their speech, because of outside prejudices against it, says the Chicago Tribune. Certainly Cockney would seem to be a dialect or it would not have survived for so many centuries in the midst of speech which calls itself more cultured. It is a curious fact that in the Bahama Islands, which were settled more than 200 years ago by Londoners, the Cockney dialect is as strong as is Cheapside.

These are the days for sausage. There is no use for a person to stick up his nose at sausage, for sausage is good when it is made right. It is the recourse of the food world to the poler bears that blows through the morning. It is as sweet as a plate of strawberries on a cold Sunday. But it must be made right. Good sausage is an art product. It is made up of judgment, taste and skill. It is a combination of ingredients that can'eiolo with one another as the fragrance and the blush of the rose. The butcher doesn't understand this. Generally he throws in some scraps and odds and ends, and especially the odds, dabs of some salt, pepper and sage, grinds it out, and the confiding customer buys it because it is sausage, says the Ohio State Journal. He does't like it very well, but he eats it, and everything goes. The other day we saw a customer in a meat shop direct the making of his own sausage. He selected the meat, simonpure cuts off the best parts, had it ground and took it home to season it ashore. That man knows how to take care of himself. He knows art from a bull's foot. He appreciates the true sentiment of sausage.

"Remove not the ancient landmark," is a Scriptural injunction to whose value the United States is only beginning to subscribe in earnest, says the Omaha Bee. Spasmodic efforts at preservation have been made here and there, the most notable being in the case of the Yellowstone, but the insensate greed of the utilitarian world has wrought heavy damage in many spots of beauty and wonder ere the people awoke to a realization of the wantonness. The Palisades of the Hudson have been saved after years of desultory fighting, during which commercialism was steadily at work scarring the noble features of the Hudson. Similar destruction of the famous Delaware Water Gap has been averted with the utmost difficulty. Only private enthusiasm and ability to pay saved and perpetuated the Garden of the Gods, which a wealthy patron has just presented as a Christmas gift to Colorado Springs.

The announcement that the two ends of a waterway by which it will be possible for vessels to avoid passing outside of Cape Hatteras have been joined, so that completion of the work is a matter of but a short time, is of special interest. Cape Hatteras is one of the most dangerous points along the American coast, particularly at certain seasons, and anything which can lessen its terrors for mariners or passengers will be a most welcome change. Incidentally the canal in question will form one of the links in the Atlantic deep-waterway system, which is destined to play a most important part in the development of the country's commerce and as an adjunct to the national defense.

We are glad to have that newspaper clipping giving the information that "flies will not alight on picture frames if you keep them well rubbed with oil," but it would be just like us to lose it before next summer.

AMERICAN IS LEADER

GEN. LEE CHRISTMAS SAID TO BE AT HEAD OF REBEL ARMY IN HONDURAS.

NATIONAL TREASURY IS MOVED

Gen. Bonilla, Former President, Participates in Attack on the Davilla Government.

New Orleans, Louis. — A revolution has broken out in Honduras and fighting is going on atoeg the Honduran Nicaragua border 20 miles below Cape Gracias, Nicaregua. The forces are being led, according to the wireless reports, by Gen. Les Christmas, the American adventurer, who was to have met 1,500 men, many of them Americans, on the Nicaragua border with 40 days' provisions.

It is known that the Davilla government moved $50,000 in silver from Puerto Cortez to Celba and the latter city is believed to be the objective point of the advancing revolutionists.

The reports indicate that the greater part of the fighting is about 20 miles from Cepo Gracies, Nicaregua, but on the Honduran side. It is understood that the plan of attack is for Christmas to force his way inland, while Gen. Bonilla attacks Celba from the Puerto Cortez side, leaving the gunboat Hornet, which is said to be now heading toward Puerto Cortez while that port is held under her guns.

REBEL STRONGHOLD CAPTURED.

Mal Paso, in State of Chihauhua, Falls Before Federal Forces.

Mexico City, Mex. — Mal Paso, said to have been the stronghold of the revolutionists in the state of Chihuahua was captured by the federal forces.

The officials stated to the correspondent of the Associated Press that as soon as the troops under Gen. Luque joined those of Gen. Navarro near Federnales, Thursday, plans were made to advance upon the position held by the rebels.

In accordance with these plans a reconnoitering party, under Gen. Gordillo Escudero and consisting of about a hundred men was sent out from Gen. Navarro's camp. The detachment advanced toward Mal Paso and was fired upon from the sides of the canyon by the revolutionists. Gen. Escudero ordered an advance and after a sharp skirmish the revolutionists fled, leaving the pass in possession of the federals.

No details of casualities were given but it is thought a number on both sides were killed.

Cruiser for Fillibuster.

AVIATOR HOXSEY BREAKS WORLD'S ALTITUDE MARK AT LOS ANGELES.

ACCOMPLISHES FEAT IN GALE

Daring Airman Thrills Enormous Crowd in His Descent From Clouds—Is Benumbed by Cold—Wins a Prize of $3,000.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Arch Hoxsey of the Wright team of aviators Monday broke the world's record for altitude here when he attained a height of 11,474 feet and accomplished the feat in a 30-mile gale that wrecked Latham's monoplane and kept cautious aviators to the ground.

Seventy-seven thousand enthusiastic spectators gathered at Dominguez field witnessed the record-breaking flight of the southern California aviator, and when Hoxsey landed safely, almost in front of the grand stand, his barograph was removed from the machine and examined and the announcement made that he had broken the altitude record of 10,499 feet established by M. Legagneux at Pau, France, on December 10, pandemonium broke loose among the spectators and a mad rush was made for the field to congratulate him.

Hoxsey's feat is without parallel in the history of aviation. He went into the air a few minutes before one o'clock and quickly began his upward flight. In a short time he was beyond the view of the spectators. He was gone so long that the officials at the field became alarmed and began making inquiries and requesting the near-by towns and beach resorts to be on the lookout for the aviator.

Shortly before three o'clock a spectator in the grand stand discerned a speck in the air, and it was several minutes before the majority of the throng could distinguish the speck slowly descending. Hoxsey made several complete circles with his machine pointed downward, before he became plainly visible to the naked eye. While on the side of the field opposite the grand stand he made a sensational glide of 1,000 feet. The multitude watching him thought he had lost control of his machine and bald its breath, but when within about 500 feet from the ground, the aviator turned his planes upward and shot into the air again. He turned his machine completely around at the pylon to the right of the grand stand, descended and stiffly climbed from the machine.

GIVE $1,300,000 TO SCHOOL

Unnamed Man Donates Fund to Affiliate Columbia University With Presbyterian Hospital.

New York. — On behalf of a donor who withholds his name, George L. Rives, chairman of directors of Columbia university, and Robert W. De Forest, president of the Presbyterian hospital, announced that $1,300,000 had been pledged for the perfection of an affiliation between the hospital and the medical school of the university.

The gift comes through Edward Harkness, a member of the wealthy family of New York and Cleveland, who adds $300,000 himself.

New York.—With a knife wound three-quarters of an inch long in his heart, neatly stitched up by surgeons, Samjuel Herman, a waiter, went back to work Wednesday.

"PADLOCK BILL" IS ADOPTED

SPANISH DEPUTIES PASS MEASURE AT STORMY SESSION.

Premier Wins Victory—Bill Prohibits Creation of Religious Orders for Two Years.

Madrid.—The chamber of deputies by a vote of 195 to 9 passed the government's "padlock bill" after a most stormy and at times disorderly all night session.

This is a notable victory for Premier Canalejas, obtained after a bitter fight involving not only the opposition in Spain, but of the vatican, whose seal of disapproval was set up on the legislation even before it had been submitted to the cortes.

An originality drawn the bill prohibited the creation of further religious establishments in the country until the revision of the concordat had been completed or definite laws on the subject passed.

In the senate the government accepted the amendment of Baron Sacra Lirio limiting the period of interdiction against new congregations to two years.

The senate passed the measure on November 4, the vote being 149 to 68. The majority in the upper chamber was greater than had been anticipated. Its passage in the lower house had been expected.

INDORSES ENGINEERS' REPORT

Taft Favors Reclamation Projects Calling for Expenditure of $20,000,000.

Washington.—The letter of President Taft to the secretary of the interior commenting on the report of the engineer officers appointed to pass on uncompleted government reclamation projects was made public Monday. The letter consists chiefly of a summary of the reclamation projects which the government's expert engineers have considered feasible and worthy of the expenditure of $20,000,000. President Taft covers the subject fully, in the main indorsing the report and the recommendations.

When congress reconvenes it is the intention of the chief executive to transmit the report, with a message.

CUBAN REVOLT IS SCOUTED

U. S. Minister Jackson Holds Conditions Best on the Face But Good Now.

Havana. — John B. Jackson, the United States minister, said he felt quite confident that no political revolt was likely to occur in the island, either by General Guerrera's followers or the conservatives, all of whom, he understands, are not inclined to begin public breaches of order.

Fear Aviator is Lost.

London, England.—No news has coms of the fate of Cecil S. Grace, the American-born aviator who disappeared in the fog Thursday while attempting a return flight from Calais, France, to Dover. It is feared that he fell into the North sea. Fleet of motor cars was out to search the east coast of England, while vessels started along the shores of the North sea swept the waters with wireless inquiry concerning the airman.

TWO FLYERS KILLED

AVIATOR LAFFON AND A PASSENGER IN MAKING FLIGHT AT ISSY, FRANCE.

DROP OF 250 FEET IS FATAL

Victims Are Found Lifeless in Mass of Wreckage of Aeroplane After Accident to Craft in Midair—Thousands See Crash.

Paris.—Aviator Laffon and M. Paula, were killed Wednesday when their passenger-carrying monoplane fell from a height of 250 feet soon after they had started from issy on trip to Brussels and return.

This is the first serious disaster to a passenger-carrying aeroplane in the history of aviation.

Laffon had set out to win the $30,000 prize offered by the Automobile club of France for a round trip to the Belgian capital within 36 hours.

Laffon and Paula set op! shortly after dawn and a big crowd cheered them as the propellers began to hum and the great aeroplane arose.

Laffon sent the machine in an easterly direction and it was apparently working perfectly. Before he had gone far the motor began to miss fire and the car wobbled through the air at times in an alarming manner.

Suddenly those who were watching saw Laffon fumbling frantically with the machinery as the motor stopped. A gust of wind caught the wings and the machine turned over while Laffon and Paula clung to the framework. The aeroplane swept downward with great velocity and crashed to the earth, pinning both men beneath the wreckage.

PACKERS FIGHT FOR TIME

Counsel Opposes Dismissal of Civil Action Which Would Hasten the Criminal Trial.

Chicago.—Indicted members of the so-called "beef trust" will resort to technical means within their legal knowledge and experience to stay the criminal proceedings begun against them by the government. This was made clear Wednesday before Judge Kohlsaat in the United States circuit court.

Attorney George T. Buckingham, one of the attorneys for the packers, obtained a delay in the objections to the dismissal of the suit in equity to enjoin the National Packing company from violating the anti-trust act.

The government suit was dismissed on motion of Attorney General Wickersham. This was done with the purpose of preventing the packers from forcing a trial upon the criminal indictments.

It is the contention of counsel for the packers that the government has no right to dismiss the suit in equity; that it is virtually a supplemental bill to proceedings had before Judges Grosscup several years ago, and which resulted in the court enjoining the packers from committing certain violations of the federal trust laws and that the bill in effect asks punishment for contempt of court.

REVOLT IS SET FOR JANUARY 1

Honduran Revolutionists to Take Field on Arrival of Generals Bonilla and Christmas.

New Orleans.—Sunday morning, January 1, is the date set for the uprising against the Davila government in Honduras by the followers of Gen. Manuel Bonilla, according to information received here Wednesday based upon the word of men close in the councils of Central American exiles in this city.

It is believed that both General Bonilla and Gen. Les Christmas, who disappeared from New Orleans so mysteriously the day after the Hornet sailed, are on their way to Central American waters.

It is thought they will not attempt to join the Hornet, but will land somewhere along the border of Honduras and immediately a general uprising will follow. The Hornet is to act in concert with the land movement. It is asserted that fully 2,000 refugees from Honduras now in Nicaragua, together with a large number of exiles in other countries, are ready to make their way to the front and rally about the Bonilla standard. It is whispered in Central American circles that the army of Honduras will be depleted by large numbers of men through desertions to the Bonilla standard the minute the revolt breaks out.

Billy Papke Loses on Foul.

Sydney, N. S. W.—Dave Smith, middleweight champion of Australia, Monday scored a decisive victory over Billy Papke, the claimant to the middleweight championship of the world. The fight was given to Smith in the tenth round on a foul. Smith had a lead over Papke in every round, but it was conceded that Papke did not appear to be up to his regular form.

ST. LOUIS HAS MANY GUESTS

ECONOMISTS, SCIENTISTS AND OTHER BODIES IN SESSION.

Much Interest Displayed in Meeting of American Association for Labor Legislation.

St. Louis.—St. Louis was the mecca for sociologists, scientists, labor leaders, educators and economistsfast week. Hundreds of prominent members of those professions attended the convention of the American Economic association, American Association for Labor Legislation, American Statistical association, American Political Science association, American Sociological society and the American Home Economic association, which opened here Wednesday and closed on Friday.

Universal interest was manifested in the sessions of the American Association for Labor Legislation, in which resolutions were adopted urging action by congress and the various state legislatures on its legislative program, which includes the prohibition of poisonous phosphorus in the manufacture of matches; investigation of industrial injuries, and the enforcement of labor laws.

The American Association for Labor Legislation has about 2,000 members from every section of the country, and representing almost every profession. Tonight it will hold a joint session with the American Sociological society and American Statistical association, at which addresses will be delivered by Prof. Henry W. Farnum of Yale university, president of the American Association for Labor Legislation; Prof. Franklin H. Giddings of Columbia university; president American Sociological society, and Frederick L. Hoffman, of the Prudential Insurance company, vice-president of the American Statistical association.

The American Economic association and American Political Science association opened their meetings last night with a joint session at which addresses were delivered by Dr. Edmund J. James, president of the former organization, and Dr. Woodrow Wilson, head of the latter. On Friday morning there will be another joint session of these two bodies, at which a state income tax and land value and taxation will be discussed.

MEXICANS HISS AMERICANS

Cheer Japanese Visitors and Execrate Men From Across Border—Incident at Bull Fight.

City of Mexico, Mex.—Considerable anti-American feelog was manifested at a bull fight where the visiting Japanese guests of honors and cadets were the guests of honor. When the Japanese entered to take their seats they were enthusiastically applauded and cheers were given for Japan. Then some one started to yell "Down with the Americans!" and the cry was taken up all over the arena.

Subsequently whenever cheers were started for Japan they were always followed by hisses and cries against the Americans.

"MEAT TRUST" SUIT ENDS

Government's Petition to Dismiss National Packing Company Suit is Granted.

Chicago.—District Attorney Sims appeared before Judge Kohlsaat in the United States district court Wednesday and asked that the dissolution suit of the government against the National Packing company be dismissed. The order was entered by the court.

Mr. Wilkerson, assistant United States attorney, said that the government had decided to enter on the merits of the petition and drop the dissolution suit. He said the government did not intend to drop it, making that the men were being prosecuted criminally.

REVOLT IN SANTO DOMINGO

Reported General Grmr : Has Raised Standard of Revolution and Battle Is Fought.

Santo Domingo.—Troops were dispatched to the Dominican-Haitien frontier following reports of a battle fought there in which a number were said to have been killed.

General Heureaux is said to have raised the standard of revolt, and it is believed the battle which was fought was between his forces and the loyal troops. Conditions in the republic are ripe for a revolution, as finances are low and the inhabitants of many districts are poverty-stricken.

959 Vote Sellers Indicted.

West Virginia.—Marion county grand jury Wednesday reported 145 additional true bills against citizens accused of selling their votes at the November election. This makes a total of 959 indictments.

$3.50 RECIPE CURES WEAK KIDNEYS, FREE

RELIEVES URINARY AND KIDNEY TROUBLES, BACKACHE, STRAINING, SWELLING, ETC.

Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Wouldn't it be nice whilst a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, dribbling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a QUICK RECOVERY, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor would charge you $3.50 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. R. Robinson, K-783 Lock Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

Ended the Controversy.

On the steeple of an old Universalist church in Bath, Me., there is a wooden figure of an angel. It is not a remarkably fine specimen of art, and has always been somewhat laughed about, especially because of its high-heeled shoes. The Bath Enquirer recalls the story that a former pastor of the North Congregational church once accosted a devoted Universalist with the question: "Mr. Raymond, did you ever see an angel with high-heeled shoes on its feet?" "Why, no," answered Mr. Raymond, "I can't say that I ever did; but did you ever see one without them?"

GOT IT.

Got Something Else, Too.

"I liked my coffee strong and I drank it strong," says a Pennsylvania woman, telling a good story, "and although I had headaches nearly every day I just would not believe there was any connection between the two. I had weak and heavy spells and palpitation of the heart, too, and although I pushed cold me be thought it was the coffee that made me so poorly, and did not drink it himself for he said it did not agree with him, yet I loved my coffee and thought I just couldn't do without it.

"One day a friend called at my home—that was a year ago. I spoke about how well she was looking and she said:

"Yes, and I feel well, too. It's because I am drinking Postum in place of ordinary coffee."

"I said, 'What is Postum?'

"Then she told me how it was a food-drink and how much better she felt since using it in place of coffee or tea, so I sent to the store and bought a package and when it was made according to directions it was so good I have never bought a pound of coffee since. I began to improve immediately.

"I cannot begin its tell you how much better I feel since using Postum and leaving coffee alone. My health is better than it has been for years and I cannot say enough in praise of this delicious food drink."

Take away the destroyer and put a rebuilder to work and Nature will do the rest. That's what you do when Postum takes coffee's place in your diet. "There's a Reason."

TWO INDICTMENTS

JAMES MERRICK, FORMER POLICE SERGEANT, AND MARIE OLIVER DRAW BILLS.

IN MINNEAPOLIS VICE CRUSADE

Woman Has Been Resort Keeper,—Grafters Have Been Shielded in Investigation, Says the Grand Jury's Report.

Minneapolis. — Two indictments were returned by the grand jury charging perjury of witnesses who appeared before it. Joseph Schutta, deputy sheriff, visited the house of James Merrick, and of Marie Oliver, with bench warrants.

James Merrick, former sergeant of police, was dismissed from the force Thursday by Chief Corrigan with no explanation given further than that it was for "the good of the service." Merrick is said by his family to have gone to Chicago.

Mark Oliver was keeper of a resort at 316 Hennepin avenue. She was one of the women who was called to the office of Chief Corrigan after the publication of the letter from the Minneapolis Ministerial alliance charging the city administration with lax administration of the laws, and declared there was no graft in the city so far as she knew. Merrick and the Oliver woman are said to have made contradictory statements.

A third development was the announcement of Chief Corriston of the suspension of Peter Bevans, patrol sergeant. The chief would not explain but said Bevans had been asked for "some explanations."

The grand jury, which had investigated the alleged protection of vice in Minneapolis, reported to Judge Holt that the reason it had been unable to find sufficient evidence to warrant returning more indictments was that many of the persons subpoenaed had left the city entirely, and because there was concerted perjury on the part of many who testified.

It was apparently stated in the report, however, that the grand jury believed protection had been recorded given for a consideration, but it did not make any detailed charges of price or methods.

The grand jury declared vice and lawlessness flourished in Minneapolis until it was exposed by Minneapolis newspapers about a month ago.

Blame Put "Higher Up."

The blame for this was laid covertly at the doors of Mayor Haynes and Chief of Police Corriston, the report stating the police force was sufficient to maintain order whenever the members of the police became convinced that the administration demanded the enforcement of the laws.

The report said both the mayor and the police chief had been told repeatedly that vice conditions existed, but had refused to act without specific complaints.

The breweries were censured for the influence they exerted over the entire city administration. Through contracts and ownership or real estate secured by fixtures they maintained an influence over the city administration which went much further than the dictation of the granting and transfer of saloon licenses, it was said.

The grand jury recommended that Thomas Garvie, former chief of the so-called "Purity Squad," and Charles Hamilton, negro doctor, be dismissed from the force. Garvie was deposed from the chiefdomship of the "Purity Squad" nearly two months ago.

Hamilton recently was promoted from plain clothes detective to sergeant of police by Mayor Haynes, who wrote a personal letter congratulating the negro for his work.

Chief Corriston refused to say whether he would dismiss the two police officers or to discuss at all the grand jury report.

The grand jury recommended that its successor investigate every purchase of real estate by every department of the city administration as far back as possible. It commended the present condition of the county jail and city jail and everything connected with the workhouse, except the purchasing of supplies. It said the purchase of supplies in the workhouse should be systematized.

H. S. GUIDLEY HONORED.

Hamline "U" Senior Wins a Cecil Rhodes' Scholarship in Oxford.

Minneapolis. — Harold S. Quigley, a senior in Hamline university, Quigley, a senior in Hamline university, Quigley, was chosen as the Minnesota student who wins the Rhodes scholarship at Oxford. EDITOR GETS TOWN NEW DEPOT.

M. & St. L. Takes Action at New Richland as Result of Complaint.

Waseca.—The Minneapolis and St. Louis R. R. Co. is going to build a new depot at New Richland, in this county. The old depot was inadequate for the needs of the town and C. W. Brown, editor of the New Richland Star, filed a complaint with the state railroad and warehouse commission. The company immediately sent out men to draw plans for a new depot.

DEFENDS EMPLOYER—KILLED.

Paroled Inmate of the St. Cloud Reformatory Is Slain.

St. Cloud. — Harry Albrecht, aged 20, is in the county jail here on a charge of murdering John Pfeifer, 30, a barber, at a dance given by the Equitable lodge in Woodman hall, when the latter resented an alleged insulting term applied to his employer. O'Brien died almost instantly after his encounter with Albrecht, who is accused of emptying his revolver at the barbor, one shot piercing the body below the heart, another lodging in the abdomen, and the third grazing his arm. The other shots went wild.

Albrecht met O'Brien at the dance and is said to have used a vile name in speaking of the burglar's employer. O'Brien knocked the youth down. Albrecht went to his father's restaurant, got a revolver and returned to the ball. As he mounted the stair he fired a shot in the air. At the door of the dance floor a woman balked him and refused him admittance. Descending the stairs he met O'Brien on the second floor.

Firing again and missing, he and O'Brien grappled, the older man trying to wrest the gun from the youth's hand. The other shots followed in quick succession. With the arrest of the last shot O'Brien fell, dying a few minutes later. Albrecht was locked up.

The police are searching for Clifford Baldwin, said to have been the only eye witness. Albrecht, who is said to have been intoxicated, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Albrecht, prominent residents of St. Cloud. The parents are prostrated over the shooting. O'Brien, who was a paroled reformatory inmate, had been working Duluth have been notified and the here several months. His parents in Duluth have been notified and the body is awaiting word from them.

SEED FOR FIRE SUFFERERS.

Legislature to be Asked for Aid for Northern Minnesota Settlers.

Duluth.—Money will be needed to purchase seed for the settlers around Bandette and Spooner and other localities that were fire-swept in that section of Minnesota and the state legislature will be asked to make an appropriation to provide for it. Unless the state does something of this kind, the burned out settlers will have no seed to plant. The people of the state have contributed money, food and clothing to put the burned out farmers in a position to take up life anew, but they are without the means to make ready to put in the spring crops. Representative Mattson, of Roseau county will introduce a bill providing for an appropriation to purchase the required seed.

"I have confidence that the state will make an appropriation adequate for providing seed for the settlers who were burned out last fall in northern Minnesota and I would suggest that the work of selecting and distributing the seed be given over to the agricultural department of the state university," said W. A. McGonagle, chairman of the Red Cross in Northern Minnesota relief committee.

PREPARE FOR GRAIN DEALERS.

Farmers' Association to Meet on Jan. 5-6 in Mankato.

Mankato.—Mankato is lavishly preparing to entertain the fourth annual convention of the Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association of Minnesota, Thursday and Friday, Jan. 5-6. Addresses and business sessions will fill up the time.

Mayor A. C. Meyer will give the addresses of welcome, and President L. A. Smith, of Fremin, will respond and give his annual message. Miles K. Culver of St. Ansgar, will speak upon "Co-operation." B. A. Hilton of Minneapolis upon "Farmers Elevator Companies and How they should be Organized and Operated;" Frederick H. A. Patterson of the Mankato Commercial club will speak; Cervie Vaughn Anderson of Eagle Grove, Ia., will give an address on "What Shall the Harvest Be?" E. G. Quamen of Nelson Cliq, one on "Benefits of Co-operation;" and Harry F. Atwood of Chicago, one on "Co-operation and Progress in the Agricultural World."

FARM SCHOOL MERGER UNLIKELY

Gov. Eberhart Reps Dean Wood's Plan —Favors Separate Management.

St. Paul.—Governor Eberhart does not favor the plan suggested by Dean Wood of the agricultural school for a combination of his institutions with the new agricultural department which the governor intends to create. The governor Eberhart said that if the two departments were combined there would be under the control of a commission. This is not in accord with his policy. His favors putting the departments were combined they responsibility can be fixed. The governor favors a close co-operation between the proposed agricultural department and the agricultural school, but believes they should be under separate management.

INSURANCE POLICIES GIFTS.

Duluth.—Schulze Bros., a wholesale saddlery house, made Christmas presents of life insurance policies to employes in sums of $100 to $500 each. The company will pay the premiums on the policies as long as the insured remains in its employment. If the employe leaves the company he will have to take care of the premiums himself. TREATY OF 1851 ANNULLED

DECISION OF JUDGE AMIDON AT FERGUS FALLS.

Man, Accused of Introducing Liquor into Browns Valley Is Released.

Fergus Falls.—Federal Judge Amidon handed down a decision in the United States court in this city discharging P. J. Sullivan of Browns Valley, charged with being a blind pig proprietor, from custody and declaring the Indian treaty of 1851 abrogated and annulled.

Sullivan was charged with introducing 500 pints of liquor in Browns Valley contrary to the provisions of this treaty. He was sentenced to jail but later discovered the act of congress passed in 1903 annulling the land rights and cutting of the annuities of the Sioux in retaliation for the massacre of 1862.

After an extended review of the case Judge Amidon sums up as follows: "In the present case it is conceded that the Indian reservation which was included to be protected by article 1 of the treaty, ceased to be an Indian reservation by the act of February 16, 1865, and since that time some of the Indians have dwelt upon that reservation or claimed title thereto, the whole title therefore of federal authority over the commerce of intoxicating liquors in this territory is waiting. There are no Indians now with whom commerce can be carried on therefore the national government has no power to regulate commerce in the territory covered by the treaty. When congress annulled all rights of the Indians in these lands, it, by a necessary implication, abrogated section 5 of the treaty, the whose only object was the protection of the Indians."

Under this decision the federal officers have no further power to interfere with the liquor traffic in the wide extent of territory covered by the Sioux treaties. The decision affected by the decision includes the city of Moorhead and almost the entire southern part of the state lying south of the Mississippi including part of Minneapolis.

MINE BUREAU IS ADVISED.

Auditor Iverson Calls Attention to Mineral Possibilities.

St. Paul.—A recommendation that the work of the school of mines at the state university be extended and that a bureau of mines be organized, which will aid the state in the care and management of the minerals on state lands and in the investigation and analysis of ores found on private lands, is one of the features of the biennial report of State Auditor Iverson.

Mr. Iverson calls attention to the figures of the ore shipments for 1910, of the 42,736,302 tons mined and shipped from Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota mines, 37,337,432 tons, or 87 per cent, were mined and shipped from Minnesota, and that 60 per cent of all the iron ore used in the furnaces of the United States now comes from Minnesota.

The state tax commission May 1 listed 1,347,596,291 tons of iron ore on the known iron-bearing lands of the state, and this is being increased each year by new explorations. The possibilities of the use of the vast peat beds in the state are also cited.

Mr. Iverson, therefore, considers Minnesota has one of the greatest producers of mineral wealth in the Union, and he believes the school of mines should be made the center of attention to the people by bringing it in close contact with mining explorations and actual mine developments.

ROCHESTER CHURCH DEBT FREE

St. John's Property Presented to Bishop Without Incumbrance.

Rochester. — One of the big events in the history of St. John's Catholic church of this city took place in the Metropolitan theater when the church property and parish house were presented to Bishop Heffron free and unincumbered. The gift was made over the leadership of Rev. John A. Cummisky, the assistant priest, by members of the parish have been conducting a campaign to be free of all debt which involved the raising of $35,000.

Bishop Heffron was unable to be present to accept the gift because of illness. An elaborate program was given, which was attended by about 1,000 persons, this section of the state. Rev. John A. Cummiskey made the presentation and the bishop's representative responded. One of the features of the event was the announcement that hereafter St. John's church in this city would receive the ministrations of two assistant priests instead of one as heretofore, the new assistant being Rev. Michael Brazil. The additional services of Fr. Brazil places the Rochester church on a footing second to few in the state.

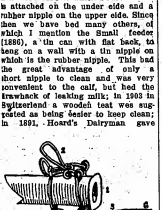
Application was made to Judge Watts of Crookston to name three referees, who will observe the record of the hearings, and Attorneys F. A. Grady and M. M. Stanton were named, the third man to be selected by them.

DAIRY



LATEST FEEDER FOR CALVES

Danish Woman Makes Improvement on Small Idea That Is Possible to Keep Clean.

Anyone familiar with the raising of calves knows the difficulties in teaching the calves to drink, writes J. H. Konrad of Denmark in Hoard's Dairyman.

But, having taught the calf to drink, no worry over its tendency to drink too fast remains. The true, floating skimmilk bite or straw in the milk may put a brake on this tendency, but in our co bacteriology, wide-awake (?) tays, this plan seems less attractive.

In the letter part of the sixties, last century, the idea of applying the principle of the infant's feed bottle was first suggested. I believe in England (?) by Tucker, where an apparatus was sold for the purpose. It is illustrated in Sheldon's "Dairy Farming" and consists of a solid, low cylindrical pail with a cover inserted beside several holes down; in the center of this is a metal tube to which a rubber tube is attached on the outer side and a rubber nipple on the upper side. Since then we have had many others, of which I mention the Small feeder (1886), a tin can with flat back, to keng on a wall with a tin nipple on upward bent rubber nipple. This had the great advantage of only a short nipple to clean and was very convenient to the calf, but had the drawback of leaking milk; in 1903 in Switzerland a wooden teat was suggested as being easier to keep clean; in 1891, Hoard's Dairyman gave as a premium the Spencer feeder, a rubber tube to suck on a wet rag, I believe. In 1903, Dr. Ren and O. H. Manufacturing company returned to the nipple and rubber tube, but had the arrangement independent of the pail, which idea was elaborated in 1906 by R. Zappa and Prochi of Italy, but encumbered with valves, and now Miss M. Spiled of Denmark returns to the Small idea as follows:

On the pail hung on the wall is a nipple with a flat rim (1 in illustration), attached to this by a closing device and hinged similar to one of the kinds used on milk bottles (2) is a metal nipple with a flat rim (3) to correspond to the fixed nipple rim and with a catch for the closing device (4), on this the rubber nipple (5) is placed.

Between the two rims 1 and 3 is placed a rubber diaphragm (6) with some small slits in it, so that when closed it holds back the milk, but when the calf sucks the slits in the rubber open and let the milk through. Of this plan is a permanent, second the objection to the "Small" system is done away with and we have at last a calf-feeder that is possible to keep clean; but the question remains whether in spite of this, it will be done properly in everyday practice. And it cannot be denied that there is a danger in unclean feeders which may perhaps after all be as great as that of the calves drinking too fast.

BABY'S HAIR ALL CAME OUT

"When my first baby was six months old he broke out on his head with little bumps. They would dry up and leave a scale. Then it would break out again and it spread all over his head. All the hair came out and his head was scaly all over. Then his face broke out all over in red bumps and it kept spreading until it was on his hands and arms. I bought several boxes of ointment, gave him blood medicine, and had two doctors to treat him, but he got worse all the time. He had it about six months when a friend told me about Cuticura. I sent and got a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. In three days after using them he began to improve. His began to take long naps and to stop scratching his head. After taking two bottles of Resolvent, two boxes of Ointment and three cakes of Soap he was sound and well, and never had any breaking out of any kind. His hair came out in little curls all over his head. I don't think anything else would have cured him except Cuticura.

"I have bought Cuticura Ointment and Soap several times since to use for cuts and sores and have never known them to fail to cure what I put them on. I think Cuticura is a great remedy and would advise any one to use it. Cuticura Soap is the best that I have ever used for toilet purposes." (Signed) Mrs. F. E. Harmon, R. F. Entered as Second-class matter August 20 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

The log rolling commenced in St. Paul January 3rd, as the 1911 legislature is now in session.

The county division contest is up for hearing before the supreme court to-day, and we will soon know all about it.

Sheriff LaBree, of Pennington county is doing a big business in insanity line, which will increase after the people have paid taxes a few years, if the new county wins out.

Teddy and Taft have kissed and made up, and they will continue to be good friends until Tedd aces on an other hunting trip and begins to see things from darkest Africa.

Some of the "red h ot"Pennington county fellows that was not afraid of increasing their taxes by county division are now getting up a petition to the government to get an extension of time of three years, in which to make final proof on their home steads, so as to let the other fellows pay the taxes.

It is folly to talk about getting an extension of time for making payment on these lands with out an extension of time for making final proof. When you prove up you will have to pay the government every dollar you owe them before they will give you a title to the land. Them that have not made final proof are not a bit better citizins than them that have, and a U. S. congress could not pass any law to discriminate between the people, and it would be unconstitutional if they did.

Two Dimensional Vision.

Most people do not know that they ought to be very thankful for having both eyes in one plane instead of having them one on each side of the head. If the latter obtained no one could tell that an object had more than two dimensions until experience and the sense of touch educated the brain to it. Any one can try it for himself. Shut one eye and look at different objects. They appear flat. With binocular vision two views of each object are obtained and neither is exactly like the other, so the idea of depth comes in.

The most easily shown example of the difference is as follows: Take a ring and hold it about two feet from the eye. With one eye closed it will take at least five trials to thrust a pencil through the ring, whereas with both eyes open it can be done on the first trial.

All animals with eyes on opposite sides of the head labor under this disadvantage, as do all insects. It is called two dimensional vision, as the idea of depth is not possible. All this on account of the image thrown on the retina of the eye being in only two dimensions.—Philadelphia Press.

Woodcarvers of Burma.

The woodcarvers of Burma are the most skilled in the world. They select and cut the best logs along the leawaddy river in the dry season, and these are thrown into the streams. There they lie until the fresh rains of the rainy season rise, then and bear them down to the pagodas cities below.

Then huge elephants are employed to drag the heavy logs from the streams and take them to the sawmills. They are then worked up by lumbers suitable for the woodcarvers. The carvers use the figure of Buddha to speak other sacred Subjects. Buddhists worship in the greater part. The designs are worked out in a variety of ways.

Nearly every shrine is carved in an elaborate manner, as some of them would be unsafe in the rainy season. The posts of the shrine is usually ornamented with a multitude of fine fabrics carving. The art of wood carving is handed down in the family log to Burma, the children taking hands by their fathers and mothers.

Royal Mistakes.

Sovereigns and princes are strongly given to making astonishing blunders while dealing with duties. The inscription on King Edward VII's coffin that he died in the ninth year of his reign instead of the tenth is only an example of many similar errors. In December, 1858, Queen Victoria wrote to the late king to inform him that he might consider himself emancipated from parental authority and control, as he was now eighteen years old and therefore of age. Her majesty's letter, which was very long, was a quasi sermon, and it ended by informing the then Prince of Wales that he would be forthwith made a knight of the Garter and a colonel in the army. How Queen Victoria and Prince Albert fell into so extraordinary a mistake it is impossible to understand, for the prince had only then completed his seventeenth year. Dean Wellesley, to whom the young prince showed the letter, at once detected the serious error into which the queen had fallen, but she thought it best to say nothing.—London Truth

Got Full Measure.

All yesterday James had played truant from school, and when the irate master raised his cane threateningly James bared his to a flood of tears.

"Please don't lick me, sir," he sob bed.

"And why should I not lick you, pray?" thundered the schoolmaster.

"Wy, sir, 'cos I think I've 'ad enough!" gasped James. "Yesterday the boy as I played truant with and I fell out and he licked me, and a man threw stones at cought me and licked me, the driver of a cart we hung on to licked me, the owner of a cat we chased licked me. Then when I got home mother licked me, and after that father licked me, and then mother licked me again for calling her a monk for telling father."

"Well," responded the master grimly, "by this time one licking more or less won't make much difference, and it seems hard I shouldn't have my whack. Come here, sir!"—London Answers.

Remnants of a College Course.

Prosecuting Attorney (examining a prospective juror)—Do you know anything about chemistry?

"I studied it at school."

"Do you think you remember enough of it to make you a competent juror in a poison case?"

"I'm not sure."

"Do you remember any of the formulas?"

"Let me see—two."

"Only two?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are they in a poem?"

(Blushing) "Yes, sir."

"Is this the poem?

"Our Willie boy is dead and gone.
We never shall see him more.
What Willie thought was H2O
Was H2SO."

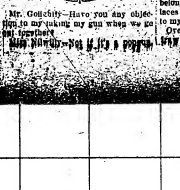
(Blushing furiously) "Yes, sir."

"I thought so. You are excused."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Want Back on His Authority.

Leslie Stephen's single meeting with Freeman, the historian, was in the nature of a collision. "I came in contact with him only once," he said. "He wrote a life of Alfred for the Dictionary of National Biography under my editorship, but declined to do more because we had a difference of opinion as to whether Athelstane should be spelled with an 'A.' That was, I contended, the form to which I was originally indifferent, but I had taken competent advice, and my system (I forget what it was) had been elsewhere sanctioned by the great historian Stubbs. Now, as Freeman was never tired of asserting the infallibility of Stubbs, I innocently thought that I might take refuge behind so eminent an authority. The result was that for once Freeman blasphemed Stubbs and refused to cooperate any longer in an unscholastic enterprise."

Three Men.



When H. H. Rogers was in the prime of his power, says a New York writer, he formed a "friendship partnership" with Mark Twain and Thomas Brackett Reed and took personal charge of their affairs, looking after them as he would a couple of children. It was great fun for all three, and especially Rogers. Neither Clemens nor Reed had any sense for business. The big ex-speaker came to New York a poor man. Ten years later he died suddenly, and his estate amayed over $500,000.

He probably had no idea what he was worth at any stage. Rogers made as much of more money for Clemens.

THE MANTILLA.

A Spanish Woman Answers the Question, "Why Do You Wear It?"

A little later as I strolled among a group of silhouettes I ventured to ask a woman of the people over whose head and shoulders was also thrown a mantilla why all Spanish women, to whatever class they belonged, wore this national headwear. If it may be called that.

The woman was sitting in the open air, and I saw blinking that a large straw hat would have protected her better from the burning rays of the sun and been quite as picturesque. She replied to that drooling, watermelon typical of the Spanish: "Well, I happened to have often thought of this, and I think the reason why we all wear the mantilla is because we Spanish women are most careful about our hair. We think the chief charms of a woman are her eyes and her hair. And, as you may see, we all have splendid, thick, lustrous hair, and we are supposed to have, many of us, fascinating eyes. Now, why should we hide our elaborately arranged hair under a hat and coop our eyes in the shade cast by the brim of a hat?"

No doubt this woman was right. Parisian elegance to the Spanish women of the upper classes may have its attractions, but they, as their less fortunate competitors, all agree that beautiful hair and expressive eyes are more important. * * * And both of these may be cultivated.—London Mail.

THE FIRST WINDMILLS.

Could's Work Only When the Wind Blew From a Certain Point.

Windmills are said to have been introduced into England by the Knights of St John who observed them in use among the Saracens in the Crusades, but how long they had been in existence before this it is not possible to ascertain. A water mill was built in Saltcoats in the year 718, for we find chronicler mentions it, going on to say that "before that time all the mills in Ephesus were windmills set upon the summit of hills."

For hundreds of years windmills were among the most important objects of industry, yet they hardly changed from the rude and primitive design of earliest days. They were fixed in one position, and so could only be worked when the wind blew from a certain quarter, while the four sails boasted no slats or checking apparatus of any kind which must have been most inconvenient at times.

The first idea of arranging a sail so that it could be worked "windy" when wind did blow was that of fastening an ordinary mill in the middle of a pond by means of ropes which the wind shifted the ropes were loosened and the mill dragged around until the sails were caught by the wind, and it was then again tethered as before.

Later on a great post, which was worked on the pride of a lumber, was affixed to the mill. Not an il 1500 did Holland the land of windmills introduce a movable dome carrying the sail axle. The dome ran on rollers and was shifted straight by means of the pole mentioned above. These ancient mills were often of massive build, being made of brick or stone, and later entirely of wood.—London Globe.

Queer, but the man who does good credit is the one who can most easily get it.—Portland Express.

Hair Monstrosities.

French theater managers in the eighteenth century had worse evil than picture hats to contend with. Marie Antoinette, who was short even, according to French standards, set the fashion of high coiffures, and other fashionable women prided themselves on measuring four feet from chin to the tops of their heads. These structures took about six hours to erect, the hairdresser mounting a ladder in the process. Some coiffures were almost as broad as they were long, with wings sticking out nine inches on each side of the head. For the "frigate" coiffure the hair was rippled in a huge pile to represent the waves of an angry sea and surmounted by a fully rigged ship. As a consequence of these monstrosities disturbances in theaters occurred almost daily until an ordinance was issued against the admission of women with high coiffures to the floor of the house.—Chicago News.

Yet He Meant Well.

Just as the train was leaving the Fifty-eighth street elevated station a man who had got off there hurried along the platform and spoke to a passenger sitting by an open window in the smoking car.

"Quick," he cried. "Please hand me that package. I left it on the seat when I got out just now."

"Sure," said the passenger, picking up the bundle and tossing it out of the window.

"Thanks!"

"Hey, there! What are you doing that for?" demanded the wrathful red faced man sitting next to him.

"Why, he"—

"You dumbe-dyed idiot, that package belonged to me! It was full of laces and ribbons I was taking home to my wife!"

Over the scrap that followed we will draw a veil.—Chicago Tribune.

A Brand from the Burning

True Story of the Secret Service

By COL. H. C. WHITLEY, Former Chief United States Secret Service

GEORGE Sheldon was an honest and industrious young man. Ingenioua and possessed of a good education; ha had acquired high excellance in the practise of the engraver's art.

Ie ibe winter of 1869 and '70 he was employed to do government plate work by a large bank note engraving coepany in the city of New York. Although conservative in many things, he was foed of display in dress and the enjoyment of high livieg. He took his dinners at a fashionahie uptown restaurant. In the course of time he noticed thet a seat on the opposite side of the table at which he usually dined was regularly occupied by a genteel appearing middle-aged man.

One day when there chanced to be no other persons sitting near, the stranger remarked that they ought to become bettor acquainted with each other. He then led tha conversation in a menner to draw from Sheldon his name end busieess. When he learned that he was an engraver in the employ of a beek note company, he affected great surprise.

"An engraver? Iedeed. Well, I am glad to know it. I want some work done in that line, but I was not certain where to apply. I am very particular about it, and would be willing to pay well for a good job."

"What is the subject?" Sheldon inquired.

"This," said the stranger, as he handed out the photograph of a pretty female face. "If it was nicely dona what would it cost?"

"That depends on tha fineness of the work. Anywhere from $50 to $200."

"The price is not so much an object with me es the quality of the work. I will pay liberally for a good job."

One hundred and seventy-five dollars wes the sum finally agreed upon. When the eegraving was completed and delivered the employer was so well pleased that he said he understood the price to be $200, and insisted on payieg that amount. Sheldon was afterwards supplied with a number of small jobs from the same source and was liberally paid for his work.

One dey his petron suddenly broke out with the exclamation: "You are an excellant workman, and I am greatly surprised to see a man of your skill with the gravar plodding along in this way when yon could easily make your fortune in a short time if you were so disposed."

"How could it be dona?"

"By making plates for bonds and money. You engrave the pletes for certeiu persons. They pay you big money. You have nothing to do with the use thsy are put to."

This man who was adroitly tempting young Sheldon was the procurer, or to be more explicit, the capitalist of one of the most dangerons gangs of counterfeiters ever organized in this country. To Sheldon he was Mr. Devoe, but this was only one of the many names by which he was known to the differant persons employed by him. He was the autocrat of all the counterfeiters and forgers of his day, and one of the few criminals that escaped physical punishment for their meny misdeeds. He was discovered by the officers in the latter days of his life end it was a close race between them and the devil. The latter won. Devoe was a gifted manipulator of men, aed he was successful in crazing young Sheldon's mind with visions of great riches. Sheldon quit the employ of tha bank note company, and followieg Devoe's advice took lodgings at a house where the people were not inquisitive in regard to his business.

In the summer of 1871 a counterfeit $10 treasnry note made its appearance in most of the great citias of the country. To the untrainad eye the nots was a good fac-simile of the genuine. The lettering, the seal, the vignette aed everything abont it, except the eccentric lathe work, were quite perfect, but it was not difficult to discovar by the use of a magnifying glass that the fine lattice lines were irregular. In tho genuine thesa linas are made by machinery so perfect that it is impossible to imitate tham by hand. A counterfeit note even to the practised eye may appear all right at a casual glance, but its base nature can be readily discovered by a careful examieation of its eccentric lathe work.

The note of which I speak was an excellent imitation, but it was early discovered and its circulation checked. At this time the branch office of tha government secret service of New York was being almost daily visited by persons offering information in regard to the various crimes against the government. There were many secrets, suspicions and surmises offared for sale at prices ranging from one hundred to a million dollars. Tha greater part of the informers were anxious to conceal their identity.

On one particular occasion my office was visited by a genteel appearing young [illegible]. She came into the main office [illegible] a private interview with [illegible]. She was carefully veiled and cautious in her manner. Her interview with me appeared to be more for the purpose of obtaining information than giving it. In the course of her conversation she inquired as to the disposition of persons arrested for counterfeiting and the results of confessions, etc. She hinted of a counterfeiting scheme, but she either did not know or was unwilling to give any definite information. I finally drew from her that sha might be able to find out something that would be of service to the government. The conclusion I came to was that some of her family were in some way connected with counterfeiting and that she was seeking a way to check their operations and at tha same time save them from punishment. I questioned her carefully but was unable to gather sufficient information to lead to anything tangible. I thought there was something worth looking after, bnt did not know just how to get at it. When she left my office she was followed by a detectiva, but the officer was unabia to shadow her without giving himself away, as she repeatedly turned around and looked about as though she suspected she was being followed, and the detective finally lost sight of her.

Some weeks after this I received an enonymous note couched in somawhat singular terms. It was in a fine female hand and read as follows:

"To the Chief of the Govt. Secret Service, 56 Bleeker St.

Believing that confidential communications mey be addressed to you withont fear of exposure, I have determined to give you information that I am sure will be valuable. This brief nota may form an important leaf in the history of a life begun in the lovelight of a fond home and endearing associations to end in a felon's cell, possibly in a felon's grava. To demonstrate the truth of what I say, go to No. —— —— St., and examine for yourself."

It was a housa that had long been considered undesirable, and located upon a fashionable street, that was thus bronght to my attention. It was only a weak suspicion, but yet I thonght it sufficiently pointed to warrant an investigation. It was soon learned that this honse was occnpied by an elderly gentiaman, apparently a Russian or German, a tall young man of twenty-fiva or thereabouts, and a rather comely appearing young woman. In their coming and going they appeared mnch like other peopls. This particular house, however, had long been pointed out and stared at because of a great crime that had once been committed within its walls.

The Rhetschlags, as they were known, were a very secluded family. No one seemed to know where they came from or by what means they earned their livelihood. It was rare that any person had been seen to enter their door during the day time. While the detectives were on watch a young man of prepossessing appearance called at the house on two occasions in the evening, remaining a short time. When he left ha carried a small bundle. It was also learned from the peopla on the other side of the wall that strange noises had been heard late at night. There was a clicking and jarring sound as of some one pounding upon tha floor with a heavy instrnment. The neighbors thought there might be something wrong, and that was all the thought they gave to the matter. Each night a bright light was seen gleaming from an npper window, and the shadows of persons moving to and fro were cast upon the closely-drawn window shade. The detective had slipped up to the front door and put his ear to the keyhole. He heard the clicking and was positive that it was a printing press in operation. For a time I was undetermined just what course to pursue. I finally concluded to employ a ruse to get into the house and learn whet was going on. An excuse that was thought to be better than no excuse at all was invented to be offered in case of failure. It wes known thet the doors of tha honse were kept securely fastened and that any person ringing the door bell would be sighted and refused admittance.

The plan to overcome this difficulty was simple but affective. It was about the middle of the day when a light spring wagon containing a trunk was backed up to the front door of the Rhetschieg house. Two men dressed as laborers took tha trunk out of the wagon and carried it up the steps close to the door. The bell was rung. Soon there was an eye at the peephole. The person thinking that the expressman had made a mistake in the honse threw open the door to explain. The trunk wes quickly thrust across the threshold and the two expressmen sprang into the hall. Two other detectives thet had been hovering neer were also admitted. Almost at the first glance I discovered that the young woman tending the door was the one that had called at the secret service office and vaguely hinted of a great counterfeiting schema. I think the recognition was mutual. Sha bowed slightly in a half welcoming way as she placed her hand upon the stair rail. An elderly man at this moment stepped into the hall from a side room. He had probebly been taking a nap from which he was suddenly roused. I caught a glimpse of a piece of paper as he swiftly put it in his mouth. Springing forward I seized him by the throat. The young woman came to my assistance. She put her hand to the old man's lips and said: "Spei es aus, vater! Spei es aus, vater!"

He yielded and she handed me a bit of closely folded paper. On it was written: "I will bring the back at nine this evening.—Sheldon."

The old man was placed in charge of one of the officers. The young woman now accompanied us upstairs and led us to a door that was locked. The key was turned from the inside. An entrance was demanded, but there was no response. Deliberating a few moments, the officers rushed against the door and burst it open. We found a young man in the room. There was a printing press, a quantity of printar's ink, a long table, a couple of chairs and a stova. Bnt there was not a scrap of paper in sight, nor anything to show that counterfeiting was being carried on. Thera was plenty of snspicion, but we were unable to find evidence to warrant a conviction. One of the detectives chanced to put his hand on the stova. It was hot. On looking inside we discovered that a considerable amount of paper had been recently burned. A systematic search of tha premises was now began. Every nook end corner of the house was examined. We tore up the carpat and pried up tha weak placas in the floor. Evary piece of furnitura and every rag of clothes was searched. Tha detectivos crawled under tha roof and on top of it. They looked down the chimneys. Nothing of an incriminating nature was found.

The old man wouldn't talk. He shut his mouth tightly and shook his head to every question asked, and the young man was dumb as an oyster. Whila the woman did not appear to be anxious to conceal anything from us, she said she was quite unable to render any further assistance. We were about to give up in despair and leave the house when one of the detectives, more suspicious and hopeful than any of the others, remarked: "There is only one place left. Let us try that hanging lamp."

Taking it down, we unscrewed the top. Here to our great relief we fonnd several thousand dollars in counterfeit $10 bills. They were newly printed. The old man now broke down and the woman began to cry. She said she hed been working under orders from her father, but knew little of what was going on. She was sura that counterfeit money was being made there; but she did not know whet was done with it. She was elso awere that her lover wes mixed up in the echeme. She was between the devil and the deep sea and wes at a lose what coursa to take, but hed finelly concluded to become an informer.

I was setisfied I had obtained the bottom facte so far as the woman was concerned and that Sheldon, who was expected there thet evening, would bring the beck of the counterfeit. The fether and hrother hed heen doing the printing. If the old man now told me the truth, they hed never been engaged in selling or pessing the bogus stuff. They were not trusted with both of the counterfeit $10 pletee et the seme time. When the fece of the note was finished the pleta for printing the back was brought and the fece plata taken away. Sheldon wae the man that brought the platee and took away the countarfeits. The yonng woman had assisted in theee operations to a certain axtent, but ehe hed been doing this under pressura. She had now informed the officers and chanced tha result.

The door bell wes rung promptly at nine o'clock and Sheldon was admitted. When he was confronted with tha situation, he wilted end staggered to a seet. His every faculty seemed peralyzed with hlank despair. The woman threw her arms about him and pleaded with him to tell the truth. He now becama greatly excited and declared in a trembling voice that he would make a clean breest of the whole effair and take what wae coming to him. I listened to the recital of his etory. It was the counterpert of the others. He hoped for waalth and a life of eese. It wes an unhealthy longing, but the opportunity was so plausibly presented to him by the oily-tongued Devoe that ha secrificed his manhood end yielded to the tempter. Once within the hypnotic influence of this great procurer he was compelled to do his bidding. Now that he knew the worst he felt relieved. With a curl of hie lip and a sudden elevation of his heed his eyee met mine as he gave me his promise to surrender the counterfeit plates and to aid the government by every meens within hie power.

All clesses of confederated criminals fear the squeeler more than they do the detectivee. In fact, it would be quita impossible to destroy a well-organized gang of counterfeiters without using one man against tha other. For this reason I never hesitated whila chief of tha government secret eervice to act upon my own judgment. We arrested the counterfeiters without process of law, and used them to the beet possible edvantage to the government. The recorde of the secret service of the treasury department, will, if exemined, show that the system of using one counterfeiter egainst another was successful. When a confederata who has for years been associated with others in crime, is mede to confese and assist tha government, he is more dreaded by his associatee than any other force that can be employed.

Counterfeiting combines the worst features of freud interwoven with the most cunningly devised modes of escape. The confederate is batter booked and more fully equipped to undertake the unearthing of a gang of counterfeitere than the best trained detectiva.

I mention these facts that the reeder mey better understand the object I had in view in this case as in most othere. Young Rhetschlag plead guilty and was sentenced to the penitentiary. His father wae old and feeble. Upon his promise that he would never again engega in counterfeiting, I paroled him. The young woman had rendered good eervice and I did not attempt to hold her or to nse her as a witness. Sheldon meda important discloeures that enabled ma to arreet several dangerous counterfeitere. He was weak and easily persuaded, but after using him on the witnees stand against his confederates I did not think him dangerous to go at large. The bank note company was only too glad to employ him notwithstanding tha fact he had been engaged in counterfeiting. Besides, Miss Rhetschlag, who had been so prominent in assisting in bringing young Sheldon upon the stool of repentance, and putting him in a way to redeem himeelf, was anxious to marry him. The consummation of this I made as one of the conditions of his release. It might have been a littia out of order, but it turned out all right. A wedding soon followed.

I some time afterward received from Mr. Boutwell, the eecretary of the treasury, a letter saying that he had been informed that a certain engraving-company doing government work, had in its amploy a dangeroua counterfeiter named Shaldon, and suggested that I attend to this mattar at once. In raply to the secratary's letter I gave him a detailed account of the captura and releasa of Shaldon, together with my reasons for the sama. My coursa mat tha secratary's approval, in fact I was commended for it. So far as I know Sheldon has since led an honest life. If he has ever violated the pledge he gave me I have not heard of it.

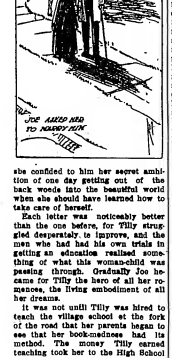
Her Cousin Joe

By LOUISE HENDERSON

It all began for Tilly the day her father came home from the village with a box and a letter for her. The box held books, even volumes mostly, the overflow from Joe Mackintosh's library, and the letter told how he had happened to send them to Tilly.

Joe Mackintosh was first cousin to Tilly's father, though considerably younger and a promising lawyer in the city. Once when Tilly was a little thing of 5 he had come up into the hills with a companion for two days' fishing and had lodged at the poor cabin in the clearing. Tilly remembered him. And it seemed he remembered her, for he had sent her the books.

Tilly's mother was a stout, elatterly woman and her father a hardworking man who for all his hard work seemed not to accomplish anything. Neither of them knew more of the world's affairs than did the woodchucks that whistled on a sunny afternoon in the high, slanting pasture.



"I wish the land that can't keep his readin' trade to home. The young ens won't be worth her salt to help with the chores till she gets 'em all read through," grumbled the mother.

Tilly did not stop with reading them through: she read them again and again. she studied and pondered them, for there was much she did not understand. Through them she came to feel that she had a friend in their giver of whom she must never lose sight.

Joe's letter had been brief and simple. It bade her tell him whether the box had arrived safely and how she liked its contents.

Tilly spent happy hours in writing a reply and received an answer to her first little letter of thanks and gratitude—a generous epistle which pointed out to her many things about her books which otherwise might have escaped her.

That was the way in which their long correspondence started. Tilly saw that here was someone who could understand, who cared for the same things she did. She poured out to Joe her aspirations and hopes and impressions; she asked him how she should speak and act and dress; and she confided to him her secret ambition of one day getting out of the back woods into the beautiful world when she should have learned how to take care of herself.

Each letter was noticeably better than the one before, for Tilly struggled desperately to improve, and the men who had had his own trials in getting an education realised something of what this womanchild was pessing through. Gradually Joe became for Tilly the hero of all her romances, the flying embodiment of her dreams.

It was not until Tilly was hired to teach the village school at the forks of the road that her parents began to see that her bookcraziness had its method. The money Tilly earned teaching took her to the High School in the village at the foot of the hills, where she made astonishing progress and won the approval of her instructors. Joe wrote regularly. He sent no gifts of books and trinkets dear to a girlish heart. In many other ways he helped her, for he was beginning to be a man of influence.

When she graduated he sent her in a wonderful box under layers of fine white tissue paper an exquisite embroidered robe ready to be made up with gloves, shoes, silk stockings and a fan—an outfit which the daintiest girl of his acquaintance would have been glad to possess. And Tilly was glad, for she had been troubled to know where her frock was coming from.

The letter of gratitude she sent her cousin Joe only feebly expressed her perfect joy. If only he could come to see her wear the dress on that one greatest day of her life! But Joe could not come, for that day he had his famous cause to try.

That fall Tilly began to teach in the High School where she had prepared for college. In the years that had passed since that eventful day when Joe's books came to her there in the backwoods, many changes had come—her mother had died and her father had married again a widow with a better farm than his own, which he and the youngest boy were working. The two other boys had gone west.

Tilly never went home now. The space between her and her father and brothers had widened imperceptibly until neither she nor they cared to cross it. As they had withdrawn, Joe had come nearer, until now it seemed he filled her life and her heart. She longed to see him; the picture she had of him told her little.

One dull March afternoon, after a hard session in the class-room, Tilly came home to her boarding place to find a letter from Joe awaiting her. As she took it up she felt the usual little thrill of pleasure and interest. She began to read expectantly, then all at once something seemed to go wrong with her heart. Slowly she turned to the bed and sat down upon it and hid her face in the pillows. But she could not cry, though she thought her heart was broken. And she had written to say that at last he was going to be married.

"The most beautiful girl, Tilly—a butterfly, an orchid, what you will of such rare delicacy and brightness that I tremble at my temerity in daring to possess her. We shall be married this late fall and I want you to come to the wedding."

She lived through it. Tilly was not without admirers—any one of whom she might have done well to marry. But she did not care for them, and had no intention of marrying just for a home. Some time, perhaps—but not now, not now.

Joe continued to write as formerly. Sometimes he spoke of being at a party or on some errand with his fiancee and Tilly tried to imagine it all, with a brave attempt at equanimity.

That fall Tilly was called to a city school at an increase of salary. It was Joe still helping her, and she knew it. She wondered whether she were strong enough to go where she must occasionally see him. And then the longing to see him, to be near him, overcame every objection.

"I shall be there in plenty of time for his wedding," she thought.

She began teaching almost immediately after reaching the city. She had found a good boarding place near the school and felt that she was going to be very comfortable. She had written to Joe before coming, and she wondered why he had not come to see her, or at least write. He did write presently from a distant State, whither the interests of some client had taken him.

"I will see you first as soon as I return," he said, "but I can't tell exactly when that will be." He did not mention "the most beautiful girl."

Sit was on a Saturday evening a month later that Tilly was called down to the parlor to see a visitor. She was receiving a good many calls now from her new acquaintances, but somehow this summons seemed pregnant with meaning, as if Joe himself might be down there waiting for her. Hastily she changed her work dress for one of plain white linen. She made herself more slowly; she walked downstairs quietly. She would not lose control of herself. The instant she saw the man who was waiting for her she knew him, though she felt with a glad thrill that her idea of him had never done him justice. She went toward him, holding out her hand, quite collectedly.

"I'm so glad to see you, Cousin Joe," she said.

They sat down together and talked more like old friends than the strangers which in reality they were. After a while Tilly asked him about the "most beautiful girl."

"Oh," he said, "I really cannot say! She has, you know, ceased to be my own particular 'most beautiful girl.' She has—in fact, she jilted me because she found someone she liked better. I didn't blame her. Her selection of me was poor taste in the first place. As for me, I had reached the point where I must either neglect her or my profession. And I had worked too hard for my profession to neglect it at any time of life. So I am very well suited."

"I am sorry," Tilly said. She sat looking down at her hands and trying to think.

"Are you?" Joe said, smiling. "But I shall be. Never mind. Are you sure?"

"Still, I am sorry for you," Tilly persisted. "You must feel so disappointed."

"Oh, well!" he said. "When half-gods go—you know the rest!"

Tilly did. And then they began to talk about Emerson.

That winter went on wings for Tilly. Joe was very kind to her. He took her about a great deal and gained an entrance for her into the houses of many charming persons, who were delightfully kind to her.

One Saturday afternoon, just at the edge of the spring, as they chanced to be walking together, all of a sudden—so suddenly, in fact, that Tilly's breath was quite startled away—Joe asked her to marry him.

"You—you! I'm such a queer person for you to want to marry," gasped Tilly, her fresh young cheeks very red. "I'm only a backwoods girl, you know, Joe."

He smiled down into her eyes and she wondered if heaven would be dearer and sweeter than his eyes with that look in them.

"You're my girl, Tilly," he said, gently, "and that makes all the difference in the world."

MORPHINE RELIEVED PAIN—THE GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY RESTORES TO HEALTH

For the past few years I suffered greatly from what three physicians called neuralgia of the stomach. The doctors treated me without any success and I called in a fourth doctor, who pronounced my disease gall stones. I suffered intense pain and the only relief the doctor could give me was by injections of morphine. I was so completely discouraged that I had almost given up hope when a neighbor told me about Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. I decided to try it and began its use at once and after taking nine bottles was completely cured, not having a spell of sickness in over two years.

I have so much confidence in Swamp-Root that I never fail to recommend it to any one who may have kidney trouble of any kind. I feel certain that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root saved my life, and why should it not do likewise for others who take it in time?

You are at liberty to use this testimony at any time.

His Ruling Passion.

The young man welted for the millionaire's reply.

"I don't blame you for wanting to merry my daughter," said the letter. "And now how much do you love her you and she can worry along on?"

The youth brightened up.

"I don't think," he cheerfully stemmered, "that $200,000 well invested, would produce a sufficient income."

The millionaire turned back to his papers.

"Very well" he said, "I will give you $100,000, pfroviding you relies e similfer emount."

And the young men went away sorrowing.

Breaking It Gently.

Callehen was stopped on the street by Fether Clancy. The good priest's countenance took on e sad expression.

"What's this, I hear, Callehen," ostced he, "about your leaving Hogan's head last night? And the two of yfriends for years!"

Callahan seemed somewhat taken back. "Sure, I 'ws 'compelled' 'to' 'go' your rivrence," he stuttered apologetically, "but out of consideration for thet seme frindliness, I broke it gintly, your riverence."—Lippincott's.

A Young Philosopher.

Time is a relative quantity. Some minutes seem like hours, and some hours seem like minutes. How to control the flight is beyond our persons, but the little boy mentioned below seems to have progressed pretty well for e youngster.

The teacher was surprised to see that he received perfect marks on through recess, and accordingly asked him why he did not play.

"'Cause," he said, slowly, "it makes recess too quick if I play, and I want it to la-sat!"—Youth's Companion.

The more solitary, the more friendless, the more unsatisfied I am, the more I will respect and rely upon myself.—Charlotte Bronte.

Young Age Pensions.

Young age pensions! Why not? Titles, honors, riches, pensions and most other good things are, as a rule, postponed to a period of life when the capacity for enjoying them has been blunted. "Australia" was one of the first countries to adopt old-age pensions, and now a Labor member of the commonwealth parliament proposes a supplementary scheme of young-men pensions. He would start by pensioning the fourth child at birth. The fact that three had previously been born showed that the parents were doing their duty and deserving well of the state. The youngest pension would "reward" industry and encourage the birth rate."—London Chronicle.

The Patient Townsmen.

"So you got to work in spite of the snow drifts?"

"Yes. But I don't see why the city folks should not follow the example of country people and put up a strong kick for good roads."

The Kind.

"I think that chauffeur had great nerve to make love to his employer's daughter."

"He he had—motor nerve."

Splendid Crops
in Saskatchewan (Western Canada)

800 Bushels from 20 acres of wheat was the harvest returned from a Lloydminster farm in the season of 1910. Many fields in that and all other districts yielded 30 to 50 bushels of wheat to the acre. Other grains in proportion.

LARGE PROFITS

in the choicest districts, can still be secured free by settlers in person. Entry must be made at the local land office for the district. Application may be made at any time after the settler has obtained entry for his homestead, but before he can secure patent he must perform the settlement duties required by the Dominion Land Act. These duties are: Residence upon the land entered for, or upon other land owned by the settler in the vicinity of the homestead, for three years from date of entry, except in certain cases. Cultivation of fifty acres of the homestead or substitutes accepted in certain districts. Erection of a habitable house in which the settler must reside.

Pre-emptions, at $3 per acre, are obtainable in many districts adjacent to homesteads. Duties: Residence for six months in each of three years, cultivation of fifty acres and erection of house worth $300.

Purchased homesteads, in certain districts, may be obtained at $3 per acre after fulfilling conditions as to residence and cultivation required in case of homestead entry.

Specially attractive openings for stock raising are offered in districts where the grazing leases have been cancelled.

Mixed farming is the most profitable occupation to follow in Saskatchewan. Wheat growing is the principal industry, but dairying, cattle raising, sheep raising, hog raising, poultry raising, bee keeping, etc., are all profitable.

Coal is found in many districts at a depth of from 2 to 6 feet from the surface. Wood for fuel is plentiful and cheap.

Good water is found in all districts at a depth of from 20 to 100 feet.

Schools are established in all districts as soon as the settlement is sufficiently large to warrant the formation of a school district.

Churches are found in all the settled districts.

Railways are being built in all directions, thus affording settlers excellent facilities for marketing their products.

Full information as to location of lands, routes, settlement duties, etc., may be obtained from any Canadian Government Agent.

GOT HIS SOBRIQUET EARLY

"Honest John" Kelly Proved His Right to the Title Long Before Manhood.

There have been many stories about the manner in which "Honest John" Kelly, the ex-mpire, first got his nickname. Mr. Kelly himself, according to a New York letter, holds that it came to him naturally, for even as a small boy the purity of his soul shone through his face. "I think the first time I was ever called 'Honest John' was when I was quite a youngster," said Kelly. "A man engaged as an embulatory salesmin of tinwere observed the ingenuous countenance I presented to the world and hailed me. 'You look honest, boy,' sold he. 'What might your name be?' 'John,' sedd I, quite simply. 'John'—just like thet. 'Then take my hores while I go in the saloon and get a drink,' sed he. And so I held the horse while he went into the saloon and got a drink. But thfs wee on lower Ninth avenue, in a day when the evene's honore went to men who could clean the most cope in e given time. By and by the gang came along and beheld thet wagon full of tinwere. The peddler wee detained within by e sore thrst, and they took the tinware. And then they came heck and took the cash ions off the wagon. Eventually, becoming tired ofering, they returned the wngon and took it owey. True to my trust, I stood there, holding the horse. And by and by the peddler came out of the saloon and stood up the situation. 'Well,' sedd he warmly, 'you're Honest John, all right. You seved the horse.'"

Now About Clean Food

Another Splendid Opportunity to Bring Out Facts

When the "Weekly" which sued us for libel (because we publicly denounced them for an editorial attack on our claims) was shopping for some "weak spot," they thought best to send a N. Y. Atty. to Battle Creek, summoned 25 of our workmen and took their sworn statements before a Commissioner.

Did we object? No. On the contrary, we helped all we could, for the opportunity was too good to be lost.

Geo. Haines testified he inspected the wheat and barley, also floors and every part of the factories to know things were as claimed. That every 30 minutes a sample of the products was taken and inspected to keep the food up to standard and bring out any impurities, also that it is the duty of every man in the factories to see that anything not right is immediately reported. Has been with the Co. 10 years.

Edward Young testified had been with Co. 15 years. Inspector, he and his men examined every sack and case of wheat and barley to see they were up to standard and rejected many cars.

H. E. Burt, Supt., testified has been with Co. over 12 years. Bought only the best grain obtainable. That the Co. kept a corps of men who do nothing but keep things clean, bright and polished.

Testified that no ingredient went into Grape-Nuts and Postum except those printed in the advertising. No possibility of any foreign things getting into the foods as most of the machinery is kept closed. Asked if the factory is open to the public, said "yes" and "it took from two to three guides constantly to show visitors through the works." Said some of the processes were carried on behind closed doors.

At this point attys. for the "Weekly" tried to show the water used was from some outside source. Testified the water came from Co.'s own artesian wells and was pure.

He testified the workmen were first-class, high-grade and inspected by the Co.'s physician to be sure they were all in proper physical condition; also testified that state reports showed that Co. pays better wages than the average and he thought higher than any in the state.

P. L. Martin, Asst. Supt., testified Grape-Nute made of wheat, barley, yeast and water. Anything else? "No, sir." Postum of wheat, Wheat Bran and New Orleans Molasses. Statements made on his experience of about 10 years with Co.

Testified bakers are required to wear fresh white suits, changed every other day. Said had never known any of the products being sent out that were below the high standard of inspection. Asked if any one connected with the Postum Co. had instructed him how to testify. Said, "No, sir."

Horace Brown testified has been with Co. 9 years. Worked in Grape-Nuts packe shed. Testified the whole of the flour is composed of Wheat and Barley. Attys. tried to confuse him, but he insisted that any casual visitor could see that nothing else went into the flour. Said machinery and floors always kept clean.

So these men were examined by the "Weekly" lawyers hoping to find at least one who would say that some under-grade grain was put in or some unclean condition was found somewhere.

But it was no use.

Each and every man testified to the purity and cleanliness.

As a sample, take the testimony of Luther W. Mayo.

Testified been with Company about 10 years. Now working in the bakery department making Grape-Nuts. Testified that the ovens and floors are kept clean and the raw products as they go in are kept clean. Also that the wearing apparel of the employes has to be changed three times a week.

Q. Do you use Postum or Grape-Nuts yourself at all?

A. Yes, I use them at home.

Q. If from your knowledge of the factory which you have gained in your ten years at the factory you believed that there were dirty or impure in any way, would you use them?

A. I do not think I would. No.

Asked if any one on behalf of the Company had asked him to testify in any particular manner. Stated "No."

All these sworn depositions were carefully excluded from the testimony at the trial, for they wouldn't sound well for the "Weekly."

Think of the fact that every man sworn to in the purity of the products sold in America for the "Weekly" was forced to say in open court that the food was pure and good.

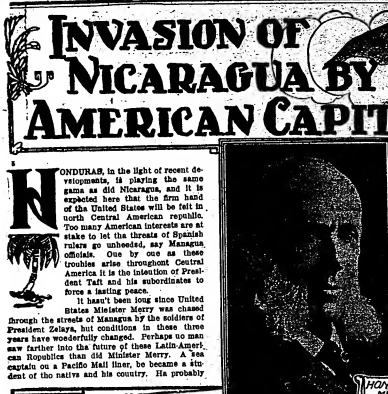
What a disappointment for the "Weekly!"

But the testimony showed:

All of the grain used in Grape-Nuts, Postum and Post Toasties is the highest standard possible to obtain.

All parts of the factory are kept scrupulously clean.

None of the workmen but been told how to testify.



Most of them have been from 10 to 15 years with the Co. and use the products on their tables at home.

Why do their families use the products, Grape-Nuts, Postum and Post Toasties, that they, themselves, make?

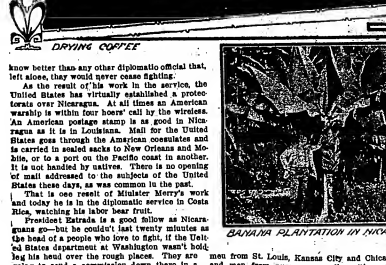
INVASION OF NICARAGUA BY AMERICAN CAPITALISTS

AMERICAN LEGEION AT MANAGUA, NICARAGUA

HONDURAS, in the light of recent developments, is playing the same game as did Nicaragua, and it is expected here that the firm hand of the United States will be felt in north Central American republic. Too many American interests are at stake to let the threats of Spanish rulers go unheeded, say Managua officials. One by one as these troubles arise throughout Central America it is the intention of President Taft and his subordinates to force a lasting peace.

It hasn't been long since United States Minister Merry was chased through the streets of Managua by the soldiers of President Zelaya, but conditions in these three years have wonderfully changed. Perhaps no man saw farther into the future of these Latin-American Republics than did Minister Merry. A sea captain on a Pacific Mail liner, he became a student of the native and his country. He probably knew better than any other diplomatic official that, left alone, they would never cease fighting.

As the result of his work in the service, the United States has virtually established a protectorate over Nicaragua. At all times an American warship is within four hours' call by the wireless. An American postage stamp is as good in Nicaragua as it is in Louisiana. Mail for the United States goes through the American consulates and is carried in sealed sacks to New Orleans and Mobile, or to a port on the Pacific coast in another. It is not handled by natives. There is no opening of mail addressed to the subjects of the United States these days, as was common in the past.



That is one result of Minister Merry's work and long he is to be in the diplomatic service in Costa Rica, watching his labor bear fruit.

President Estrada is a good fellow as Nicaraguans go—but he couldn't last twenty minutes as the head of a people who love to fight, if the United States department at Washington wasn't holding his hand over the rough places. They are going to send a commission down there in a short time to straighten out affairs and conduct the first honest election the country ever had. Then J. P. Morgan & Co. will handle the refunding of the $20,000,000 bonded debt. By that time the United States will be well in charge, probably with Consul Moffat as minister and real head of the government.

Just as rapidly as possible Nicaragua is being made a good place in which to live. American capitalists and investors are crowding into the country with rapidity. Now that the days of the revolution are ended—the machete made an implement of agriculture instead of war—the future of the little republic looms bright. Mines are being developed, forests cleared, lumber mills and homes built. Men from the north and middle western states are causing the hustle. There are business men from St. Louis, Kansas City and Chicago and men from numerous smaller cities who are interested financially in agriculture and mining work in Nicaragua. Many are already realizing on their investments.

DRYING COFFEE

BANANA PLANTATION IN NICARAGUA

Along the Rio Grande river there is a wide stretch of territory covered with bamboo, some of which is planted in bananas. Shipments of bananas were taken out of that section for the first time a few weeks ago by the Pan-American company, a Kansas City and St. Louis concern. There are half a dozen small companies beginning operations and within six months fully 200,000 or 300,000 acres of banana will have been planted along that river, which is said to be the best for the culture of this particular fruit of any in the republic. The bananas—about 2,000 bunches—shipped lately were the finest taken into the port of New Orleans.

In the northern part of the country, while believed to be pushed, is not bringing in a money return of fruit. Many men, however, have struck it rich in the mining region. A Canadian by the name of McGinnis, located several times over a million dollars. Joe La Pere, a French Canadian, discovered the Bonanza mine from which millions in gold have been taken. The Pearl mining company is another paying venture, with the mining is the better of transportation.

While the earnings of the various mines have proven satisfactory yet it is in the banana business that the American experts prove amazing; they show payment for land, cost of clearing, planting and harvesting at the end of the second year and an additional profit of 60 per cent on the investment. They are indeed startling, but the men who make them point to the United Fruit company, having started business on a shoestring, so to speak, a few years ago, and being worth a few dozen millions today.

They have tried rubber and made a failure, cocoanut plantations bring forth fruit slowly, pineapples grow large, as do grape fruit and oranges, but they ripen so quickly and the import duty is so heavy that exportation under present conditions is hardly to be considered. Rice does fairly well, while coffee on the west coast reaches a high grade of perfection. The coffee, diplomatic and other officials assert, is the finest in the world.

The chief trouble on the east coast is flooding; a hillside level enough to stand on and cultivate the product.

The labor question in Nicaragua has the servant girl issue in the United States beaten a hundred mile. One man will tell you he has no trouble in getting labor. If he means real work there is plenty to be done, but from the standpoint of the employer, the task is no easy one. Money means nothing to the average native. One plantation manager told a correspondent he had 60 men working for him and that he transacted business on 500 rubber-monkey money, they call it—a year. This plantation conducted a store, as do the majority. The men are paid in the national currency, which just as steadily comes back into the store. Paying off labor in Nicaragua is much like taking a dollar from one pocket and putting it into another. That's all right, so far as it goes, but when the laborer—generally an Indian or a Jamaican—thinks he has too much to do he quits. He can live without work, and works merely to please his employer. The foreman who can get the good will of the Indian is the valuable man. The superintendent at a coffee plantation has been trying to get 200 men to work for the last two years. At one time he had 130—and he is a man the nerviest like, too.

The manager of a big hehene plantation is having the same trouble. A month or two is frequently spent getting half a hundred men together. Indians stay close to their villages and the hope of the planter is the building of these conglomerations of huts. Give the workers a hamboo covered, shed in which to live, build them a church of the same material and secure for them a preacher, even though their morals seem lax, and the natives will probably spend their lives on the plantation—working when they feel so inclined. Now and then they want to wander away and get all the bad whiskey they can buy, but they return in time to again take up the machete. Good treatment appears to be the only secret of success by any secret of getting labor in Nicaragua.

COUNTRY OF CONTINUAL UNREST

The beginnings of the troubles that wreck Nicaragua at frequent intervals lie back to its discovery by Columbus. A small remnant of Indians has recently been found living on an island near Bluefields, speaking the language of the Aztecs and having traditions of ruling in splendid cities over the subject tribes of the coast.

These cities, of which great ruins remain, at once attracted the Spaniards to the interior, so that from Panama to Yucatan not a important Spanish settlement was formed on the Caribbean coast, and thus the coast tribes, freed from Aztec domination, remained almost unknown to the Spaniards, having no property worth looting.

Loot was plenty among the buccaneers, but fresh food and women they lacked. These the Indians supplied. Commercial relations soon grew up, which speedily developed into an alliance against the Spaniards, by means of which the Indians maintained their independence, until their chief was carried, in 1688, with great pomp, to Jamaica, where he surrendered his authority to the duke of Albemarle, and was then crowned and received back his insignia as a vassal king, under a British protectorate, of all the coast from Chiriqui lagoon to Yucatan, along what is known as the Mosquito coast.

Subject to occasional clashes with the Spaniards, pirates went on thus for a century, each successive Mosquito king going to Jamaica to invest and to do homage. Finally, after the peace of Paris, England appointed a resident as protectorate over all of the Mosquito coast, except for the part of the coast claimed by Honduras, while to Nicaragua she agreed to surrender her protectorate and recognize the sovereignty of Nicaragua.

Nicaragua in turn, agreed to grant complete local self-government to the Mosquito Tribes, then of blood largely diluted with strains of white and Jamaica negro, and using English as their official language. Nicaragua also bound itself to make a free port of Greytown, at the mouth of the navigable river by which the great central lake of Nicaragua discharges into the Caribbean sea, and for ever to pay annually to the Mosquito Indians a subsidy of $5,000.

After 10 years less than half of the subsidy had been paid, while in violation of the treaty Nicaragua had imposed duties at Greytown under the pretext that they were to pay the subsidy, and had introduced a governor and a garrison at Bluefields, the Mosquito king's capital, and was otherwise vexing the inhabitants so as to force them to abandon the English language and their local self-government. Finally, after most insolent treatment of the British consul at Greytown, who had been appointed the Mosquito king's agent to receive the arrears, England sent a warship to Greytown. Nicaragua protested that, as the British protectorate had been withdrawn and Nicaragua's sovereignty recognized over the coast, it was none of England's business whether Nicaragua fulfilled the treaty stipulations in favor of the Indians. But the captain of the warship was not moved by this, and after much parley the entire matter was submitted to the arbitration of the emperor of Austria.

On two points the Nicaragua contentions were upheld, first, that the subsidy was of the nature of a gift, and therefore that interest should not be added to the arrears; and, second, that the vessels belonging to the Mosquito coast should hoist the Nicaraguan flag, though against Nicaragua's contention they were allowed to hoist their own alongside of it; but on every important point the decision was in favor of England.

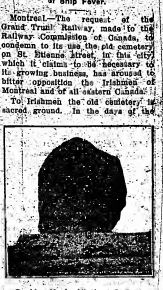
Under this decision settlers began to come in, especially from Canada and Jamaica, and business became quite brisk. Nicaragua filled in another attempt to induce the coast to vote in favor of full citizenship, and matters went on quietly till a few months after Zeleya's rise to the presidency, when, in January, 1894, a Nicaraguan army suddenly appeared at Bluefields, kidnaped and sent to the interior the chief justice and all the leading men of the coast, and in their absence ordered an election, with soldiers at every polling place, to determine finally the status of the coast.

In this election there could be only one result, and Nicaragua announced that the coast had accepted full citizenship in Nicaragua, and, therefore, British interference was at an end.

For ten years, in spite of occasional attempts at revolution, one nearly successful, matters went on fairly at Bluefields and Bullata's grew; but in 1904 there began systematic attempts to oppress this coast.

As a further vexation of foreigners, the Moravian missionaries and the Church of England rector at Bluefields, who, since the Catholic churches have been barred out of existence, are the only representatives of religion of any kind in all this region, have had their schools closed because tuition was in English.

WHERE FAMINE VICTIMS REST



Huge Boulder Marks the Graves of Irish Immigrants Who Perished of Ship Fever.

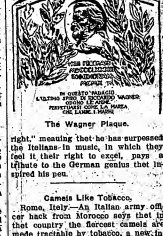
Montreal.—The request of the Grand Trunk Railway, made to the Railway Commission of Canada, to condemn to its use the old cemetery on St. Etienne street, in the city, which it claims is necessary to its growing business, has aroused to bitter opposition the Irishmen of Montreal and of all eastern Canada.

To Irishmen the old cemetery is sacred ground. In the days of the famine of 1847-48 in Ireland tens of thousands of Irishmen fled from their native land. Some entered the United States through the port of New York; thousands came to this city; some to enter the promised land, but many, thousands of them to die here of ship fever. In the old cemetery the remains of 6,000 of these famine victims are buried. Until 1859 no monument was erected to mark their resting places. Then a band of Irishmen employed in the construction of the Victoria bridge placed a huge boulder in the cemetery bearing this inscription:

"To preserve from desecration the remains of 6,000 immigrants, who died of ship fever, 1847-48, this stone is erected by the workmen of Messrs. Peto Brassey & Betts, employed in the construction of the Victoria bridge, 1859."

Irishmen here declare that the appropriation of the cemetery by the railroad would be an act of desecration and their attitude is sustained by members of the race all over Canada. Lawyers have been retained to oppose the railroad before the Railway Commission.

Boulder Marks Victims' Graves.



ARTS IN TRIBUTE TO WAGNER

Plaque to Be Placed on the Palace Wait in Venice Where the Great Master Lived.

Paris.—Colarin, the sculptor, has just finished in his studio in Paris, the plaque in marble of Richard Wagner, which is to be placed on the side well of the palace on the Grand canal in Venice, where the great master died and where his death occurred. Italy's most eminent poet, Gabriel D'Annunzio, wrote the dedication which is under the bust of Wagner. The literal translation is as follows:

In This Palace
The Last Breath of Richard Wagner
Is Heard to Expire
Perpetuate Itself Like the Tide
Which Lops the Marble.

Thus the poet who in his "Il Fuoco" speaks of Wagner as the "Tuston Who has stolen away the Italian birth right," meaning that he has surpassed the Italians in music, in which they feel it their right to excel, pays a tribute to the German genius that inspired his pen.

Camels Like Tobacco.

Rome, Italy.—An Italian army officer has found a scientific reason why it is that country the fiercest camels are made tractable by tobacco, a magician would say. When camel lies down and won't budge, a three-cornered piece of wood is placed in his mouth. At the outer end is a hole, and in this a cigar is stuck. As soon as the cigar is lit, Mr. Camel thus equipped begins to smoke as lamb, but only as long as he inhales the smoke. When the cigar is finished the camel becomes fierce again and must be bribed with another.

Ancient Custom in England

London.—By virtue of a custom so ancient that its origin is wholly forgotten, it will be a scholarly, but a high dignitary of the empire, who will first acclaim the new monarch when King George V. is crowned at Westminster abbey. The Westminster school is 350 years old, and for centuries the young captain of the school has been the first to cry "God save the king!" after the coronation ceremony. After him the peers repeat the cry, and then it is taken up by the entire congregation and the multitude outside.

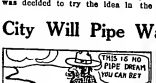
HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Chicago Is to Have a Bank for Women

CHICAGO.—Chicago is to have a bank by women for women on the proposition that it is the women who do most of the economizing and consequently have most of the money to deposit. The organizers of this banking idea is Mrs. Antoinette Funk.

While a bank owned and conducted by women is not an experiment, the pioneer of women's banks being in Joplin, Mo., it is an experiment in a large city. All similar institutions have been in comparatively small communities. The announcement that it is a women s bank for women is also somewhat of a innovation, as the other women's banks have sought business wherever it could be found, but in the Funk bank men's business will be tolerated if the depositors come well recommended.



The bank will be located at Edison Park, s suburb, during the experimental stage, but the real intention is to establish a downtown bank. Because of high rent and other expenses, it was decided to try the idea in the suburb under smaller expense and invade the loop when success is assured.

In discussing the project, Mrs. Funk said: "Our bank will explode a theory that has long prevailed in the minds of e few that women do not trust women. We will demonstrate that such a belief is a fallacy. Women are the money savers of the world and we will attempt to appeal to these savers through our trust and savings departments.

"Many women save not only their own money, but that of their sons and husbands and brothers. When women are left dependent they make special efforts to save, and we will endeavor to show a class of this sort that we can help them. No inducements will be made to obtain stockholders or to attract depositors. When the bank is ready for business it will be found that the backers are women of sufficient financial standing to insure e good, sound, business proposition.

"Our original idea was to establish e bank in tne downtown business district. But for the sake of economy, while becoming established, we decided to choose e suburben location. If the business justifies we will have a branch downtown. But a conservative policy will control ell of our transactions."

City Will Pipe Water Long Distance

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—With the Kansas and Missouri rivers combined to furnish water for Kansas City and sometimes supplying more of it than can be taken care of, it is somewhat surprising that local capitalists should be negotiating for the purchase of water 150 miles away for the city supply.

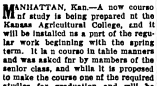
Efforts have recently been made by them to purchase the Bennett Spring in Dallas county, Mo., with a view to piping the water here to supply residences with drinking water.

Reports made to the intending purchasers by an expert sent to the spring show a daily output of 104,000,000 gallons. Since the spring was discovered, which dates back to Indian times before the advent of white settlers, the spring has been pouring forth the same volume of crystal pure water of the same temperature whether it was July or January.

The term spring is misleading for the water supply is really an underground river which comes to the surface at this point, forms a surface river of its own for a mile and a quarter to jump farther down from a bed 22 feet above into the Little Niangua river. The spring flow reaches the river with such force that it shoots half way over the stream before its waters fall to mingle with those of the Little Niangua and flow away to the northwest.

The plan of utilising the big supply in Kansas City includes building a dam across the spring to the city. This line would cross nearly all of Dalles county, for the spring is on its eastern border, with all of Jackson county, for the city is on its western border. The counties between are Johnson, Henry, St. Clair and Hickory. The pipe line would probably extend over 150 miles.

New York's Big Bridges Are Useless



NEW YORK.—After having spent between $90,000,000 and $100,000,000 for bridges over the East river, Father Knickerbocker is now informed that all of this sum except about one-quarter—the amount expended on the original Brooklyn bridge—represents money thrown away. The persons responsible for this disquieting statement are the more or less eminent engineers who have been critically claiming the latest rapid transit plans of the city.

These plans, which provided for a $100,000,000 subway to serve three of the five boroughs of the greater city, contemplated the use of two of the new bridges—the Williamsburg and the Manhattan—to carry them lines over the river, but the engineering critics declare that this is not feasible for the reason that the new bridges are not located on any main lines of travel; in short, they do not lend to or from any where.

In support of this view they point out that none of the three bridges built within the last few years at an outlay of over $65,000,000 is used to more than a small percentage of its carrying capacity, while the Brooklyn bridge, in spite of the efforts to relieve the traffic from it, remains at the daily rush hours the scene of the worst congestion and the most indecent crowding to be witnessed anywhere in the world.

MANHATTAN, Kan.—A new course of study is being prepared at the Kansas Agricultural College, and it will be installed as a part of the regular work beginning with the spring term. It is a course in table manners and was asked for by members of the senior class, and while it is proposed to make the course one of the required studies for graduation and will be given in the senior class this year, it will become a part of the work of the early classes.

It has long been a habit with many Kansas men to pour the coffee into the saucer, blow on it before drinking. There are other things required at the table in polite society, such as which fork to use for different foods, placing the elbows on the table, making a noise while drinking water, and numerous other items of social etiquette. Now the young men who are attending the Kansas Agricultural College and who eat most of their meals in restaurants want to know about the social requirements. The Agricultural College proposes to teach them.

Last summer the state board of education adopted a course of morals and manners to be taught in the common schools. In all country schools in the state the small boys are receiving daily lessons in honesty, address and other important parts of the making of an upright, moral citizen of good manners in social and business affairs.

The 7,000 Kansas school teachers were told that the state board required the course in morals and manners of equal importance with reading, writing and the other common school branches, and the teachers were instructed to read up if they did not know and do instruct the children how to be good little girls and boys.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

ASQUITH ADVOCATES SALARY

Premier Asquith has announced his advocacy of a measure that will provide for the payment of salaries to the members of parliament. This will be a decided innovation for England and is thought likely to make politics more of a profession than at present.

Under the system now in force, the same that has always been in force, members of parliament serve without remuneration. With most of them this is not a serious handicap, as many rich men seek a seat in parliament for the honor.

The working men who are elected to parliament are supported by the labor unions to which they belong. In most cases where a member of an organized labor union is a candidate his election expenses are met by an assessment on his brother working men. The legislative body is paid the sum of $2.50 a day.

Advocates of the measure declare that a man and his salary while a member of the labor union. If it was not for this system, no working men could afford to accept a nomination, even if he were assured of election without expense.

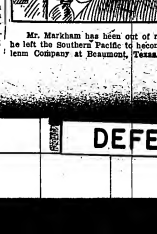
It was against Premier Asquith that the London suffragettes made several violent demonstrations. Advancing under cover of the fog at 2:30 o'clock one morning, a militant band circumvented the police and stormed the Asquith residence, in Downing street. They hurled stones and metal weights at the house, breaking the glass in all of the windows. The premier was also attacked on the street when opportunity offered.

LED THE REVOLT IN MEXICO

Senor Francisco I. Madero, who led the recent insurrectional revolt in Mexico, does not belong to the class of poor Mexicans. On the contrary, he is one of the wealthy men of the country and belongs to a very aristocratic and powerful family.

The patriarchal head and founder of the Madero family, Don Evaristo Madero, was formerly Governor of the State of Coeauila, but quarreled with the Diaz regime, and for years he and his family influences has been antagonistic to the government.

Senor Madero shows clean being, medium height, broad-shouldered, robust, and slightly inclined to obesity. Shimerous, velvety, black Latin eyes that often waken to a gleam of humor—for he is fond of a joke—surmounts a sallow face, a distinctly aquiline nose, closely compressed lips that still denote a sensual tendency, and a straggling mustache on the rather prominent chin. He is not attentive to dress, and is usually seen in a black coat of rather provincial cut. His speaks French in preference to Spanish, but knows English well.



HARLAN LONG ON THE BENCH

John Marshall Harlan, who recently celebrated the close of thirty-three years' service on the United States Supreme Court bench, is one of the most distinguished jurists in the country. He took his seat Dec. 10, 1877, and his service has been twice as long as that of any other member of the present court. Justice Harlan was born in Boyle county, Kentucky, in 1833, and after studying law in Transylvania College, he practiced at Frankfort, Ky., where for a time he was county judge. Later he practiced at Louisville, and between 1861 and 1863 he served in the Union army as colonel of the Tenth Kentucky regiment. For the four years following he was attorney general of Kentucky, and in 1871 and 1875 he was the Republican nominee for governor of the state. Justice Harlan was a member of the Louisiana commission, and he also was one of the American arbitrators on the Bering Sea tribunal. He is a professor of constitutional law in the George Washington University.

The three members of the court whose services exceed that of Justice Harlan were Chief Justice John Marshall, Justice Stephen J. Field and Justice Joseph Story. Both Marshall and Field served more than 34 years.

NEW ILLINOIS CENTRAL HEAD

Mr. Markham has been out of railway service since Nov. 1, 1904, when he left the Southern Pacific to become general manager of the Gulfay Petroleum Company at Beaumont, Texas.

Charles H. Markham, president of the Gulf Refining Company and the Gulf Pipe Line Company of Pittsburg, who was recently elected president of the Illinois Central System to succeed J. T. Harahan, began his railroad career in 1881, when he started as a section laborer on the Union Pa. In the same year he became a station agent for the Southern Pacific at Deming, N. M., and held similar positions for six years. From 1891 to 1897 he was district freight and passenger agent at Fresno, Cal., and in 1897 was promoted to be general freight agent of the Oregon lines of the Southern Pacific Company. In 1901 he was transferred to San Francisco as assistant freight traffic manager and in 1904 was made vice-president of the Houston and Texas Central. In April of that year he was chosen as general manager of the Southern Pacific and in June vice-president.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Interview Causes Stir in Washington

WASHINGTON.—Capital society has had nothing that has made it sit up and take notice in a good while. But it sure got a slap that wakened it with a jump the other day when there appeared in e New York newspaper an alleged interview with Baroness Hengelmuller von Hengervar, the "deeness" of the diplomatic corps, or, to put it properly, the doyenne, her husband, Baron Hengelmuller von Hengervar, being the dean. The baroness, who has been in New York city, permitted herself to be interviewed by a very sprightly young lady reporter in New York, who on two or three previous occasions has shown herself to be rather long on imagination and short on facts. She directly quotes the baroness es follows:

"Washington is dull end stupid. Society there is provincial. To get to New York is heaven to me, for there is so much to do besides eyring and receiving calls and callers and drinking tea and going through the drier round of formel and uninteresting social events. We have lived in Washington 16 years. I have done each year the sems things with practically the same people. Here in New York formal calling end tea taking are practically eliminated, because there are so many other more interesting things to do. Even the shops meke e differences. Hers it is e positive pleasure to shop. Then, your theaters, opera and concerts are so wonderful. In fact, New York is one of the most fascinating cities in the world. It is all life end color end impules.

"Logically, of course, Weshington should be the social center of the country. It never will be, however, for e city can take the bouquet away from New York. The atmosphere is different, end e social climate is an hardjo-de clongs es any other kind."

It is stated thet Beroness Hengelmuller neerly fell down dead when she saw this interview in the New York papers end then sew it copied into the Weshington papers. Baroness Hengelmuller is nothing if not conventional. She lives by form end rote, end to do enything out of the regulor is to her oplion to commeit a crime.

She come back home in e stete of nervous collapse, declered she never sold a word of it end thet Washington is perfectly lovely.

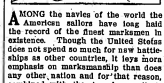
Christmas Among Capital's Asiatics

THE tiny representatives of all the nations represented at the national capital celebrated Christmas, each with some peculiar custom brought from his own far-off land. The Christmas idea is one easily caught up by the foreign child and the talk is busy for weeks before the happy festival is just as eagerly listened to by the little Oriental as by the child to whom it has always been familiar.

Although the Christian significance of the Saviour's birth is absent from the Oriental celebration of Christmas, yet the festival spirit of the season appeals to the hope and glee from far-off China and Japan than to their little American playmates. The Chinese embassy was the scene of much galoty during the holiday weeks. For the eldest of the ambassador's daughters, Miss Ailee Cheng, is only twelve years old and still retains many childish tastes. This year the month-old daughter of the couple, Tyo Meisen or Mildred Cheng, was the youngest member of the legation who came in for Christmas presents.

Santa Claus did not neglect Arkiro and Seda Matsui, the tiny son and daughter of the counselor of the Japanese embassy, Keishiro Matsui. Arkiro and Seda have been used all their little lives to hearing of the good old Seint Nick, and were happily pleased at his bounty.

Among the legation youngsters who this year spent their first Christmas in Washington are the children of the newly arrived Norwegian minister, H. H. Bryn. There were "high doings" at the legation, too, for the Christmas tree is a native of Norway and the Santa Claus thrives best of all in the climate of ice and snow, to which the Bryn children were born.



Violate Law Covering Abuse of Coins

THE carelessness or ignorance of big firms in observing the federal laws governing abuse of coins costs them thousands of dollare yearly. Just recently a Chicago company came to grief which would have saved itself and the government much trouble and expense if it had read the following law:

"Whoever fraudulently, by any act, wor or means shall deface, mutilate, impeir, diminish, falsify or counterfeit . . . the gold or silver coins which have been or which may hereafter be coined in the mint of the United States . . . shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisonment of not more than five years."

Uncle Sam's Gunners Are Unequaled

AMONG the navies of the world the American sailors have long held the record of the finest marksmen in existence. Though the United States does not spend so much for new battleships as other countries, it lays more emphasis on marksmanship than does any other nation and for that reason, combined with the American sailors's infinite patience, our men have gained their world-wide reputation of champions. More time and ammunition are exhausted in the American navy in target practice than is realized generally. America spends ten times the sum for this purpose as does England.

All world's records for gunnery were broken, by the crew of the battleship Idaho in the recent big gun target shooting held off Cape Henry. During the practice in which she won her championship the sailors of the Idaho shattered targets at 10,000 yards distance. Had the little vessel been in battle she would have shattered in five minutes a battleship of a fleet-one of five miles, had she shot with the same accuracy.

The gunner begins in the ordnance shops at Washington, where he is instructed in the rudiments of the art. He is kept at his studies six days a week from eight o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon. Before he is detailed to a ship the apprentice is given three months' instruction in the handling of high explosives and taught the workings of the submerine mine.

Then he is turned over to a battleship, where he is given the position of gun pointer in charge of an instructor who knows the business from top to bottom, and at this gun he sticks until his superiors think him eminently trustworthy, when he is allowed to participate in maneuvers. Finally he handles a gun in real war.

AEROPLANES FOR BATTLESHIPS.

An aeroplane costs $5,000. An armored cruiser costs $5,000,000. The best of our armored cruisers, the Tennessee or the Montana, have been rendered obsolete by the inflexible and the Von der Tann. Nor are we building new ones to succeed them. Therefore the aeroplane, as an adjunct to the battleship, becomes a matter of interest, both tactically and economically. The coming attempt of an aeroplane to fly from the deck of an ocean steamer back to New York harbor is a matter of prime moment. Though the federal government has rescinded the order detailing torpedo boats to assist in the experiment, the navy department will keep official watch on it. The result of this experiment may determine whether the naval authorities will equip the next new battleship with an aeroplane and the necessary facilities for making a flight from the ship's deck while at sea. The advent of the battleship-cruiser has made our best cruisers nothing but scouts, and not rapid ones, says the Chicago Record-Herald. Yet the cost of their maintenance is almost that of a dreadnought. If the aeroplane can perform scout duty at sea the cost of constructing and maintaining our navy will be immensely reduced. This now application of aeronautics to naval warfare seems, at present, a delicate and difficult matter. It will require expert aviators aboard ship and highly favorable conditions all around. Yet skilled and daring flyers are rapidly increasing in number and the ability to cope with varied atmospheric conditions is developing to match.

Showing American agricultural products alongside those of England and Scotland is those two countries may not strike many as promising valuable results to our people. But in other ways there seem to be opportunities. John N. McCuse, our consul at Glasgow, writes that he considers it a great mistake that American feed and dairy outfits are not on exhibition at the farmers' weekly markets in such Scotch towns as Kilmarnock, Kirkcudbright and other places of like character. It appears that the excellence of such devices is their own commendation. The inventive American mind has gone very far in contriving apparatus which economizes time and effort and increases efficiency, as the use of such appliances here has demonstrated. The old world has been slower, but the Scotch are quick to perceive advantages such as the American outfits assure, and Consul McCunn's hint might be taken with advantage to all concerned.

Carlyle once told a man who was financially interested in gold mining that all the gold ever produced by California was not worth one good mealy potato. And yet the potato is Scotland has a history of less than 200 years, says the Edinburgh Dispatch. When Macdonald of Clanranald, in 1743 brought seed potatoes for his tenants to South Uist they objected to planting them because the potato is not mentioned in the Bible! Somewhat later George Bachop, one of the Ochterlyre tenants, when told by his wife that she had potatoes for supper, contemptuously replied: "Tatties! tattles! I never suppit on them at my days, and winna this night. Cite them to the herd, gie ms sowens."

Cape Town once lived under so severe a code of sumptuary laws that anything like display was restricted to the governor and his immediate circle. Thus ran Article VI. of the Dutch laws against luxury and ostentation: "No one less in rank than a junior merchant and those among the citizens of equal rank and the wives and daughters only of those who are or have been members of any council shall venture to use umbrellas." In practice this restricted the possession and use of umbrellas to about 50 persons in Cape Town.

An inventor in New York claims to have perfected a solid fuel for automobiles, the chief advantages of which are that it gives off no odor and fl smokeless. As soon as we are assured that his new fuel is as he represents it to be we shall start a movement for the purpose of having him accepted as one of the country heroes.

A Punxsutawney (Pa.) man has invented a pocket telephone, about eight inches long, two inches broad and an inch thick, which can be used by putting a plug attached to it into a hole in boxes fixed on the telephone poles around the town. The idea is ingenious, but is the Punxsutawney pocket big enough for the device?

One reason New York city is so congested is that they can enlarge the island only upward and downward.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Jan. 4.—The thirty-seventh session of the Minnesota legislature is open at the state capitol.

The first day's business covered the routine, that of preliminary organization and the formal election of the Republican nominees for legislative offices who were selected at the caucus.

Members Sworn In.

At the opening of the session Chief Justice Start swore in the new members of the senate and Associate Justice Brown swore in the members of the house. In the house the election of the speaker was first considered. H. H. Dunn was placed in nomination by George A. MacKenzie of Gaylord. E. L. Kelloy placed Albert Pfeender in nomination for the Democrats and Representative Morton nominated C. L. Sciersd of Halstad for the Prohibition party. The roll call showed a vote of 80 for Dunn, 23 for Pfeender and one Prohibitionist not voting.

Mr. Dunn spoke briefly, thanking the members for the honor conferred upon him. He immediately called for the roll of business. The state of the house employes nominated at the Republican caucus Mcaday night went through without a hitch.

Speaker Dunn then appointed the committee on rules, whose membership is as follows: McKenzie, C. E. Stone, Congdon, Fowler and Wescott. The request of the Democratic members that have a representation on this committee was denied.

St. Paul, Jan. 5.—The first primary election bill of the present session of the senate by Senator John Moonon, of Waseca. The bill amends several sections of the present bill, leaving only the primary features of the law. It provides for the voting for candidates who have not been placed on the ballot by sey previous announcement, the calling of a meeting of all the candidates nominated at the primary election for the purpose of promulgating party platforms and selecting state central committees and prescribes the rules of registration.

The primary election system is extended to all elective offices with the exception of officers of towns, villages and cities of the fourth class, and members of school, park and library boards in cities less than 100,000 population. The day of the primary election shall be the first day of registration. Party candidates for the office of United States senator shall be nominated in the manner provided for in the nomination of the state officers.

"The blanks for registration of voters for general election shall have two additional columns, one headed 'party affiliations' and the other headed 'Pirty or electors.' No names of voters shall be placed upon the registers prior to the day of such election, nor shall any be placed on the register upon said day, except the names of those who appear in person before the board of registration for that purpose.

"It is made the duty of the judges of each primary election to ask each person who applies to be registered the question, 'What political party do you desire to affiliate with?' and the political party given by such person so applying shall be recorded on the books of registration in the column headed 'party affiliations.' In case the judges of election do not believe that the person applying to be registered has answered such questions truthfully or the person applying to be registered is known to have other party affiliations then it is made the duty of the judges to administer the following oath:

"'You solemnly swear that you will fully and truthfully answer the questions put to you concerning your party affiliation?' The judges shall then again propound the question while such applicant is under oath and the name of the party affiliation given shall be recorded.

"In case the person applying to be registered does not desire to state his party affiliation he shall not be required to do so as a her to his purpose of voting at the general election, but he cannot cast a ballot at the primary election.

"The candidates for the various state offices, for the office of United States senator and for the state senate and house of representative of each political party shall meet at the state capitol at 12 o'clock on the second Tuesday after said election to formulate a party platform, elect a state central committee and perform such other business as may be necessary. The platform of each party shall be framed at such time and he announced not later than the day following such meeting."

Senator John Moonon introduced a joint memorial asking congress to provide an amendment to article 1 of the United States constitution to allow the state to elect United States senators by direct vote of the people instead of by the legislature.

Senator Wilson notified the senate that the bill covering employers' liability, which has been framed by the employers' liability and compensation commission, will be introduced Jan. 20.

St. Paul, Jan. 6.—The first real day's work done by the legislature was featured by the announcement of senate committees, which aroused considerable comment because of the ultra-radicals were given choice assignments; the adoption of the rules in both branches and the warm debate occasioned in the house when Representative Nolan attempted to have one amended, and the introduction in both branches of some radical legislation.

In the senate, bills providing for direct legislation were introduced by a Democrat, Senator Moonen of Waseca, while in the house, Representative Kunze, of Hennepin introduced a measure providing for the nomination of United States senators by popular vote. There were also introduced into the house two measures that are calculated to draw the fire of the railroads, since they are advanced legislation cloaeg that line.

With but one important change, the report of the committee on rules was adopted by the house. The change provides that every bill, other than for appropriations, claims or reappointment referred to a standing committee, shall be reported thereon within 20 days after its receipt by the committee. Any such bill not so reported within such period, unless the period is extended, shall be delivered to the speaker five days after any member gives notice he requires that such bill so be reported, with or without a report, and lie on the table of the house. This rule is even stronger than that recommended by the senate committee, where the 25-day limit was invoked.

The bills providing for the initiative and referendum, the recall of all public officers the people deem necessary to their trusts were introduced into the senate by Senator Spencer Weaver.

The recall measure provides that when 25 per cent of the voters who cast their ballots in the election at which the official was chosen signify by petition it shall act as notice that unless the official resign within five days of a special election shall be held to determine whether he shall be recalled. The reasons set forth in his recall and his defense shall be briefed on the ballot in not more than 200 words for each officer.

Bills Aimed at Railroads.

Bills aimed at the railroads were introduced by Senator Gerdnier, of Minnetonka. These provide that rates for transportation of passengers and freight shall not be more for a short haul than for a long haul, and that freight transported over two or more lines cannot be transferred from one carload lots to another car at the junction point.

Senator Moonen introduced a bill providing for the erection at his home town of Waseon of a school of agriculture that shall be identified with the state university.

House Bills.

The following bills were introduced into the house:

By Cal. E. Stone, For the Minnesota State Trades Industrial school for dependent orphans. The amount asked is $125,000.

By George McKenzie, To amend the law relating to corporations.

By R. C. Dunn, To appropriate money to defray the cost of publication of the proposed amendments to the constitution in October, 1910.

By W. A. Campbell and P. L. Pelmear, To prohibit the bonding or maintenance of cemeteries within one-half mile of the state university or any of its colleges or the Soldiers' home.

By W. A. Campbell, Providing for the correction of election returns in counties, cities and municipal corporations in which voting machines are used.

By W. F. Kunze, Providing for the nomination of United States senators by popular vote.

By W. A. Campbell, To oblige street railway companies operating in towns of 50,000 or over to maintain a watchman at all crossings with railroad tracks.

By W. F. Kunze, Providing for education in the professional qualifications for county superintendents of schools.

By C. J. Huuge, For an amendment to the act providing for the appointment of a state highway commission.

By C. F. Fowler To grant the right to pension the citizen-soldiers of Minnesota who participated in the Indian massacre of 1862.

BRAZIL REBELS DIE

GANGRENE, SUNSTROKE AND SUFFOCATION CARRY OFF 45 MUTINEERS.

DEMISE OF ALLEN IS SUDDEN

Rio Due to Political Dissatisfaction Reported in State of Para—Government Exercises Rigid Censorship Over All Dispatches.

Rio Janeiro—Forty-four members of the recent naval revolt, including João Candido, their leader, have "died suddenly" in prison, according to the Journal do Commercio in its issue of Friday.

Candido succumbed to gangrene while a prisoner, twenty-six of his associates died from sunstroke while engaged in repairing the fortress on Cobras island and eighteen others were suffocated in their cells in the prison on Villegignon island.

When the letter of the two recent naval revolts in Brazil was put down, three weeks ago, it was announced that the mutinous sailors had been sent to states remote from Rio Janeiro, where they would be employed in the construction of highways and railroads. The mutineers had surrendered, and it was officially announced that the disorders were at an end.

There are persistent rumors of disturbances in the State of Para, on the north coast, due to political dissatisfaction. Rioting is said to have occurred at Para.

Nicthoroy, the capital of the State of Rio Janeiro, and situated across the harbor from the federal capital, is under martial law, and the troops occupy all the public buildings.

The rigid censorship maintained by the government since the revolt in the navy was put down makes it impossible to confirm officially these reports of rioting at Para and elsewhere in the republic. The censorship includes the newspapers here.

Washington.—The report from Rio Janeiro that the forty-five ringleaders of the recent revolt in the Brazilian navy had "died suddenly" aroused interest, but caused no surprise in this city.

The recent navel revolts at Rio were particularly humiliating to the Brazilian government, and the sudden demise of Candido and his associates has been looked for. These men captured two of the most powerful of modern battleships, dominated the city with the 12-inch guns and forced the government to grant the reforms the mutineers demanded.

It is feared here that the "sudden death" of these sailors may yet cause serious trouble to the big South American republic.

IF YOU WOULD BE WELL
KEEP YOUR KIDNEYS WELL.

Every Picture Tells A Story

The kidneys filter the blood. When they are sick, the uric poison is retained and various troubles result. No kidney symptom, however slight, should be neglected. There is no better remedy for sick kidneys than Doan's Kidney Pills.

George Selder, 632 Pacific Ave., Alameda, Cal., says: "I could not lie on my side owing to the soreness over my kidneys. My limbs swelled badly and the flesh was soft and flabby. After using Doan's Kidney Pills, the swelling vanished and the pain in my back disappeared."

BOY BANDITS KILL OFFICER

Porter and Sailboy Hold Up Street Car and Shoot a Policeman at Duluth.

Duluth, Minn.—William Muzzary and Algot Johnson, each nineteen years old; bellboy and night porter of the Hotel McKay, turned bandits Friday, killed a policeman, held up a car and are being sought for by the police.

The two men held up and shot at the night clerk, hound and gagged two others in the hotel basement and escaped with $50 belonging to the hotel. They were arrested and placed on a street car after a chase through the interstate bridge district.

While being taken back to the city they asked the car driver to proceed to the car. When the request was granted one of the youthful bandits drew a revolver from a pocket that had escaped the attention of Policeman Harry Chesmore, who had just arrested them, and fired on that officer and killed him. Chesmore was shot twice in the lungs and died in the hospital. The robbers then held up the passengers and crew of the car and escaped.

All the bandits are heavily armed. It is feared that when their place of concealment is discovered there will be a battle.

BLAST IMPERILS ELEVEN MEN

City of Minneapolis Is Plunged Into Darkness by Explosion in Power Plant.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Minneapolis was plunged into darkness Friday and the communication of the city almost paralyzed by an explosion of the "13,000 wires" leading into the power house of the Minneapolis General Electrical company. Third avenue S. is in the business district.

Eleven men employed in the building made their way to safety through the valley of the hill race after the explosion. Fire followed and completed the demolition of the building. Several were injured and the damage to the property is estimated at $500,000.

Writ Prevents Mayor's Recall.

Seattle, Wash.—Federal Judge Handford Friday granted an injunction to Frank H. Rosboy of Chicago preventing the recall of Mayor H. C. Gill of Seattle. This was the first attempt of this kind ever made in this country.

Weak Heart

Many people suffer from weak hearts. They experience shortness of breath on exertion, fluttering, or dizzy feeling, caused breathing after meals or their eyes become blurred, their heart is not sufficiently strong to move the blood to the extremities, and they have cold hands and feet, or poor appetite because of weakened blood supply to the stomach. A heart-tonic and alterative should be taken which has no bad after-effect. Such is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which contains no dangerous narcotics nor alcohol.

The ingredients, as attested under oath, are Stone root (Collinsonia Canadensis), Blue Cohosh (Caulophyllum Thalictroides), Golden Seal root (Hydrastis Canadensis), Bloodroot (Sanguinaria Canadensis), Queen's root (Stillingia Sylvatica), Cayenne (Capsicum Fastigiatum), Black Cherry bark (Prunus Serotina), with Clycerine refined glycerine, prepared in a scientific laboratory in a way that no chemist could duplicate.

There is no alcohol to shrink up the red blood corpuscles; but, on the other hand, it increases their number and they become round and healthy. It helps the human system in the assimilation of rich, red blood. It helps the stomach to assimilate or take up the proper elements from the food, thereby helping digestion and curing dyspepsia, biliousness and many concomitant symptoms, stops excessive tissue waste in convalescence from fevers; for the run-down, anemic, thin blooded people, the "Discovery" is refreshing and vitalizing. Sticks to this safe and sure remedy, and refuse all "just as good" but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will do you half as much good.

MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR

EXHAUSTIVE TREATISE ON STATE AFFAIRS BY THE MINNESOTA EXECUTIVE.

MAKES MANY RECOMMENDATIONS

URGES A NUMBER OF REFORMS IN THE SYSTEM, TENDING TO GREATER EFFICIENCY AND LESS EXPENSE.

St. Paul—The annual message of Gov. A. O. Eberhart was read to the legislature. In brief he said:

The people of Minnesota in the election of 1910 have seen fit to place the control of all branches and departments of state government in the hands of the Republican party, thereby charging that party with a double responsibility. This act of confidence on the part of the people confers upon the legislative and executive branches of our state government, not only the opportunity, but the solemn duty and mandate of helpful and responsive co-operation to the end that the will of the people and their highest public interest and welfare shall find a prompt and hearty response in wise and progressive legislation as well as vigorous and efficient administration. In this cause I pledge you the most earnest and effective co-operation within my power as chief of the executive department, and to you I look with the utmost confidence and expectation for support in carrying into legislative enactment the practical reforms which the needs of our commonwealth and the progressive thought of our time demand at our hands.

I believe that the time has arrived in the history of this state, when the public good, or, to use the language of the constitution, when the security, benefit and protection of the people demand a radical modification and reform in certain phases of our state administration.

We have just completed the first half century of our development as a state. We are no longer dependent upon pioneer experiments and ancient makeshifts. We are prepared to establish our system of state government on the most scientific and progressive principles of civics and economics. Before the installation of any reform, however, we wish to assure ourselves that it can stand the test of experience as practical and business like, that it conduces to public economy and efficiency, and that it represents the true interests, welfare and [illegible]

HERZAN HEARING ON JAN. 11.

Case of Slayer of Mrs. Fiman, Signs His Confession.

Glencoe. —The case against Joseph Herzan, the alleged murderer of Mrs. Joseph Fiman, of Silver Lake, who made a complete confession after being in the sweatbox 24 hours, was continued until Jan. 11. Herzan wrote and signed a full confession. It was in Bohemian. The salient features of the confession are as follows:

Herzan says he borrowed his brother's revolver the day of the crime with the intention of going to the Fiman home to secure the money which he knew was kept in the house. He told of entering the Fiman home after having spent the afternoon away from his own home, and of demanding it from Mr. and Mrs. Fiman.

The aged couple gave him some money, but he wanted more. The old gentleman, he said, declared he would go upstairs to find it, but instead of doing so broke a window and jumped out. As he did so, according to Herzan's story, Mrs. Fiman held a lantern up to the robber's face and said she knew who he was. Herzan then fired the fatal shot, which entered the aged woman's head and resulted in her death.

Herzan then fled from the scene, and, after wandering about some time to confuse the officers who might try to follow his footprints, went home.

Detectives were employed by the county and worked for weeks on the case. Several clues were run down and suspects were placed under surveillance, but in every instance were able to prove an alibi. Herzan was among the men watched, and bit by bit a strong case was made against him. His shoes fit exactly the footprints made by the murderer. He borrowed his brother's revolver the day of the crime and was not at home all the afternoon and evening. He was traced to a farm home near the Fiman home, where he had supper, and left there shortly before the crime was committed.

HE WAS COUNTED OUT.

The Inspectors in the Stephens Sugstad election contest over in Polk County have found that A. D. Stephens was elected by a majority of 174 votes. Both sides were represented on the committee appointed to investigate the recount, and their findings was unanimous, so the friends of Sugstad had to admit that he was not elected but was counted in by the Town Boards.

Where are we drifting? Has northern Minnesota degenerated so low that we are using the old fashiond methods used by the south years ago when the man that was the best counter and had the best shot gun was sure to win? We hope not, and expect to see A. D. Stephens seated in that state senators chair to which he was fairly elected by the people, but was counted out by the town boards.

We have been accused of being opposed to any further extension of time for the settlers on the eleven towns to make final proof which is true, as all of them are needed to pay taxes It is not now a question between the settlers and the government, but it is an attempt of one man to put his share of taxes onto his neighbor to pay.

The Pennington county commissioners let the county printing to the St. Hilaire Spectator, it being the lowest bidder. That is the stuff, practice what you preached before election. No county printing kick can be put in, against the commissioners on that deal.

No matter what is the final outcome of Stephens vs Sugstad contest may be, the evidence showed that some of the town officers in that county are a disgrace to the position they occupy. Some of them ought to come up o Highland and learn how to conduct an election fair, and according to law. Our entire town board were on the opposit side from us on one of the leading issues of the election, and we are willing to sware in any court that our town had a fair election and a fair count.

Popular Ideas.

The most popular joke which has been published in any language in the history of the world is stated in a blast which appeared in an obscure corner of the Punch almanac for 1848. It read: "Advice to persons about to marry—Don't!" It would be interesting to know who was its patriot. Another, founded on a similar subject, was the "Advice to persons who have fallen in love—Fall out!" One of the most brilliant things that ever appeared in contemporary was the brief dialogue between an inquiring child and his inpatient parent: "What is maffer?" "No maffer." "What is maffer?" "Never mind."—Westminster Gazette.

Against His Convictions.

"Hist's some of this Welsh rabbit, Bjonson?" asked Hjalles as he stirred the golden concoction in the chafing dish.

"No, Hjalles, Bjonesss," returned Bjonson, patting his stomach tenderly "I am constitutionally opposed to all temperation liquor."—Harper's Weekly.

Go Again.

"I shot four husband in town. He was very much elated."

"The fellahs! He told me he would never take another drop."—Houston Post.

Played Them Both Ways.

The French comedian Perlet was extraordinarily thin. A physician recommended him in try some bath in the Pyrenees, so he betook himself to the mineral springs, where he bathed unremittingly, but all in vain; he did not increase in size. "Patience," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people fat." One day while Perlet was waiting philosophically in his bath for an embonpoint which never came he heard a conversation in the next room, from which his own was divided by only a thin partition and which was occupied by an enormous woman, fat as the Hottentot Venus. "Doctor," said she, "I am getting tired of this." "Why?" asked the Aesculapius. "I have been here two months." "Well?" "Well, I am as enormous as I was when I came." "A little patience, madame," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people thin." Perlet, hearing these words, sprang out of his bath, dressed, rushed home to his hotel, ordered his bill and left for Paris by the next train.—Argonaut.

A Simple Life.

"And what," inquired the visitor, who was "being shown" to little Bobbie, "are you going to do when you grow up?"

"In a business man," responded Robert, "like father. He took me down to his office last week, and I'm going to work like him and have a good time."

"And what are you going to do in business?" pursued the visitor.

"Going to do just like dad," repeated the youngster—"watch the mail every morning and when I get to the office light a big cigar and sit down at my desk and say there's no rock-work to do it's no use beginning till after lunch, and then go out with another big cigar and eat and eat till I can't eat any more, and then go back to business and ask everybody else why the work isn't done, and then get so mad because nobody does anything that I'll go home early and be so tired I can't do a thing except read the paper and smoke more big cigars and swear."—Pearson's.

Florists' Jargon.

The florists have a trade jargon of their own. When a man who grows flowers for a living rattles off something like "peper whites, valleys and Romans" the confused layman has to stop to think what the jumble of words means. It is only the trade way of saying paper white narcissus, lily of the valley and Roman hyacinth. Likewise "mums" is their word for chrysanthemums, and time and space are likewise saved by saying "cyp" instead of cypripedium. So bridesmaid roses are "maids," American Beauties are "beauties," Perle du Jardin becomes "perle" and is pronounced pearl, while Scheunir du President Carnot is reduced to its last word, just as those other illustrious French rose names, General Jacqueminot and Marechal Niel, where shortened to "Jack" and "Niel" in the heyday of their glory. — New York Press.

A Locomotive's Breathing.

The "breathing" of a locomotive—that is to say, the number of puffs given out during a journey—depends upon the circumstances of its driving wheels and their speed. No matter what the rate of speed may be, for every one round of the driving wheels a locomotive will give four puffs—two out of each cylinder, the cylinders being double. If the average circumference of the driving wheel is twenty feet and the speed per hour fifty miles, a locomotive will give, going at express speed, 850 puffs per minute, 52,800 puffs per hour and 1,055 puffs per mile.—London Standard.

Failing a Fakir.

A story need to be told at Cairo of Sir Richard Owen during one of his sojourns in Egypt. The great naturalist was seated in the shade of the verandah at Shepperain's hotel when the inevitable snake charmer came to him and produced from his bag a truly specimen of the horned asp—the deadly creature. The professor gazed and, nothing daunted, stepped and plucked the horns from the head of the reptile twisting it in his fist, remarking in a tone under that the man would probably think twice before trying to palm off upon any one else a harmless snake as a cerastes by the aid of a couple of fish bones. With anybody else the charmer would probably have succeeded. He had tried it on the wrong man.

An Antiseptic Child.

Little Walter was always carefully guarded against germs. The telephon was subject to the drinking fountain sanitized and public conveyances and Mamie were forbidden him.

"Father," he said one night in a tone of desperation, "did you know what I was going to do when I grow up?"

"What?" asked his father, preparing himself for the worst.

"I'm going to be a germ."—Success Magazine.

QUAINT EPITAPHS.

Gems From Ancient Graveyards in Suffolk, England.

The Suffolk (England) Institute of Archaeology has been collecting epitaphs from the ancient graveyards throughout the shire, and several of the most curious are here printed. One shows traces of a pessimistic philosophy stupifying when we consider the strong orthodoxy of the day when the epitaph was written:

Beneath this stone lies Catherine Grey,
Changed to a lifeless lump of clay.
By birth and clay she got her name,
And now she's turned to clay herself.
What knows but in the course of years
In earth tall pitchin of brown pot
She in her shape may stand again.

Another from Suffolk reads as follows:

Here lies Robert Walliff,
The King Of Good Fellows,
Clerk of All Hallows
And maker of bellows.

These which follow could scarcely be lines chosen by the reverend occupant of the tomb himself, a clergyman named Chest:

Here lies at rest, I do protest,
One Chest within another,
The chest of wood was very good,
What have I of the other?

Auld; to conclude, here is a bit of philosophy that cannot be improved by any of the great thinkers of all time:

Here I lie oblidde the clarkest debt;
Here I lie because I'm dede.
The further in the more they pay,
But here I lie as warm as they.

Poor Stunt.

Mabel Robsleigh—Did you get the volume of Ibsen I sent you through the mails?

Miss Scotty—I did, but it was marked "third class matter," and I didn't think it could be anything worth looking at.

The Roman Tribune.

The tribunes in ancient Rome represented the people in much the same way that the house of commons does in England and the house of representives in this country. For a long time the patricians or arisocrats of Rome had everything their own way, but when the plebians (or, as we would say, the "plain people") got their tribune the reckless tyranny of the patrician ceased. The tribune had great power. He could veto almost any act and nullify almost any law passed by the Romans. Liberty among the Romans dates from the time they first secured their tribunes.—New York American.

Grand, Gloomy and Peculiar.

There was a marked contrast between Lincoln's manner, which was always pleasant and even genial, and that of Stanton. The latter's stern, spectacled visage commanded instant respect and in many cases inspired fear. In receiving visitors, and they were legion, Stanton seldom or never sat down, but stood before a high desk as the crowd passed before him and one by one presented their requests or complaints, which were rapidly disposed of. He was haughty, severe, domineering and often rude. When I think of him in the daily routine of his public usefulness the characterization of Napoleon by Charles Phillips, the Irish orator, comes to mind, "grand, gloomy and peculiar."—From "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office."

The "Sun Drawing Water."

The phenomenon commonly known as the "sun drawing water" is due to the rays of sunlight between the shadows of clouds. It is seen to best advantage when the atmosphere is somewhat hazy and when the sun is wholly or partly behind a cloud and is not in the higher part of the sky. Patchy stratocumulus clouds are most favorable for the formation of these rays, and they are probably most distinct when seen in the part of the sky below the sun, when they appear to extend either directly or somewhat obliquely downward. It is in this form that the effect is most commonly called the "sun drawing water." But such rays may extend in any direction, so that they diverge from the sun as a center. No rain need be falling anywhere near the observer, though it is not impossible for the rays to be visible at a time when rain streaks also are visible in part of the sky. The rain streaks, however, do not diverge from the sun, but are in lines of the falling rain.—St. Nicholas.

An Innocent Accomplice.

A smuggling story in which a woman fooled her nonsuspecting husband is told in the Century. The husband was a retired general, a martinet in discipline and overscrupulous regarding even the shadow of laxity in the performance of his own duties. "No smuggling was to be permitted," he told his wife, and before leaving Paris he insisted on making a full list of every dutiable article in his possession. Unknown to him she bought several yards of venetian lace. How to hide it was a problem until she thought of ripping the lining of his overcoat and hiding the lace inside. She regarded her cousing as a tremendous joke, and to this day he does not know how she laughed to herself when, wearing that very same coat on the dock, he drew himself up to his full military height and, with free conscience, pointed to a tray containing "all his purchases." No idea of anything so serious as defrauding the government had ever entered her feminine mind.

Grow Too Tall.

"I recall a case of genuine homesickedness, mixed with enthusiasm, that cost a great many people a bunch of money," said an oil operator. "It was during the time when a big strike meant a drop in the price of oil. The foreman of a drill crew had been instructed by the employers to use a code in the event of oil being found. If it was a big flow he was to wire, 'The trees grow tall.' If, on the other hand, the flow was small, 'Pine trees grow small,' was to be the code message. The drill struck a gusher, and the following message was sent by the ivory topped bull-driver: 'Pine trees grow tall as hell, and she is flowing all over the derrick.' Of course there were a number of men about the exchange who could understand telegraphy, and the consequence was that the price of oil dropped about $2 a barrel in a few minutes."—Louisville Times.

The Pillory.

The pillory in England was abolished as a punishment, except for perjury, in 1816 and was totally abolished in 1837. The last person to suffer at the Old Bailey was one Peter Bossy, for perjury, June 22, 1830. Notwithstanding the fact that this mode of punishment was supposed to be only for the lighter offenses, it often happened that the pillory meant death to those placed in it, the culprit frequently being stoned to death by the hearty-less mob.—New York American.

Provide for the worst; the best will save itself.

Just Pleasantness.

Perhaps just pleasantness has not a very heroic sound, but the human heart that, knowing its own bitterness, can yet carry itself cheerfully is not without heroism. Indeed, if that human heart begs to more than hold its tongue about its own aches and pains it has a certain moral value that the world cannot afford to lose. "Pleasantness" does not sound as well as self sacrifice or wisdom or spirituality, but it may include all these good words. And certainly just to start one's husband out to his work cheerful, to make the householdway of a sick feel a gentler and sweeter sentiment toward women because of his own mother's sound, sweet, prayerful strength, to help one's servants to put good humor and friendliness into their service—these things are more pleasantness than many people realize.

STUBBORN ECZEMA ON HANDS

"Some nine years ago I noticed small pimples breaking out on the back of my hands. They became very irritating, sed gradually became worse, so that I could not sleep at night. I consulted a physician who treated me a long time, but it got worse, and I could not put my hands in water. I was treated at the hospital, and it was just the same. I was told that it was a very bad case of eczema. Well, I just kept on using everything that I could for nearly eight years until I was advised to try Cuticura Ointment. I did so, and I found after a few applications and by bandaging my hands well up that the burning sensations were disappearing. I could sleep well, and did not have any itching during the night. I began after a while to use Cuticura Soap for a wash for them, and I think by using the Soap and Ointment I was much benefited. I stuck to the Cuticura treatment, and thought if I could find other remedies for over seven years with no result, and after only having a few applications and feeling relief from Cuticura Ointment, I thought it deserved a fair trial with a severe and stubborn case. I used the Ointment sed Soap for nearly six months, and I am glad to say that I have heeda as clear as anyone.

"It is my wish that you publish this letter to all the world, and if anyone doubtg it, let them write me and I will give them the name of my physician since the hospital I was treated at." (Signed) Miss Mary A. Bentley, 93 University St., Montreal, Que., Sept. 14, 1910.

So'aun and Sir John Fisher.

Admiral Potter told a new one on Sir John Fisher. When Sir John was at the head of the British admiralty he was most inaccessible. One day an old boatswain appeared. He would not take "no" for an answer. Finally a secretary went into Sir John's office, leaving the door ajar. He told the admiral that a sailor demanded an interview.

"Tell him to go to hell," roared Sir John.

"Aye, aye, sir," piped the boatswain, who stood in the doorway at a respectful salute; "I know I'll meet you there, sir, but I want to talk to you now, too."

CONSTIPATION

MUNYON'S PAW-PAW PILLS

Munyon's Paw-Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives and cathartics. They coax the liver into action by gentle methods. They do not scour; they do not gripe; they do not sicken; but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation.

Munyon's Paw-Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weaken; they enrich the blood instead of impoverish it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

These pills contain no calomel, no dope, they are soothing, healing and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without pills. 25 cents.

BATTLESHIP MAST

NEW STYLE MAST FROM BELOW

THE officials who have the say of things at the U. S. navy department have evidently become thorough converts to the advantages of the new style masts, or "fire control towers," as they are technically termed, which have been installed on most of the United States battleships and are now being placed on the others. The government has been experimenting with these new "peach basket" masts for several years now, but it is only lately that there has come evidence that the new wrinkle has been finally and definitely adopted as an adjunct of Uncle Sam's approved type of warships.

The new masts are so unique and so radically new that it is small wonder that the other powers have been prone to go slow in introducing such an innovation. No other nation in the world has anything of this sort on its fighting craft and so naturally Uncle Sam could not profit by the experience of anybody else. Then, too, it costs thousands and thousands of dollars to build and install one of these great skeleton steel structures and naturally the navy department wants to be right ere it goes ahead in the matter. This stage has now been reached.

First of all an experimental mast was rigged up on the monitor Florida, and in order to try out the new invention under actual war conditions the monitor was anchored in Hampton Roads and shells were hurled at the mast by the huge guns on a warship stationed some distance away. The new kind of tower withstood the gunfire well enough to justify many of the claims which had been made for the invention theoretically. Thereupon Uncle Sam went ahead and ordered such masts installed on a number of the old battleships of our navy and on those then building. A total of 22 masts were thus put in service and then a halt was called in order to make thorough exhaustive tests of the new masts under every imaginable condition of sea service. It is this period of probation which has but just now come to an end. There were rumors at one time that the new style mast had been pronounced a failure and would be discontinued, but this proved unfounded. The new invention has been officially endorsed and now the work will proceed of not only providing such masts on all our battleships but also on the armored cruisers.

The new "crow's nest" or "peach basket" mast, as they are familiarly called, are primarily observation towers and their function is an integral part of the modern "fire control" system of our battleships—the system for directing and governing the gunnery fire in time of battle. The peculiar construction of the new structures is to be attributed to a desire to safeguard the electrical and other communicative lines upon which the greatest dependency is placed in time of battle—the nerves of the battleship, as it were. For years there was a constantly increasing storm of criticism against the tapering steel tubes known as military masts, with which the battleships were formerly fitted. It was claimed that a single well-placed shot from an enemy's 12-inch gun would sever that style mast and in addition to heavy loss of life would rob the ship of its observatory and searchlight station.

On the other hand it is claimed that an enemy might shoot away fully 75 per cent. of the steel latticework comprising one of the new cylindrical towers without putting it out of commission. Indeed, tests have proven that an enemy would have to sever at least 46 of the steel tubes comprising one of these new style masts ere it would topple over. The average mast or tower as installed on one of our battleships is 90 feet in height and stands 120 feet above the water line. The base of the mast is circular, ranging in diameter from 60 to 26 feet, but all masts have a uniform diameter of 9 feet 6 inches at the top. Each mast is crowned with a platform 10 feet square, the 100 square feet of space thus provided being ample for the observers and the electrical and mechanical signaling devices which enable these look-outs to communicate with the officers on the ship below.

The tower le circular in form—or, to be exact, the shape of the tower might be designated as that of a truncated cone the exterior surfaces, being slightly concave near the top. This cutting not only helps the tower to withstand wind strains but makes it possible to employ what is known as "the double spiral" construction, which makes for stability in the highest degree. By this scheme the steel tubes are arranged in such manner that half of them slant from right to left, while the remainder incline in the opposite direction. Each individual tube terminates at the top platform on exactly the opposite side of the tower from that at which it started at the base. Further stability is contributed by steel ringe—double rows of them encircle the framework at intervals from the base to the top. These rings act as braces for the double spiral system of tubing and to insure a uniform distribution of all strains the tubing le fastened to each row of rings.

TRAGEDY OF OLD OCEAN

Disappearance of Captain and Crew Never Was Satisfactorily Explained

HE mystery of what became of the master and crew of the British bark Inveruesshire, which sailed from Hamburg for Santa Rosalia, Cal., and was found at anchor and abandoned off the Falkland islands, recalls vividly to the nautical minds the fate of the brig Mary Celeste of New York, for nearly forty years the prize riddle of the sea, the Bangor (Me.) correspondent of the New York Times writes. The Mary Celeste sailed from New York for Genoa with a cargo of petroleum and alcohol. She was commanded by Capt. Benjamin S. Briggs of Marion, Mass., with Albert G. Richardson of Stockton, Me., as first mate; Andrew Grilling of New York as second mate and Edward William Head of New York, Volkert Lorenzer, Arien Harhenn, B. Lorenzer and Gottlieb Goodshood, all of Germany, as the crew. The captain's wife and small child were also on board.

The brig was in first-class condition, well manned and well equipped in every way, and when she sailed from New York on November 17, 1872, the whole ship's company was happy and contented. Yet none of them was ever again seen, dead or alive. The brig was found on December 4 off the Azores, drifting aimlessly about in light winds, with her head sails set and all her other canvas down. There was nothing to show why she had been abandoned or what had become of her people. She was thus found by the brig Del Gratia, from New York for the Mediterranean, and after a careful examination Captain Moorehouse of the Del Gratia put a prize crew on board and sent her into Gibraltar, where she arrived on December 13, 1872, and was turned over to the admiralty court. Her owners refused to pay the heavy salvage demanded and let the salvors take her.

Among the officers' effects which were sent home was the mate's log, and this, with other articles, was returned to the father of the lost sailor, the late Theodore M. Richardson of Stockton. One significant passage, the last written, appeared in the log:

"Fanny, my dear wife."

Whether these words were written by the mate merely as an expression of affection while thinking of home, or in a moment of panic and despair when about to abandon the vessel, can only be conjectured. There was nothing else about the vessel to indicate the state of mind prevailing on board when she was abandoned. The date of this last entry in the mate's log was November 24. When ten days later she was boarded by men from the Del Gratia her stern boat was gone and it appeared that some food, probably canned goods, had been taken from a locker.

Otherwise everything was in such ship-shape that, hat for the date of the last entry in the log, the Del Gratia's men could have sworn that the vessel had been abandoned within an hour. Her running rigging was all properly made fast and the sleck coiled neatly on deck or over the pins. The compass bowrays were open, half-turned aneic lay open the rack of the little cabinet organ in the cabin and children's toys were scattered upon the floor. The captain's eiateroom his gold watch hung at the head of his berth and in his wife's room the impress of a child's head was distinct upon the pillow.

In the cook's galley the coppers were on the stove, and meat in process of preparation was on the table. In the forecastle the men had not disturbed their chests, no clothing was missing, and even money had been left behind. It was plain that the crew had left her very suddenly. That the boat was lowered away in a hurry and with some confusion was indicated by a broken davit.

In the 38 years that have elapsed since the Mary Celeste was abandoned countless stories, all more or less fanciful, have been written about her, and numerous theories have been advanced in explanation of this greatest of sea riddles. Mutiny, disease and piracy have been suggested. In 1871 a story was circulated to the effect that Mate Richardson had been seen hiding in the West Indies, and that he and members of the crew had murdered the captain and stolen many thousands of dollars that the vessel was carrying. As a matter of fact, the Mary Celeste carried no money of any amount.

As late as 1897 another yarn was published to the effect that a sailor, who claimed to have been the mate of the Del Gratia, had made a death-bed confession in Iquique, saying that when he boarded the Mary Celeste he found that all hands, except Captain Briggs, his wife and the cook, had died of smallpox, and that he, Jacob Howell, the confessor, had thrown all three of the survivors overboard, taken $8,000 in gold that Mate Richardson had been carrying for the purpose of opening new business in Africa, and then had returned to the Del Gratia with the report that the Mary Celeste had been found completely abandoned. This absurd story was first published in San Francisco and later found its way to Maine. It was on the face of it a pure invention, like the story of the murder of the captain.

The only reasonable explanation is that her master and crew became alarmed by the smelling of the cargo and, fearing that her decks would be blown off by the accumulation of confined gas from the petroleum and alcohol, got out of her in a hurry. It is well known that oil cargoes confined under tightly battened hatches will generate gases, especially when the vessel is pitching and rolling in heavy weather, and that these gases, thus confined, will cause a loud rumbling noise like distant thunder. The log of the Mary Celeste contains numerous allusions to rumblings below decks, and indicates a fear among her officers and crew that an explosion would take place. Evidently, if this theory holds, Captain Briggs did not know that the danger might have been averted by removing the hatches and allowing the gases to escape, as is often done.

Assuming that the Mary Celeste's people left her in a great hurry, alarmed at the danger of an explosion, the question arises, "What became of them?" The theory generally accepted by seafaring men is that they tried to make a landing on the Azores, and that the boat was capsized in the heavy surf, although there is no record of either the boat or any of the bodies ever having been found.

FLAX IS PROFITABLE

Wonderful Paying Proposition in Western Canadian Prairies.

So much is heard of the wheat, oats and barley grown in the prairie lands of western Canada, and so much has been told of the wealth to be made out of the raising of cattle on the succulent and rich grasses of those fertile plains, that a most important product has been almost lost sight of, Flax. Recent press reports advise us that on one of the last boats to clear from Fort William (at the head of Lake Superior) for Buffalo, there were 241,000 bushels of flax valued at $583,220, and on another boat leaving the same day there were 288,000 bushels valued at $720,000. There has been a big demand for Canadian flax this season, and the lake movement has been very heavy. Flax is always a sure crop, and gives to the farmer who is anxious for quick return after getting on his land, the chance he is looking for. There is opportunity for thousands yet, on the free homesteads of 160 acres, and many of these are available within short distance of the lines of railway that are already built or under construction, either on the main line or branches. Besides these free grant lands there is an opportunity to purchase from railway and land companies at reasonable prices.

The display of western Canada's grains in the straw as well as threshed grains and grasses recently made at St. Louis was an excellent demonstration of what the country can do. It proved splendid as an illustration of the resources of that vast prairie country, which during the past year has again proven its ability to produce excellent yields of wheat, oats and barley—and flax. Not only this, but the splendid herds of cattle are a source of large revenue. There is a fund of information to be had by reading the Canadian government literature, copies of which may be had free by applying to your nearest Canadian government agent.

Change Food When You Feel Out of Sorts.

"A great deal depends upon yourself and the kind of food you eat," the wise old doctor said to a man who came to him sick with stomach trouble and sick headache once or twice a week, and who had been taking pills and different medicines for three or four years.

He was induced to stop eating any sort of fried food or meat for breakfast, and was put on Grape-Nuts and cream, leaving off all medicines.

In a few days he began to get better, and now he has entirely recovered and writes that he is in better health than he has been before in twenty years. This man is 58 years old and says he feels "like a new man all the time."

BIG FIRE AT MPLS.

CITY THROWN IN DARKNESS FIVE HOURS BY DESTRUCTION OF POWER PLANT.

LOSS IS OVER HALF A MILLION

Disaster Result of an Explosion Caused by Unexplained Trouble in 13,000 Volt Transmission Cable.

Minneapolis. — Thirteen thousand volts of electricity broke from bondage shortly before dawn today, injuring three men, destroying approximately $500,000 worth of property and paralyzing the industries of a city of 300,000. Four separate explosions, accompanied by ear splitting crackling and vivid blue flames, partially wrecked the main power plant of the Minneapolis General Electric Company and started a fire which burned the building to the water's edge.

Say All Men Escaped.

Although officers and employes of the plant assured both the fire department and the police that all got out of the building, there are rumors that bodies may be found when the ruins are searched. The injured are:

Joseph Rhodes, night foreman; painfully bruised about chest; City hospital.

A. L. Severason, burned about face and hands.

Sparks Flash, Then Explosion.

The short circuiting of a cable, caused either by a misplaced metal conductor, a weak spot in insulation, or the sudden burning out of a fuse, is thought to have caused the explosions.

Blistering, blinding arcs of electricity, strong enough to bore through solid steel, burst forth, igniting coal gas in the boiler rooms and communicating to the 20 whirring dynamos on the upper floor of the building.

Cables snapped and writhed, wheels ground and whizzed the electric lights grew dimmer and went out and for the minute the building stood outlined in the ghastly blue light of the destructive electric current playing havoc. Darkness then was followed by a terrific upheaval from the basement. A twenty-foot strip of roof at the front part of the building, rose up in the air followed by tangled masses of wire and machinery. It was a coal gas explosion. Fire followed immediately.

Twelve Men Barely Escape.

Twelve men who had just reported for work made their escape. That none met death either by being caught in the explosion or by electrocution, is considered almost miraculous.

The entire city was in darkness five hours.

Most of the small and medium sized manufacturing concerns were entirely disabled, but most of the larger factories have private plants. The hotels resorted to tallow candles.

Minneapolis was cut off from telegraphic communication with the outer world. The North American and Western Union Telegraph companies, the railroad telegraph service and the entire stock ticker service at the Chamber of Commerce and throughout the city was suspended.

Newspaper plants were sadly crippled. Every daily paper in the city gets its power from the company and it was not until noon that typesetting machines and presses could be operated.

The work done by the company's officials in rehabilitating the service and permitting the current to be turned on by noon, with the arrangements that are being made to get power from the street railway company and private concerns, restored the downtown service, but the residence position is still dark. Work has already begun clearing the ruins, to erect a new million dollar plant.

MAYNARD LOSES $30,000.

Only One Building in a Block Saved in the Minnesota Town.

Maynard.—Fire broke out in the rear of the Habstritt dry goods and grocery store, not only destroying that building and contents, but wiping out four other mercantile houses with their contents.

Owing to the intense cold and scarcity of water the fire got beyond control of the fire company. The total loss will reach $30,000. The only building in the block which was saved was the Maynard State Bank.

The losers were Fred Habstritt, dry goods store, loss about $20,000; P. H. Ruff, harness dealer, $4,000; A. A. Hagen, department store, $3,500; Mrs. Dorn Lawrence, millinery, $1,000; A. J. Shaver, postoffice building and personal property, $1,200; Dr. J. W. Helland, drugs, library, instruments, $2,000.

RESULTS OF CO-OPERATION TOLD

Farmers' and Grain Dealers' Association Meets in Mankato.

Mankato.—The fourth annual convention of the Farmers' and Grain Dealers' Association of Minnesota was held here.

Storms and delayed trains affected the attendance somewhat. Mayor A. G. Mayer gave the address of welcome and President L. A. Smith Truman responded and also gave his annual message.

Miles K. Culver, of St. Ansgar, gave an address on "Co-operation." S. A. Dalton, Minneapolis, who was to have spoken, was prevented from attending by sickness in his family.

President Smith, in his address, told of the good results of co-operative organization and said if this was more generally known the membership would be larger.

R. L. Johnson, Austin, secretary, in his annual report, said that there are 275 co-operative companies handling grain in Minnesota and that 70 of these belong to the association, with a membership of 7,000.

There was a good showing of delegates from these companies present. Mr. Johnson said that, starting eight years ago, the spread of these companies had been rapid. As a rule they buy the farmers' grain and sell them coal and sometimes flour, feed, salt, etc. Most of these companies have been very successful, getting for their members three to ten cents a bushel more for their grain than farmers elsewhere get.

The movement is also strong in other grain growing states, and there are 2,000 companies in all.

The officers are making every effort to increase the membership in Minnesota.

MINNESOTA DISPLAY SECURED.

Good Roads Exhibit Will be Shown at Omaha.

St. Paul.—Minnesota's good roads exhibit, which attracted general attention at the conservation congress, will be shown at the Western Land Products exhibit, Omaha, Jan. 18-28. W. O. Paisley, general manager of the exhibit, has been pulling all the wires he was able to obtain for the Minnesota display, but did not meet with much success until he was able to reach Louis W. Hill, president of the Minnesota highway commission, through a prominent Nebraska newspaper man.

Mr. Paisley was specially anxious in this matter, as he is satisfied that the road exhibit is "the best thing of its kind ever prepared; in fact, much better than the government exhibit." In his opinion he is supported, he says, by the judgment of the government highway engineers themselves.

J. H. Mullin, who arranged the display, will take it to Omaha and will lecture daily on good roads with special reference to the use of local materials in road construction.

REFUSES BEMIDJI'S LICENSE.

War Department Keeps Clear of Liquor Muddle.

Washington.—In answer to an appeal that he grant a liquor license to a hotel in what is known as the Indian country of Minnesota, Secretary of War Dickinson declared that he had no authority to grant such a permit. By this action the secretary declined to interfere with the regulations of Secretary of the Interior Ballinger, which forbids the introduction of spirituous and intoxicating liquors into the Indian country of Minnesota.

The secretary of war was drawn into the matter by the application of Frank S. Lycan, of Bemidji, Minn., for a permit to sell liquor in his hotel, under the federal statute which specifies that such a license can be granted by the secretary of war. This is the only exception in the law to the general prohibition of the introduction of intoxicating liquors. In the view of the war department, however, the exception would apply only in the case of an army post.

CORPORATIONS ARE NOTIFIED

Internal Revenue Collector Sends Out Tax Law Blanks.

Minnesota corporations are receiving blanks from Major Fred von Baumbach, internal revenue collector at St. Paul, on which to forward their data in compliance with the corporation tax law. These blanks will show the capital stock outstanding at the close of the year, total bonded and other indebtedness, gross income, deductions necessary to determine the net income and the amount on which the 1 per cent tax is to be calculated.

Blanks must be returned by March 1 and the assessments must be paid by June. Deductions are allowed for the ordinary and necessary expenses of maintenance and operation, loss not covered by insurance, depreciation in stocks, interest on indebtedness and foreign taxes paid during the year. A specific deduction of $5,000 is allowed from the net income.

Hospital Burns; Patients Safe.

Walker. — The Walker hospital, owned by Dr. F. L. Wilcox, was almost completely destroyed by fire. After three hours' work in a strong north wind and 35 degrees below zero, the fire department extinguished the flames and saved one wing of the hospital. The loss is about $10,000. There were twenty-four patients in the hospital, and three of them were operated upon yesterday, but all were carried in safety to an adjoining building. The fire started near the heating plant.

BAD BOY BANDITS AT DULUTH

SHOOT AT NIGHT CLERK; BIND AND GAG TWO MEN.

Take to Flight After Killing Officer, and a Man Hunt Is Started.

Duluth. — William Muzzary, age twenty, and Algot Johnson, age 19 bell boy and night porter, respectively, of the Hotel McKay, held up and robbed and shot at the night clerk, bound and gagged two other men in the hotel basement and escaped with $50 belonging to the hotel.

The lads were arrested and placed on a streetcar, after a chase through the interstate bridge district. While being brought back to the city they asked permission to go inside the car.

The request being granted Muzzary pulled a revolver from a pocket that had escaped the attention of Harry Chesmore, a policeman, who had made the arrest, and opened fire on that officer, killing him by shooting him in the lungs and forehead.

Trolley Passengers Robbed.

The robbers then held up the passengers and crew of the streetcar, and at 6:30 a. m. made good their escape over the Northern Pacific railroad bridge.

Out on the ice of St. Louis bay policemen have been stationed to prevent an escape into Wisconsin.

The two boys entered the hotel about 3:45 a. m. Clarence Stubsted, the night clerk, and Charles Firoved, the night porter, were standing beside the desk.

"Hold up your hands," shouted one of the boys, pointing a revolver. The clerk and the porter thought the boys were joking. To show they were in earnest, one of the boys fired a shot through the floor near the desk, and the clerk and the porter put their hands above their heads and were bound and gagged.

W. F. HOUK FOR LABOR HEAD.

Minneapolis Man Offered State Bureau Position—His Decision Not Made.

St. Paul. — William F. Houk, day foreman of the composing room of The Minneapolis Tribune, is Governor Eberhart's choice for state labor commissioner to succeed W. E. McEwen. Mr. Houk has not yet given his decision, but it is thought probable he will inform the governor of his intentions later today.

Mr. Houk was not an active candidate for the position and was hit upon by the governor as a man who would give the office a strictly business administration.

Among the candidates for commissioner, all from the ranks of organized labor, who made an aggressive campaign, were Henry Goetzinger and A. H. Garfield, of St. Paul, and John O'Donnell, John Mullane and Joseph Mulholland, of Minneapolis.

Mr. Houk is a member of Minneapolis Typographical union No. 42. He has held practically every office within the gift of the organization. He has been an employe of The Tribune for more than 25 years.

RED WING Y. M. C. A. TO BANQUET

Elaborate Program Arranged for Opening of New Building.

Red Wing. — The opening banquet at the new Y. M. C. A. building promises to be one of the most notable social events of the winter. The Remnica quartet will give selections following an elaborate menu, which will be served. First toast to be responded to will be given by Rev. A. J. Reichert of the English Luthern church, on "Red Wing's Appreciation." J. S. Porteus, president of the Minneapolis Y. M. C. A., will extend greetings from Minneapolis, and A. B. Driscoll, president of the St. Paul Y. M. C. A., will bring congratulations from the capital city. G. M. Palmer, ex-president of the Mankato association, will talk on "A City's Best Asset." Dr. A. E. Haynes of the state university, long connected with the Y. M. C. A. work of Minnesota, will give an address on "Why?" and the closing toast of the evening will be responded to by E. W. Peck, state secretary.

TESTING RIGHTS OF STATE.

Evidence in Suit Against Euclid Iron Company Now Submitted.

Duluth.—Evidence has been submitted in the case of the state against the Euclid Iron Company, but arguments have not been made. It will be some time before a decision may be expected. The issue is the right of the state to the mineral which may be found under the bottoms of meandered lakes in Minnesota. The state claims to be entitled to whatever wealth of any nature that may be found under such bodies of water. The suit against the Euclid Iron Company is a test case.

STATE LIBRARIAN IS NAMED.

E. J. Lien, St. Vincent, Is Appointed to Succeed John King.

St. Paul.—Governor A. O. Eberhart announces the appointment of E. J. Lien, of St. Vincent, as state librarian to succeed John King. Mr. Lien was originally appointed assistant librarian under Governor Van Sant and held office ten years. He had the unanimous indorsement of the state supreme court which controls this appointment.

44 Bu. to the Acre

is a heavy yield, but that's what John Kennedy of Edmonton, Alberta, Western Canada, got from 40 acres of Spring Wheat in 1910. Reports from other districts in that province showed other excellent results—such as 4,000 bushels of wheat from 120 acres, or 33 1-3 bu. per acre. 25, 30 and 40 bushel yields were numerous. As high as 132 bushels of oats to the acre were threshed from Alberta fields in 1910.

The Naughty Little Milliner

A TRUE STORY OF THE SECRET SERVICE

By Col. H. C. Whitley, Former Chief United States Secret Service

THE sympathy of the public is usually bestowed upon the weaker sex, although Heaven knows it is a mistake to suppose that the weakness of humanity is confined to woman alone. Certainly in matters of love and sacrifice she often times proves her self the stronger, and in criminal ways her powers of invention have many times reached the acme of perfection. The subtle devices resorted to by women for pulling the wool over the eyes of the officers of the law are frequently more misleading and difficult to penetrate than the most scientific forgery planned by men.

The several novel expedients resorted to by the Widow Wood, better known in police circles as "The Naughty Little Milliner," for throwing dust into the eyes of the detectives, is indeed a marvelous exemplification of female ingenuity.

It was along in the early seventies when it became known that there was circulating about New Orleans a dangerous counterfeit five dollar treasury note, likewise a pretty good imitation of silver half dollars. A number of these bad five dollar bills were received at the banks and might have passed along undetected had not one of the bankers, more discerning than the others, made the discovery that there notes were counterfeit, though they were well calculated to deceive the average tradesman. The bogus half dollars had been colored with silver dips and were exact facsimiles of the genuine in all except the metal they contained. They passed readily among the foreigners, especially about the French market.

Operator James Fitzpatrick, who was at that time in charge of government secret service affairs in New Orleans, began an investigation for the purpose of ferreting out the source of this bad money. After weeks of anxious watching it was learned that a young girl who dolly visited the French market for the purpose of buying family provisions had, as regularly as she came, left a bogus half dollar. She wore a tattered dress and there was a sorrowful expression settled about her pallid yet interesting features. It was the gentle and dejected expression of her countenance that first attracted the attention of Officer Fitzpatrick. The Gascons and Italian dealers about the market had never made a complaint in regard to the bad money, as they could readily pass it off on one another or at the coffee houses along the river front.

Following the girl one day the officer traced her to a little variety store on St. Joseph street, near the corner of Tchoupitoulas street. After a short time she issued the girl came out of the shop. She was now attired in somewhat above the common garb. Undeterred by fear the officer watched her movements until she finally went into a small grocery store. When she came out she carried a package. It was plain that she had made a purchase. The officer was well out of sight the detective stepped into the little store and requested the Creole lady in attendance to let him see the money that he had received from the girl that had just left the place. It was a new half dollar note that the boy headed out. Looking it over carefully it was found to be one of the bogus kind.

The officer made a plausible explanation that he thought sufficient to satisfy the curiosity of the lady, and was now quite certain that the boy was on the track of the source of the counterfeits and that the occupants of the little variety store were the distributors of the bogus stuff.

Opposite the variety store across the street was the sign "Furnished Rooms to Rent," and Fitzpatrick was fortunate enough to be able to hire a front room where he could sit at the window and watch the suspected place. In the course of a few days he learned that the occupants were mother and daughter. The mother was a widow, quite pretty, about thirty years of age. Her daughter was not more than twelve or fourteen. As the wheels of time rolled on it was learned further that the husband had died but a short time before and that the family had succumbed to New Orleans. It was likewise discovered that the little store was a resort for persons who would bear watching. The officer noticed that the woman who was the occupant occasionally left this place of business carrying a basket on her arm and that she was always looking over her shoulder and peering about as if she suspected she was being watched. Tracking her one day, she led the way to the St. Louis cemetery on Basin street. Approaching a tomb, she knelt down before it and bowed her head as if engaged in prayer. Leaning against a tomb close by was a well-dressed man apparently waiting for some one. As the detective carelessly sauntered along he took a peep at the stranger, and as he did so he saw a signal of recognition between the man and the woman. The latter, having completed her seeming errand of love, peered cautiously around for a moment and retired from the cemetery. The detective thought she might have come there to meet this man, but had been foiled in her intentions by the appearance of a third person.

It was Sunday that the occurrence described took place. On the same day of the week following the detective, disguised as a decrepit old man apparently almost blind, went into the cemetery early and took a seat beside a tomb not far from the one upon which the women had placed the flowers the Sunday before. It was nearly noon-day when the suspected woman with her basket upon her arm came in. The basket was filled with flowers as before. She was dressed in deep mourning and seemingly bent on a sorrowful errand. This time she did not kneel, but sat down beside the tomb and bowed her head as if in contemplation. After a short time the stranger of the week previous entered the cemetery and approached the sorrowing woman by a circuitous route. Neither of these persons seemed to take my notice of the old man leaning upon the nearby tomb. The stronger end woman met and engaged in conversation. They were partially concealed from the view of the old man, who now straightened up and bobbled towards them, upon which the stranger suddenly bolted over an adjoining tomb and took to his heels. The disguised officer rushed up to the widow and demanded to see what she carried in her basket. Upon an examination it was found to contain a set of dies for coining imitation silver half dollars.

The woman was arrested. Her little store was searched, but nothing of an incriminating nature was found there. The woman said her name was Wood, and that her husband had died but a short time before. She had since his death regularly visited the cemetery every Sunday for the purpose of decorating his tomb. She had a young daughter to support and had been sorely pressed for money. The dies which she carried in her basket had been left with her by a man who asked her to sell them for him. On second thought she had resolved not to comply with his request as she feared such an act might be wrong. She had gone to the cemetery that day for the purpose of returning them.

Her explanation was not altogether satisfactory to the mind of Fitzpatrick.

The Widow Wood, notwithstanding her protestations of innocence, was placed upon trial charged with having counterfeit dies in her possession. There was no question in regard to the possession of these dies—but did she have knowledge of their nature, or was she a victim of a cunningly devised scheme of a person who was seeking to dispose of them.

There were at that time existing in New Orleans na in other cities at least two classes of persons ended to sit on juries. On the one hand there was the fellow with the dark brow, who looked with suspicion upon every man in passing counterfeit money. On the other, there was the men who would look upon a man in the light of one who have a neighborly feeling for any person engaged in swindling the public, but have no sympathy with the wretch hoot of him when called upon to sit upon a jury and try a woman for an crime.

The Widow Wood told a lame story in regard to the counterfeit dies, but the tale of her struggles to maintain herself and keep her head above water was touching in the extreme. It brought sympathetic tears to the eyes of the worm-hearted and chivalrous southerners. They could not think of convicting her.

Once evening a few months subsequent to the widow's honorable acquittal, a good-natured gentleman, a member of the jury that had acquitted her, was on his way to his home in New York. "Furnished Rooms to Rent," responded the gentlemen gallantly. home from his office on Carrondolette street. He noticed her in the cozy skirt pulled. Turning around he was not a little astonished to find himself confronted by a prepossessing woman whom he could not remember ever having seen before.

"Are you Mr. Chappela?" she asked in a sweet voice.

Without further ceremony she introduced herself as Mrs. Wood, the lady who had been falsely accused by a United States detective. She said she had a proposition to make and had learned that he was a benefactor to the worthy poor and that she now stood sadly in need of assistance. Her story was that she and her daughter of tender age had been keeping a small variety store and had become heavily involved in debt. Through humiliation and want she had managed to struggle along and eke out an existence. An attachment had now been issued and a keeper put in her little store. Tears glistened in her beautiful brown eyes as she narrated her pitiful tale. She had $10,000,000 that would soon come to her from her father's estate and if she could only stave off the trouble for a short time—

The good hearted southerner's sympathy was not confined to words alone. He went at once to her little store and paid the $300 demanded by the keeper and left her $100 besides to relieve her immediate wants.

It was only a few days following this when Detective Fitzpatrick concluded to enter the Widow Woods' places of business and make a thorough search. He had obtained some new evidence in regard to her dealing with "queer" money.

When he entered the suspected place he discovered that it was nearly empty. Everything of value had been removed. A number of cheap artificial flowers, bits of worn ribbon and lace and smpty handboxes constituted the stock. It was all appearance and no value. The little room in the rear of the place had been the Madam's living quarters; it also was empty except a few tattered garments strewn about.

What puzzled the detective most was to account for the removal of the goods without attracting his attention. The movements of the woman had been carefully watched and the detective had recognized the Carrondolette street broker se he visited the widow's store and the exit effected after of a man very much resembling the stranger who had met the Widow Wood in the cemetery on the occasion of her arrest. It finally came to light that the broker had been done out of four hundred dollars by the widow who had planned the "keeper" scheme with a confederate.

After diligent search about the city the detectives were unable to learn the whereabouts of the widow, who had skipped out for parts unknown. Detective Fitzpatrick was fortunate enough to secure a photograph of her, and a number of copies of it were made and forwarded to the branches of the secret service in the various cities of the country.

She was first recognized in Cincinnati where she had effered a five-dollar counterfeit bill. When arrested and searched, no other bad money was found upon her person, and she was released for the want of sufficient evidence.

A secret service officer, carrying the widow's photograph was sure he had met her while on his way from Washington to New York. He was not quite certain, but was sure enough to attempt to follow her for the purpose of learning her location. She probably "tumbled" to the detective while he was eyeing her intently. She did not affect to notice him, but managed, however, to give him the slip.

Just before the train arrived at Jersey City, the suspected woman arose up from her seat and stepped into the ladies retiring room at the front end. The detective was keeping a sharp eye on this place when the passengers in front of him arose to leave the car. He worked his way as rapidly as possible towards the front exit, and rushing to the ferry landing, he took a position where he could carefully view the face of every woman entering the ferry boat. Not seeing the suspected woman he was the first to spring ashore on the New York side where he again scanned the faces of the women as they passed. He was disappointed and ready to kick himself when he realized how neatly he had been done far.

New York city affords one of the best covers for all classes of criminals. Here the thief mixes with the throng and passes along unnoticed. It was a year or more after the occurrence of the incident just related, when the same detective while rambling about the city chanced to meet a well-dressed woman who bore a marked resemblance to the little milliner. She turned her head and gave him a side glance as he passed. He kept along at a considerable distance and turned just in time to catch sight of her as she stepped into a downtown millinery establishment. Taking up a position at a point diagonally across the street, and sheltering himself a little in a doorway, he was enabled to distinguish persons as they passed in and out of the shop. While he stood watching, a bright looking boy came along with a bundle of newspapers under his arm. The detective called him up and bargained with him to run home back to the office he had followed the woman to a little shop on Ninth avenue. He said she went in and took off her bonnet as though she belonged there.

The detective reported meeting the woman who had so nicely escaped him and had located her in a small store on Ninth avenue where there hung over the door a sign that read "Fine Millinery Work Done Here." It was quite reasonable to believe that the woman was none other than the naughty little milliner from New Orleans and that she was then doing business in New York. Officer Fitzpatrick of New Orleans was the only detective on the force that could positively identify her, but it wouldn't do to bring him for that purpose as he would be due to see him first, and having been put upon her guard she might fly away.

The idea was to plan a ruse for the purpose of capturing her with evidence to convict. For this purpose the following lady came in here one day and called on my bonnets; she wanted a nice one but I could not fit her. She said she lived somewhere in the suburbs and she was in a great hurry. She finally picked out one and said it would do well enough for size, but she wanted it trimmed differently. I then made the alterations as she described but have not seen her since. I have made bonnets for a number of well-to-do people. Some of my customers ride in their carriages within a block of my store and walk the rest of the way, as it would not do for them to be seen in a little store like this. They have recognized the fact that I make the swellest bonnets and sell them at about half the price asked in the large millinery parlors."

"Well, I declare," said the old gentleman, "that is about the kind of a bonnet I want."

"I thought you would fall in love with it," said the little milliner, "as it is beautiful. The woman hasn't called for it, yet even if I thought she would, I will sell it inasmuch as it is going out of town and I can make her another just like it."

After haggling about the price for a time the old gentlemen concluded to buy it.

"I will take it along with me," said he, as he laid down a twenty dollar bill of the National Shoe & Leather bank to pay for it.

The milliner picked up the note and looking it over for a moment, her face lit up with a smile of pleasant sarcasm, as she said, "Look here, old fellow, the bill won't do."

The curious expression upon her face was certainly amusing, and the countryman thought he noticed a lurking smile upon her countenance that betokened sympathy and indicated that she was posted on that kind of money.

"Look here, I know that stuff as well oe you do, so you just keep it and give me something else."

They stood and looked each other in the face. There was a mutual sympathy—two souls with a single thought.

"My name is David Kirkbride," naming a well-known counterfeiter.

"Good gracious," exclaimed the woman," why didn't you say so? I have never met you before, but I have often heard my friend Eva Cole talk about you. What were you thinking about when you came in here?"

"Oh, just about what I told you; besides I thought it was a good chance to shove a twenty."

"Why," said she, "I kept these bonnets at Johnson's and keep them for a stall. If you really want this one, you are welcome to it."

As she became more confidential, she said, putting on a peculiar smile, "Suppose I had given you the change in a bill like this one," as she produced a five dollar bill.

"Well, well," said the old fellow, "it would have been all right with me. But I am keeping pretty sharp at this time; I carry my roll concealed in my tobacco pouch and only keep a little on hand at a time."

"Oh," said she, "you men think you are smart at doing things, but you're slow. I was arrested in Cincinnati by the city detective because I offered a counterfeit bill in payment for a pair of boots, but he searched me and at the police station and couldn't find any of the 'queer' about me. I put up a nice game and was very indignant, and Jim Ruffin, the the chief of police, got scared and turned me loose."

"What do you think? I had more than a thousand dollars of those five dollar bills with me at the time, but they couldn't begin to find them. Just look here," she said; and reaching her hand into an opening in her dress bustle, slipped out a string and drew her bustle to the front.

The coil being opened at the end contained in a pocket, for which, by pulling the string, could move the bustle around her waist at will.

"What do you think of this contrivance for?" Kirkbride inquired.

"You can put your hand into it and, see—"

He pulled out a handful of clean five dollar counterfeit notes. As he did so he expressed great amazement at the ingenuity of her plan.

"I have carried 'phoney' with me for years," she said, "and no one was ever discovered or even suspected it."

At this moment the Jersey farmer reached out and grabbed the widow's bustle. Unbuckling the belt that held it, he pulled it from her person. She was greatly surprised when the real fact that she was at last fairly caught dawned.

The charming little widow was now escorted to my branch office, on Bleecker street. After a long and tedious questioning and convincing argument on my part, she so far yielded as to turn "queusler" and assist the government.

The little woman with the sparkling brown eyes was a fair example of exquisite female shrewdness. The little dodge she played upon the detective who is in pantaloons was "missing" her in the car, was this. She stepped into the 'retiring' room, let down her back hair, removed the long her bonnet out of the window, she put a small worsted cap on her head and "flew her dress (that had been specially made for the purpose and artistically arranged so as to make it long or short) inside out, she bore the appearance of a school girl. An smiling a look of innocent childhood she could meet the gaze of the officer and pass along without discovery.

She was now the entering wedge to the arrest of a number of persons connected with the Miner gang of counterfeiters, and the government was amply compensated for the money expended in running her down through the information she gave.

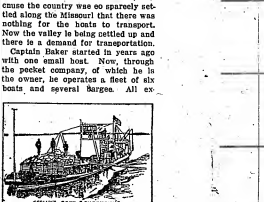
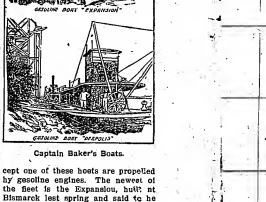
MADE HIM WEALTHY

Fleet on Upper Missouri Operated by Captain Baker.



Runs Six Boats and Several Barges Hauling Coal, Merchandise and Farm Products—Worth a Million.

Bismarck, N. D.—It is commonly believed in Bismarck that Capt. Isaac P. Baker is worth a million dollars. At any rate, he is said to be one of the richest men in North Dakota. And how do you suppose Captain Baker made that much money—for he made it all since he came to Bismarck? He made the beginning of it running steamboats on the Missouri river, and he has been making money with them ever since.



It isn't generally known below Sioux City that the only regular navigation on the Missouri at present is west of Bismarck. That is true, however, and Captain Baker's fleet is the carrier of a commerce that frequently runs as high as thirty thousand tons in a season.

In fact, Captain Baker has seriously been considering the operation of boats through to Fort Benton. Years ago boats ran regularly to Fort Benton. When the railroads went through Montana the business ceased, because the country was sparsely settled along the Missouri that there was nothing for the boats to transport. Now that valley is being settled up and there is a demand for transportation.

Captain Baker started in years ago with one small boat. Now, through the pocket company, of which he is the owner, he operates a fleet of six boats and several barges. All except one of these boats are propelled by gasoline engines. The newest of the fleet is the Expansion, built at Bismarck last spring and said to be the lightest draft boat ever put upon the Missouri river. It is 124 feet 7 inches long, 21 feet 5 inches beam and draws ten inches of water light. On a draft of three feet it carries 150 tons, and loaded to its capacity it will carry three hundred tons. The Expansion is propelled by a 350-horsepower gasoline engine and travels four and one-half miles an hour against the current. Captain Baker's other boats are the Prayne, the Deapedis, the Washburn, the O. K. and the Bismarck.

GASOLINE BOAT "EXPANSION"

GASOLINE BOAT "DEAPEDIS"

Captain Baker's Boats.

West of Bismarck the railroads touch the Missouri valley in only a few places, and the farmers, instead of hauling their grain inland to the railroads, haul it to the river for shipment by boat. At each of the leading Captain Baker has a small elevator, where the grain is stored until shipment. Then, when a boat comes along, the grain is loaded in bulk and carried down to Bismarck, where it is unloaded by a movable hoist into the elevator at the top of the bank and then run into the cars. The fleet now run up the Missouri river as far as the mouth of the Milk river in Montana and down the river as far as Washburn, the O. K. and the Bismarck.

West of Bismarck the railroads touch the Missouri valley in only a few places, and the farmers, instead of hauling their grain inland to the railroads, haul it to the river for shipment by boat. At each of the leading Captain Baker has a small elevator, where the grain is stored until shipment. Then, when a boat comes along, the grain is loaded in bulk and carried down to Bismarck, where it is unloaded by a movable hoist into the elevator at the top of the bank and then run into the cars. The fleet now run up the Missouri river as far as the mouth of the Milk river in Montana and down the river as far as Glendive, Mont. On the up trips the boats carry all kinds of merchandise, small lumber, machinery and other supplies to the farmers and the merchants. Downstream, before the grain movement begins, they carry livestock, wool, hides, hay and other farm products.

Out of the last appropriation for the Missouri river, $82,600 was set aside for work at Bismarck and other points up the Missouri, and most of which is $10,000 to clear rocks from the channel so that boats may get to Fort Benton without danger.

Nearly as Popular as the Bible.

London.—Dickens' public passes beyond the bounds of the English tongue. There is America—with its 85,000,000 of people and its widespread, its fervent, regard for Charles Dickens. There is France; where Daudet could write: "Little Nell and Paul Dombey came to me as a revelation of purity and innocence." There is Germany, where, as Bunsen said, "Dickens compels tears and laughter among Germans as among his own people." There is Russia where Tolstoi relates that he found the "Christmas Carol" in the cabins of the humblest serfs, and where "Oliver Twist" and "Nicholas Nickelby" are read in two different translations by the realms of the czar.

It is futile to multiply evidences of the universality of the genius of Dickens. Next to the Bible and Shakespeare, his books enjoy the widest popularity.

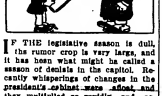
Senatorial Trifles Cost Much Money

WASHINGTON.—The vanities, follies and eccentricities of statesmen are brought a trifle further into the limelight through the secretary of the senate's annual report, made public in congress. It discloses the little odds and ends of luxury and comfort near a senator's heart, whom it can be obtained at government expense.

From May 1 to June 25 there were 722 cases of "appollnaris splits furnished the senate, costing $1,656. Taxicabs for taking senators home at the close of sessions cost $110. Twenty-six boxes of loznoos were used during the month of July last year. They cost more than $175. It required two barrels of granulated sugar, costing $16.33, to sweeten them.



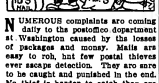
Five gallons of witchhazel cost $2.25. One dozen bottles soda mint and pepsin tablets to cure indigestion ware purchased for $44.20. Three large bottles of bromo seltzer were worth $2. Nineteen dozen of assorted hair brushes cost $8.30. Ten cases of soap were obtained for $27.50. Twenty-four dozen whisk brooms aggregated $60.

One bag of ground alum salt cost $1; two ounces of quince seed, 25 cents; one quart of castor oil, 40 cents; one dram oil rose, $1, and two bottles of salbopatica, 90 cents. Two thousand quinine pills were bought. The small items of the pharmacy and toilet cost $215.47. One pound of snuff, to replenish the two boxes just within the senate chamber cost 80 cents.

The items in the report, printed in fine type, cover more than 700 pages. Any one who has a lurking suspicion that senators don't imbibe water freely should glance at the record of $1,824 spent for apollinaris water. More than $3,000 was expended for other mineral waters.

A number of senators drew practically nothing against their annual allowance of $125 for stationery, and they are given a refund of the amount. Others, not using stationery users, the amount of their commutation account being small.

Crop of Capital Rumors Is Abundant



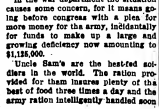
IF THE legislative season is dull, the rumor crop is very large, and it has been what might be called a season of denials in the capitol. Recently whisperings of changes in the presidential cabinet were afloat, and they multiplied so rapidly and assumed such distorted shapes that they led to vigorous denials from the white house authorities. The two in particular that were whispered around were the resignation of Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh and the elevation of Mr. Taft's secretary, Charles D. Norton, to the place, and the elevation of Congressman James A. Tawney to the position now occupied by Secretary of the Interior Richard A. Ballinger. Both called forth the most vigorous denials.

Aside from denying rumors, President Taft's chief work has been along the line of the Panama canal zone, which he intends bringing to the attention of congress very soon. The president has recommended and is preparing to urge legislation appropriating large sums for the fortification of both entrances to the canal zone, and this in itself will cause a struggle. In addition there is pending before the senate a bill, already passed by the house, replacing the canal commission by a director general at the head of a civil government, the details of which are being worked out by the president.

Moreover, there is the question of canal tolls, which on the recommendation of the president is being worked out in a bill by Chairman Mann of the house committee on inter-state commerce. He is also anxious that the tolls to be charged be decided on at this session, so that there will be time for the world's commerce to adjust itself to the proper rates.

On the subject of fortifying the canal there has already developed opposition in the house, which leaders can be counted on to vote for fortifications, many long speeches will be made on the other side either by peace advocates or by congressmen generally hostile to the expenditure of money on the canal. The election of United States senators by popular vote is also looming up.

Postal Thieves Reported Plentiful



NUMEROUS complaints are coming daily to the postoffice department at Washington caused by the losses of packages and money. Mails are easy to rob, but few postal thieves ever escape detection. They are sure to be caught and punished in the end. No thief is harder to catch than are those who rob the government's mail. Their methods are skillful and the plunder is easily hidden or destroyed. Postoffice thieves are not arrested every day, although valuable letters and other articles are stolen almost daily and an army of sharp inspectors are on the watch. Positive proof of guilt must be in the possession of the inspector before an arrest is made. Circumstantial evidence does not go at any time. In almost every case an arrest means conviction.

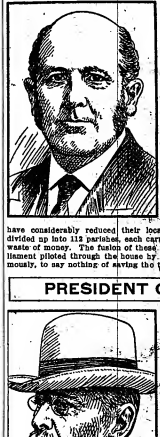
The postoffice employes never knows when he is being shadowed. Outside of business hours, even, he may be watched, when not under suspicion of theft, to see if he is spending more money than his salary will allow.

It is wonderful that there are as few thieves among the many thousands of clerks who handle the mails, the great temptation surrounds them, as they handle millions of valuable parcels. These clerks soon learn to tell by the very touch of a letter whether it contains money. It would be an easy matter for the dishonest clerk to slip letters into his pocket and open them in some private place.

Living Expense Doesn't Effect Army

SOLDIERS of the regular army read of the high cost of living and smile. It is not a matter of partisan interest to them, for the commissary is bound to issue the regular ration at regular intervals, regardless of what the cost may be.

In the war department the situation causes some concern, for it means going before congress with a plea for more money for the army, incidentally for funds to make up a large and growing deficiency now amounting to $1,135,000.



Uncle Sam's are the best-fed soldiers in the world. The ration provided for them insures plenty of the best of food three times a day and the army ration intelligently handled soon produces a company fund, from the sale of commodities not used, sufficient to keep the mess table supplied with luxuries.

A few years ago at western posts the commissary could easily contract for beef at 5 cents a pound, half the price now demanded. The skyward tendency of life's necessities is of merely passing interest to the enlisted men, though it is a real tragedy to the young officers. Those of the junior grades draw very low pay considering the incidental expenses their position requires. For a second lieutenant the salary of $116 a month, particularly if he be stationed at some eastern post, is forever falling short. These young officers live in a mess—a real mess—these days when the cost of living is twice as much as it used to be, and it never did fit the salary.

Friends of young army officers sometimes exert themselves to have them detailed for duty in Washington. If he has money outside his pay account this may not ruin him.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

FIRST TEETOTAL LORD MAYOR

Sir Thomas Vezey Strong, the new lord mayor of London, is the first in the long history of the office to be a teetotaler. He has drunk nothing stronger than water all his life, and doesn't intend to.

Two great events will mark the reign of Sir Vezey at the Mansion house. The first, of course, is King George's coronation, at which he will not have to officiate in any way, but he will receive a baronetcy as a nice little memento. The second is the five hundredth anniversary of the Stationers' guild, and in this he will take a prominent part. He is a past master of the guild, and his year of office synchronizes happily with its quincentenary. In connection with this Sir Vezey has suggested the building of an art gallery really worthy of the city of London.

London has cause to be grateful to its new lord mayor for two schemes which he has started through, which have considerably reduced their local taxes. Until recently the city was divided up into 112 parishes, each carrying out its own local work with great waste of money. The fusion of these into one parish, by a special act of parliament piloted through the house by Sir Vezey, simplified the working enormously, to say nothing of saving the taxpayers four cents in every $5.

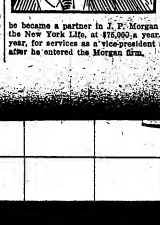
PRESIDENT OF I. C. QUITS

James T. Harahan, once a freight clerk, engineer and passenger conductor, then president of the Illinois Central railroad, celebrated his seventieth birthday anniversary by formal resigning. The retiring railroad chief will be awarded a pension of about $50,000. He has received an average salary of $20,000 for the last ten years. He is said to be the owner of plantations in Memphis, Tenn., and of a possess much other property.

Mr. Harahan, however, will not retire from railroad activities. He remains a director of the Illinois Central railroad, the Southern railroads, and his counsel frequently will be sought by the officials of these transportation systems. The retiring president of the Illinois Central is expected to be in close touch with the affairs of the road.

Mr. Harahan, his fellow railroad men say, is the true type of the old-fashioned railroad man, passing away. "He did things in an old-fashioned way, but he never lacked thoroughness," said one of his associates. "He is a man, gruff on the surface, but so genial, kindly and noble when you get to know him that knowing him is loving him."

PRINCETON'S HEAD RESIGNS



Genuine regret is felt in educational circles because of the resignation of Dr. Henry Van Dyke as Murray professor of English literature in Princeton university. He had been at Princeton since 1900 and his historical lectures were the most popular at this renowned seat of learning.

Dr. Van Dyke is one of the foremost educators in the country and is a distinguished author. He was born in Germantown, Pa., in 1852 and graduated from Princeton in 1873 and later from the University of Berlin. In 1878 he was pastor of the United Congregational church of Newport, R. I., and from 1883 to 1900 and again in 1902 of the Brick Presbyterian church, New York. Lately he had been "minister in charge" of the Brick church, but has severed that relationship. He has also been a lecturer at Yale and Harvard.

Dr. Van Dyke has written many works, among them "The Reality of Religion," "The Story of the Psalms," "The Christ Child in Art," "The Gospel for an Age of Doubt," "The Builders" and other poems. It is probable that with his resignation as professor at Princeton he will devote himself more fully to writing.

HEARD OPPORTUNITY KNOCK

Some men never heed the coming of opportunity. When her approach is heralded by a gentle tapping he whose door is so favored should ever have his ear attuned to catch the slightest sound, for he probably does not tarry. One of those who so listened, who was ready when the summons came and who has certainly made good in the business world is George W. Perkins, the retiring partner of J. P. Morgan & Co.

At forty-nine Mr. Perkins is in the prime of life and retires from active business with a fortune estimated at a good many millions of dollars. He began his business career at fifteen, with a yearly salary of $300 as an office boy in the employ of the Chicago branch of the New York Life Insurance company, of which his father was long a general agent. He was steadily advanced until in 1901, when he became a partner in J. P. Morgan & Co., he was second vice-president of the New York Life, at $75,000 a year. This salary was reduced to $25,000 a year, for services as a vice-president and chairman of the finance committee, after he entered the Morgan firm.

TALES of GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Sad-Faced Swindler Haunts Funerals

NEW YORK.—A well dressed young man with downcast eyes has recently been visiting homes on the East Side that have been visited by death, exchanging sympathy for a square meal. In most cases he left the houses richer not alone by food but by substantial gifts of money and clothing. His last experience, though, sent him every somewhat less sympathetic than when he approached the mourners.

It is customary in Jewish homes for the husband or wife and the children of a dead person to observe a period of seven days' mourning, in which they sit constantly together in one room. In these seven days, called the "Shiva," the mourners' grief is unrestrained save for such comfort as they can draw from their religion.

In the midst of this period of mourning there recently appeared at one house a rather good looking young man with infinite pity in his sad brown eyes. Like all other comers at such a time, he was ushered directly into the room of mourning, where the widow and orphans sat. "I am so sorry, dear madam," he said, with a slight German accent, to the widow, "I read about your dear, husband's death in the newspapers. It may seem strange to you that I have come here, for you probably do not know me, but I feel almost as if I have a personal interest in your dear husband's death. As a matter of fact, I bear his very name. He was my namesake."

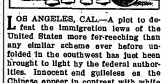
In the course of the next half hour he managed, in answering the kind questions that were put to him, to disclose the fact that he had only recently come from Germany, bringing his wife and several children with him, and that both he and they were at present badly stranded and without money than a few cents for the next meal.

Just then a woman among the assembled friends who had been trying to place him looked up with a glance of sudden recognition.

"You ste your fill at my house wher we were sitting 'Shiva' for my poor husband!" cried the woman. 'And you know how to be his namesake and swindle us out of a memorial gift at that time, didn't you? And now you come to be somebody else's namesake, with your wife and seven children, and to try to dupe them, too!"

But he had gone.

Stray Letters Puzzle "Nixie" Clerk



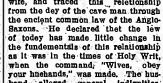
CHICAGO.—Working away like the proverbial trooper, the "nixie" clerk was discovered behind a battlement of pigeon holes, in the Chicago postoffice. He was plying his trade of finding the destination of misdirected letters and of letters whose addresses other clerks had been unable to decipher. He was too busy to talk.

That more information regarding the "nixie" department might be gained, C. A. Mallory, assistant superintendent of the city delivery, was sought his office.

"The 'nixie' clerks," explained Mr. Mallory, "form an important part of Uncle Sam's postal service. They work out puzzle after puzzle in hieroglyphics and erroneous addressing and through their efforts much mail matter that otherwise would be lost finds where it should.

"For explanation we will say that a railway postal clerk find a letter addressed to John Smith, Chestnut street, Illinois. That letter, incompletely addressed, is thrown into the 'nixie' pile in the postal mail car and finds its way to the 'nixie' department, in this case, say, in Chicago. The 'nixie' clerk consults a translation, which lists the various Chestnut streets in Illinois and tells in what towns they will be found. He then consults the directory of each of those towns. A supply of directories is kept on hand—until he finds a John Smith living in Chestnut street. Then the letter is readdressed and sent. Should this chance to be the wrong John Smith and the letter is returned a similar process is followed. Before every method is exhausted you may feel reasonably sure that the right person has received the letter.

Gigantic Smuggling Scheme Exposed



LOS ANGELES, CAL.—A plot to defeat the Immigration laws of the United States more far-reaching than any similar scheme ever before unfolded in the southwest has just been brought to light by the federal authorities. Innocent and guileless as the Chinese appear in contrast with white persons when brought in contact with them, the government agents give credit to this race for having organized the most gigantic coolie-smuggling system ever known to exist. The federal officers for the southern district of California are confident that they are in possession of the entire plan by which the hordes of Orientals have been poured into the United States by the way of the Mexican border.

The conspiracy against the immigration regulations is understood to reach from Texas and California through Mexico, across the Pacific and into the heart of China, end to involve Chinese of high caste and immense wealth.

At the head of the band of smugglers are Chinese of high caste who reside in Hong Kong.

The coolies are procured from the interior of China. They are gathered easily there and shipped across the Pacific to Mexellan, Mexico, where they are unloaded. They are marched through Mexico to Mexicali, just across the border from Calexico. Here Nug Fun and Wong Chin Dock hevo pretended to carry on a store, but it has really been a cover for contraband Chinese, the point at which they were sneaked into the United States.

Judge Decrees That Wives Must Obey

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—In granting a decree of divorce to Samuel C. McGee, a policeman, against Mrs. Louisa S. McGee, Judge T. A. Frank Jones, in the Circuit Court, arraigned wives who have shown themselves to usurp the authority of their husbands. He dwelt upon the relationship that should exist between husband and wife, and traced this relationship from the day of the creation man through the ancient common law of the Anglo-Saxons. He declared that the law of today has made little change in the fundamentals of this relationship as it was in the times of Holy Writ, when the command: "Wives, obey your husbands," was made. The husband alleged general indignities, which the wife denied. The judge said:

"A man is the master of his own household. The law vests certain authority in him. When a women marries she volunterily gives up many of the rights she had as a single women, and she must submit to her husband's authority. She agrees to submit to his dictation and she must submit to it so long as it is not arbitrary and tyrannical.

"Whenever a wife works for money, she is bound to give part of it to help support the family. So long as she does not work for money, she has a right to demand that her husband support her properly. But when she does work outside her own household for gain, she forfeits that right and must, in the discretion of her husband, help pay the way of the family.

"It makes no difference if her husband stays at home, does the cooking and the housework and she makes the living. Under the law, the husband is still the master of that household and she must submit to his authority."

BOYS AND THE FARM.

The department of agriculture is proving its value constantly in many ways, but in none more definitely and clearly than in the encouragement of American youth to adopt the cultivation of the soil as a career. It is vitally essential that the children of farmers make themselves till the land their fathers and their grandfathers have tilled, says the Washington Star. They are potentially the best farmers. If they move to the city to learn trades or to enter the professions or to drift ineffectively through life, somebody must take their places to grow the crops essential to the feeding of the people. A dangerous tendency exists toward the elimination of the small farmer and the substitution of the syndicate, or the large individual holder of land. This destroys competition at the source of the necessities of life. It tends unmistakably to higher prices and to the increase in the number of non-producing individuals. Every by making the farm attractive and profitable can say headway be made against this city-drifting disposition, with its inevitable consequence of dangerous concentration. The telephone, the electric car, the rural free delivery and to some extent the good roads movement have all contributed to lessen the disadvantages of rural existence. Now comes science, leading to an increase in the profits and in the dignity of farming. It is important that the competition among the boys in the south which has just been brought to so successful a conclusion should be extended into all parts of the country.

Where is the psychologist who can give an explanation of the different ways in which the weather affects sports? There are baseball and football, for instance. Both are strenuous games, yet one flourishes like a green bay tree in the good old summer time, no matter how hot, and the other thrives only in a frosty atmosphere. Players and spectators seem to be in the same boat. When the sun shines the hottest the heroes of the diamond are warmed up to their limberest and their best, while the lookers-on occupying the bleachers just roast and are happy. But let a cold blast blow across the field and baseball shrinks like a delicate flower touched by frost. On the other hand footballers want it cold and raw and really prefer a near-zero temperature and a flurry of snow, if they can get had. Such conditions appear to put "ginger" into every brawny member of the eleven. And the crowds on the grandstand forget all about the weather while watching the wonderful dodges of their favorite players.

In the matter of dress we have fallen upon a decline since the days when the Duke of Wellington was refused admission to Almack's because he was wearing trousers instead of breeches and silk stockings, says the London Chronicle. Even Almack's, however, had to admit trousers within its closely guarded portals the following year. When Gladstone was "up" at Oxford the reign of the dandies was in full swing. When late in life he revisited the university to lecture to the undergraduates on Homer he was asked by G. W. E. Russell whether he noticed any difference between his audience and the men of his own time. "Yes," he replied, "in their dress an enormous change. I can told that I had among my audience some of the most highly connected and richest men in the university, and there wasn't one whom I couldn't have dressed from top to toe for £5."

The "wild garlic" which infests portions of Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana is a common plant first seen in Pennsylvania. A farmer in southern Indiana secured some seed wheat from the Ohio Valley, and noticed the presence of the celebrated plant in the resulting crop. He gave it no further thought, as "the entire infested plot might have been carried away in his hat." And yet within three years the wheat from that section of the country was refused by all millers because of the intolerable garlic, the seeds of which are about the same size as large wheat grains. In certain localities land values have been sorely affected by the presence of this weed.

A singular point evoked by recent prosecutions of fortune-tellers and palmists in another city is the fact that their insight into the futures of other people gave them no inkling of the evil influences that were about to haul themselves into the police courts.

They figure it out that the moon is now 17,000 miles nearer the earth than usual. Everything seems to be coming down a bit.

BATTLE IS FOUGHT

DISPATCH FROM MEXICAN BORDER TELLS OF RESUMPTION OF WARFARE.

MORE THAN 40 ARE SLAIN

Insurrectos Reported to Have Held Federal Troops at Bay for Three Hours When Latter Withdrew and Went Into Camp.

San Antonio, Tex.—According to advices received in this city Thursdays more than forty participants were killed in a serious battle that took place between the Mexican federal troops and the revolutionists just across the border.

The news came from Ed. O'Reilly, a newspaper correspondent who has been at the front in Mexico near the International line, and was received here in a dispatch dated Comstock, Tex. It reads:

"Big fight; more than forty killed; bit myself."

The insurrectos, it is reported, held the federals at bay for three hours, after which the latter withdrew two miles and went into camp.

This telegram indicates a reopening of hostilities after a lull of about a month, or since the insurgents fought a draw battle with the forces of General Navarro at Cerro Prieto and soon afterward joining the federal commander's men in se ambuscade near Mal Paso and inflicted on them heavy losses.

SAYS TRUST WAR A "SHAM"

Samuel Untermyer Declares Little Corporations Are Pursued While Large Ones Let Go.

New York.—In an address before the annual meeting of the National Civic federation Thursday Samuel Untermyer attacked the government's attitude toward the trusts as a "monstrous sham" and said that the large and "vicious" corporations go unmolested while "the little fellows are being pursued with a mass hatred and the greatest press lareau ever put in action."

Mr. Untermyer first blamed the courts and the government, since the enactment of the Sherman anti-trust law in 1890, for failing to suppress the crimes it was passed to prevent and thus permitting the growth of "vicious" corporations. He then charged the present administration with prosecuting only the small combinations, such as the window-glass and bath-tub associations, which he claimed were innocent of criminal intent.

As a solution for the trust problem, the speaker advocated rigid federal regulation, asserting that state control was confusing and inadequate. He also maintained that the expression "guilt is personal" was merely "a political catch-phrase" and really had no bearing on the question. Federal regulation, he believed, would preserve all the benefits of combination, such as the elimination of destructive competition, while avoiding its evils.

Mother is Slain by Boy.

Joliet, Ill.—Matthew Wilson, aged fifteen, shot and killed his mother, Mrs. Lillian Wilson, while playing with a toy air rifle in the kitchen of their home. Believing the weapon was unloaded the boy in a spirit of fun pointed it at his mother, pulled the trigger, the bullet penetrated her brain and she sank to the floor dead.

Houghton, Mich.—Robert Williams, seventeen years old, died Wednesday in Hancock hospital as a result of being impaled on a ski stick which penetrated his bowels. The stick is used in propelling a ski rider.

New York Ware on Lung Hatpin.

New York.—New York city will join the list of cities which have legislated against the long hatpin evil. An ordinance was introduced in the board of aldermen Wednesday. It provides a $50 fine.

HOLSTLAW NO LONGER SENATOR

ESCAPES DISMISSAL FROM SENATE BY RESIGNATION.

Committee Reports Sufficient Evidence is Found to Warrant His Removal From Illinois Senate.

Springfield, Ill.—D. W. Holstlaw of Iuka, confessed bribe taker, has escaped dismissal from the senate by his resignation, sent in a few days ago.

The senate investigating committee which has been hearing testimony in regard to bribery in connection with the election of Senator William Lorimer reported Wednesday that, although it had found sufficient evidence to warrant the removal of Holstlaw, it was not in its power to recommend such action in view of his official resignation, directed to the governor.

Prior to the reading of the committee's report a communication from Governor Deneen was presented to the senate which stated that the executive had received the resignation of Holstlaw dated January 4, and that the office of senator from the Forty-second district was, therefore, vacated.

Lieutenant Governor Oglesby then declared Holstlaw's seat vacant.

TARIFF BOARD WON.

Beveridge Declares Before Business Men's Convention Commission is Assured.

Washington.—The convention of the national tariff commission was stirred to great enthusiasm by Senator Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana, when he declared that although the permanent tariff commission was practically assured, a still greater victory —the triumph of organized public opinion—would be marked by the creation of the commission itself.

He said that the American people had a right to demand of congress the establishment of a commission that would commend the "same dignity and have the same adequacy of powers as the interstate commerce commission."

He predicted that the present session of congress would see the enactment of tariff commission legislation, but he added that the convention is silent, through its representatives in congress, on a non-partisan, all-powerful commission.

WIFE SUES N. Y. FIRE CHIEF

Mrs. Edward F. Croker Files Papers for Separation—Alleges Abandonment and Incompatibility.

New York.—Despite all efforts to keep the fact a secret, it has become known that on last Monday the wife of Fire Chief Edward F. Croker filed papers in a suit for separation. The causes she assigns are abandonment, insufficient support and incompatibility. Counsel for Chief Croker said that his client would file his bill inside of thirty days. He added that Mrs. Croker's extravagances have left her husband with only his monthly salary.

FIVE DEAD IN OHIO CITY FIRE

Believed More Bodies Are in Ruins of Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce Building.

Cincinnati—Five men are known to have been killed and there is a possibility of several more being dead as the result of the fire that destroyed the chamber of commerce building on Tuesday night.

At the annual meeting of the chamber of commerce Wednesday steps were taken to build an entirely new building where the other one stood.

Pension Records Destroyed.

Washington.—Thousands of records and documents in pension cases were destroyed Friday in a fire which originated in the office of the United States pension agency in the pension bureau building here.

Mormon Leader is Dead.

Seattle, Wash.—News of the death of Dr. E. G. Cannon, one of the most prominent physicians of Nome, Alaska, and head of the Mormon church in the Seward district, was received here Friday.

FIVE DIE IN WRECK

PASSENGERS IN SLEEPING CAR CRUSHED UNDER LOCOMOTIVE AT BATAVIA, N. Y.

TWO ARE FATALLY INJURED

New York Central's Boston Special Struck by No. 23, From New York, When Standing at Station—Bodies Not Identified.

Batavia, N. Y.—Five men are dead, two were probably fatally injured and eight others seriously hurt in the wreck of the Western Express and the Boston and Buffalo special, both westbound, at the station here of the New York Central railroad Friday. The victims were all in the rear sleeper of the special.

The engine of train 23, the western express from New York to Chicago, struck the rear of 49, the Boston and Buffalo express, with such force that the last car of No. 49, a sleeper, was crushed.

The engine was reduced to wreckage, beneath which four bodies were found. The multilation was so great and steam played such havoc that early identification was impossible.

The bodies are:

Man, fifty years old, probably Casimir C. Perrin, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Masonic charm found beneath body in crushed berth.

Man, about thirty years old; smooth face, plain gold band ring, the word "Engagement" engraved inside.

Man, about thirty-five; ring marked "F. J. S."

Man, about forty.

Robert McFarland, Detroit, Mich.

The injured: H. H. Cade, Chicago; probably fatally hurt; F. G. Ven Dusen, Painesville, N. Y., conductor, probably will die; Monte C. Prieus, Indianapolis; serious; C. C. Hamilton, Worcester, Mass., Pullman conductor; R. A. Smith, Rochester; James A. Moore, lawyer, Buffalo; H. L. Hinman, Penn Yan, N. Y.; Catherine Higgins and son, Thomas Higgins, Richland, N. Y.; John Shaw, Toronto, Ont.; Mrs. John Shaw; Abram Cole, porter, Boston.

Almost all the passengers were asleep when the shock came. There were desperate struggles with debris and many of the passengers not reported among the injured at the hospitals were exhausted because of their efforts to extricate themselves from the shattered car and to help others.

Escaping steam from the punctured boiler of the locomotive added to the torture of those disabled and delayed the work of rescue.

Engineer J. B. Lydall, whose locomotive caused the wreck, made a statement in which he said he saw a cautionary light 4,000 feet east of the station and a signal against him 300 feet from the station, but was unable to bring his engine to a stop owing to slippery rails. He is said to be prostrated.

FIVE DEAD IN GAS BLAST

Ten-Cent Store is Blown Up at Connellsville, Pa.—Twelve Persons Injured.

Connellsville, Pa.—Five persons were killed and twelve injured in a gas explosion that wrecked a wellfilled ten-cent store here about noon Thursday. The fire that followed completely destroyed the building.

Clerks and customers were buried in the collapse of the walls. One young woman went mad in entirely upon her release from the debris after rescuer and burned to death. The heat and smoke was so intense that all attempts at rescues were futile. Only three of the victims, all girl clerks, have been identified.

The failure of workmen to cap the supply pipe after removing a meter gas meter caused the blaze.

STRIKE IN ALL PORTUGAL

Rail Employes Walk Out; Business Houses Close—Premier Says Paralysis is General.

Lisbon.—A majority of the railroad employees in Portugal have gone on a strike. The government had long been informed of the movement and took active measures to maintain the service, with partial success.

Following the example of the railway men the employes of the commercial houses quit work on the ground that the government had failed to issue a decree fixing the limit of a day's work at 12 hours and providing one day of rest in seven.

As a consequence of this action many business places in this city are closed and the efforts of Senhor Moraes, premier, to extend the movement to the provinces.

CALLS JOHN D. A. GENIUS

ATTORNEY BEFORE COURT DENIES CONCERN IS A TRUST.

Reviews Chaotic Conditions of Early Oil Business and Eulogizes Head of New Jersey Company.

Washington.—Arguing before the supreme court of the United States against the proposed dissolution of the Standard Oil company of New Jersey as violative of the Sherman anti-trust law, John G. Milburn of New York addressed the court for three hours.

His task was to present to the court the "facts" in the case, but he did depart from the facts now and then to show what alleged wrongs the affirmance of the dissolution decree of the lower court would inflict.

In his history of chaotic conditions in the oil business between 1860 and 1870, due, he said, to an overproduction of refining capacity, Mr. Milburn introduced to the court the character of John D. Rockefeller.

A statute of New Hampshire prohibiting a bequest to a church of over $5,000 annually is the basis of the opinion written by Professor Taylor. Referring to the residuary clause as "null and void" the opinion says:

"As to the void gift, the testatrix died intestate and its subject matter passed on her death to her next of kin, under the New Hampshire statute of distribution."

In the closing paragraph the opinion defines the attorneys for the next of kin that such agreements as they made with Mrs. Eddy and her trustees in her lifetime bind them only "to recognize as valid such provisions of her last will as are legally valid."

KELLOGG FLAYS OIL TRUST

Declares Standard Was Born and Reared in Oppression—Assails John C. Rockefeller's Veracity.

Washington.—The government's side of the story of the Standard Oil corporation, with all the charges of sins laid at its doors, was placed in court before the Supreme court of the United States by Frank B. Kellogg, special assistant to the attorney general, who, in an address of three and a half hours' duration, on Friday endeavored to show that the combine should be dissolved in accordance with the decree entered by the federal court in Missouri.

"The Standard," he said, "was born and reared in oppression and heaps today over the country like a threatening cloud."

Mr. Kellogg said John D. Rockefeller either did not tell the truth in an affidavit he made in a suit in 1890 about the alleged connection of certain refineries with the trust or when he was on the stand in the present suit.

"Didn't he offer any explanation of the affidavit when he was on the stand in this case?" inquired Justice Lurton.

"No; he couldn't," responded Mr. Kellogg.

Mr. Kellogg showed that the profits of the Standard Oil were so vast as scarcely to be conceivable. He introduced the Standard Oil company of Indiana. On a capitalization of $30,000,000 this company earned in 16 years $68,000,000 in earnings, $30,000,000 of which it had paid in dividends, the remainder being undistributed profits plus. He produced figures to prove that some of the Standard Oil's pipe lines had paid on an investment of 1,950 per cent. on the capital, others paying from 100 to 250 per cent.

EDDY WILL DECLARED VOID

Gift of $2,000,000 to "Mother" Church is Said to Be Illegal.

Concord, N. H.—Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy's $2,000,000 bequest to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, known as the "Mother Church," is null and void under the New Hampshire law, according to certain legal lights, and it is possible that her sons may get the estate.

The bequest is made in the will, leaving the $2,000,000 to the "Mother" church, is not legal, in the opinion of Ex-United States Senator William E. Chandler, Hennis Taylor, the professor of constitutional law at George Washington university, and others. Their opinion was given out for publication here.

THE GROWTH OF TOWNS IN WESTERN CANADA

A BAROMETER OF THE GROWTH OF THE AGRICULTURAL DISTRICTS.

The traveler passing through a country is impressed favorably or otherwise by the appearance of the towns along the line of railways. As they appear prosperous and healthy growth he at once assures himself that there is either a local industrial factor in excess of, or a splendidly developed agricultural area from which is drawn the resources that contribute or make for the growth that is so readily apparent. On the other hand, if evidence of impoverished streets, badly appearing residences and business places and lethargic citizens, there is an absence of local industry and surrounding agricultural prosperity. There is no line of railway, whether main or branch, throughout western Canada, that through the towns or cities that are built along the ribs of steel do not convey the most favorable impression. The cause is not always apparent, but the facts are there and easily seen. In most cases the growth and the stability of these towns are caused by the excellent agricultural districts that are tributary; in some cases, manufacturing enterprises have sprung up, caused by the agricultural demands and needs. The Winnipeg Free Press and the Edmonton Bulletin have recently sent corps of correspondents through the provinces to secure data concerning the growth of the two or three hundred towns that have come into existence during the past two or three years. The particulars make interesting reading, and as one reads of the station house, the blacksmith shop, the boarding house and the store at April, being inserted in August by a hundred or more dwellings, by large banks, by splendid stores, and a half dozen implement warehouses, not forgetting the two or three churches and the excellent public school buildings, it causes one to stop and think if they ever heard of such marvelous growth, as certainly not often. These are facts, though, as related of western Canada. Thee, then, are new cities—yes, cities of from ten to fifteen thousand people —where five or six years ago there was but the bare prairie and the loneSection post. The changes in the Canadien West during the past eight or ten years have been marvelous, and it is no idle tete to say that the development in number and growth of the cities, towns and villages there in the next decade has eclipsed anything in the history of the building of a new country. Agriculture has been the basis, and it is agriculture of the right sort that is behind the activity with which an excellent productive farm, capable of yielding a splendid living and large profit to the operator, is such that it has encouraged thousands to follow that pursuit, and also other businesses to the fullest extend expensive farme throughout the Central Western States as well as some of the finest districts, is attributed to the zeal of enterprise. The climate is excellent, and just the climate that is desirable for the healthy growth of man and the product of the field. All varieties of the smaller and hardy spring grains are raised, and generally with every assurance of good results. Many communities have local railway rates, splendid markets are created, and the highest prices realized. The Canadian government has also been carrying on a propegnda of securing settlers for the vacant lands, issues literature descriptive of the area available in the provinces, and on request of your nearest Canadien government agent, copies will be forwarded free.

A Deadly Error.

Dr. W. B. Cannon of Harvard, discussing anti-vivisection literature at a dinner in New York, said with a smile:

"This literature, in part at least, is so fearfully erroneous as the medical department conducted by a young college girl in a weekly paper. A sample reply in this department is:

"'Bereaved.—The reply given last week was a mistake. It should have been ten drops of laudenum, not ten cups of laudenum. Yes, we advocate cremation rather than the old-fashioned burial."

JOHNSON IS HALTED

INJUNCTION GRANTED BY JUDGE WILLARD RESTRAINS AGENTS' ACTIVITIES.

INDIAN LID IS CLOSELY LIMITED

If Ruling Holds, Liquor Ban Will Apply Only on Reservations.—Appeal Rests With Attorney General.

St. Paul. — Judge Willard, of the United States district court, issued an injunction restraining W. E. Johnson, special agent of the bureau of Indian affairs, from interfering with the liquor traffic in Minnesota under the anti-liquor provisions of the Indian treaty of 1855.

The reasons given for the decision are sweeping. If the decision holds, there will be no more of the "federal Indian liquor lid" in Minnesota, outside of the limits of the actual Indian reservations.

The Indian treaties having anti-liquor clauses cover nine-tenths of the state. According to the contentions of the government in this suit, the federal authorities have the right to prohibit liquor absolutely from any and all portions of this vast territory. According to Judge Willard's decision, all of these anti-liquor clauses are void and of no effect.

Basis of Suit.

The suit on which the decision was rendered was instituted by 12 saloon proprietors of Bemidji, against W. E. Johnson and two of his deputies, T. E. Brents, and H. F. Coggeshell. The 12 complainants were Edwin Geeralds, L. J. Kramer, Fred E. Brinkman, E. E. Geralds, Albert Marshik, John A. Dalton, Edwin Fay, F. S. Lycan, John H. Sullivan, Harry Gunsalus, J. E. Maloy and Tillie Larson.

The saloons may open throughout all that vast stretch of land covered by the treaty of 1855. It is here that Agent Johnson and his men have been driving all liquor manufacturers and dealers out of business. Furthermore, railroads and express companies may resume the shipping of liquor to that district. This traffic has been stopped for many weeks.

Judge Willard holds that the admission of Minnesota to statehood gave the state the power of regulating the liquor traffic, and repealed the anti-liquor clause of the Indian land cession treaties. He points to the fact that only a year ago was any attempt made to enforce them since the state was admitted. For about a half century before that the control of the liquor traffic outside of the Indian reservations themselves, had been left to the state.

All the work accomplished by Agent Johnson in the state is considered to be undone by the decision of the court. That the anti-liquor people hope for some kind of an appeal is conceded, but they are so thoroughly dumfounded that they were unable to say just what action would be taken.

The decision is a sudden victory for the saloon interests, a great portion of which had about concluded to abandon efforts to offset the spectacular work of Indian Agent Johnson. Month after month Mr. Johnson has pushed the work, closing the saloons in town after town and the saloon men have so continually lost in the courts that they were almost ready to give up hope. Month after month the saloon men all over the state have been paying extra assessments to keep up the fight and it has been a severe strain on their finances.

Agent Johnson arrived in Minneapolis just in time to get first news of the court decision. At his rooms in the West hotel he appeared cheerful, but astonished, as neither side had expected so sweeping a decision.

"Placed in my position there is really nothing for me to say," he remarked. "In view of the decision of the court I should say that the attorney general is the only federal representative from whom comment should be expected. As for myself I am not going to say a word."

1873 STORM RECALLED.

Thirty-eighth Anniversary Remembered by the Pioneers of Freeborn.

Albert Lea.—It was thirty-eight years ago that the big storm prevailed over the southern part of the state and many lives were lost. There was but one railroad running into the city, the old Southern Minnesota, now a division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and this city, then a village of seven or eight hundred persons, was a week or ten days without a train or any communication with the outside world except by telegraph. The storm was so severe and lasted so long that many farmers lost their stock, as they could not get to their barns. The temperature fell to about 40 below zero before the wind ceased.

BOY BANDITS ARE INDICTED.

Melodroski and Johnson Will Be Tried on Murder Charge.

Duluth. — With downcast countenances Charles Melodroski and Algot Johnson, the boy bandits, listened to the indictments returned against them for murder in the first degree which were found by the grand jury now in session before Judge Cant's court. An indictment charging both of them with robbery in the first degree was also found.

RESULTS OF CO-OPERATION TOLD

Farmers' and Grain Dealers' Association Meets in Mankato.

Mankato.—The fourth annual convention of the Farmers' and Grain Dealers' Association of Minnesota was held here.

Storms and delayed trains affected the attendance somewhat. Mayor A. G. Meyer gave the address of welcome and President L. A. Smith Truman responded and also gave his annual message.

Miles K. Culver, of St. Ansgar, gave an address on "Co-operation." S. A. Dalton, Minneapolis, who was to have spoken, was prevented from attending by sickness in his family.

President Smith, in his address, told of the good results of co-operative organization and said if this was more generally known the membership would be larger.

R. L. Johnson, Austin, secretary, in his annual report, said that there are 275 co-operative companies handling grain in Minnesota and that 70 of these belong to the association, with a membership of 7,000.

There was a good showing of delegates from these companies present. Mr. Johnson said that, starting eight years ago, the spread of these companies had been rapid. As a rule they buy the farmers' grain and sell them coal and sometimes flour, feed, salt, etc. Most of these companies have been very successful, getting for their members three to ten cents a bushel more for their grain than farmers elsewhere get.

The movement is also strong in other grain growing states, and there are 2,000 companies in all.

The officers are making every effort to increase the membership in Minnesota.

President H. A. Patterson, of the Mankato Commercial Club, and Carrie Vaughan-Anderson, Eagle Grove, Iowa, gave addresses.

The following directors were elected: A. O. Lunder, of Slayton; Albert Hector, of Worthington; A. W. Wells, of Herman; C. H. Alfs, of Clara City; Charles Davin, of Burr; William Bennett, of Lowry; J. S. Danene, of Hancock; E. J. Keenen, of Luverne, and H. C. Ruatad, of Kirkhoven.

Resolutions were adopted, pledging the best efforts to get all co-operative companies united in the state association; urging on the legislature the necessity of enacting laws more favorable to co-operative enterprises, and especially a law forbidding any company that owns more than one elevator to discriminate in prices at different stations; favoring good roads legislation; heartily approving the fight which the Hardwick Farmers' Elevator Company is making in the courts to secure the enforcement of a reciprocal demurrage law, and urging all co-operative associations to give support, and urging the appointment of H. C. Rustad, manager of the Farmers' Elevator Company, of Kirkhoven, as a member of the state board of appeals.

Harry F. Atwood, of Chicago, gave an address on "Co-operation and Progress in the Agricultural World."

VOTE CONTEST IS NEAR END.

Testimony in Stephens-Saugsted Case Completed.

Crookston. — The transcribing of testimony in the Stephens-Saugsted election contest is finished and will be filed with the senate promptly. A. A. Miller, Saugsted's at once. A. A. Miller, Saugsted's mony taken last week in rebuttal of Stephen's testimony and says he will call no witnesses for Saugsted. No further testimony will be taken unless called for by senate and it is expected all will be ready this week to submit to the senate. Evidence heard on behalf of Stephens and the rebuttal covers over 700 typewritten pages. No further developments are expected here before the final hearing in the senate. The reinspection of ballots showed a total Saugsted's plurality over Stephens of 236. Saugsted's lawyer claims this cannot possibly be brought below 197. There was also 119 Saugsted stickers who voted for officers other than senator.

IS ELK RIVER WET OR DRY?

Result of Vote is Close and Courts May Decide Question.

Elk River.—The following officers were elected at the village election here: President of Council, F. P. Lummer; trustees, George Worden, G. E. Page and E. P. Babcock; recorder, S. M. Crockett; assessor, Fred Waterman; treasurer, F. N. Corty; constable, W. O. Saemens; justice of the peace, H. C. Hastings.

Seventy-seven votes were cast in favor of license and 75 against license, the total number voting was 155, and as there were less than a majority of this number in favor of license, it is a disputed question whether the village will be wet or dry. This will probably go to the courts for decision.

The voters declared in favor of incorporating under the general laws by a vote of 133 to 7.

INDEPENDENT FIRM GROWING.

Coming of Steel Plant to Duluth Adds to Amount of Business.

Duluth.—Although the steel corporation is spending $10,000,000 here for the construction of a large steel plant, the independent iron and steel business here is growing. A local furnace company, which has a furnace for the manufacture of pig iron, with a capacity of 250 tons per day, will double its capacity by constructing an alternate furnace of 250 tons capacity, at an estimated cost of $225,000.

GOVERNMENT SUES SETTLERS

PROSECUTION IS IN FAVOR OF WHITE EARTH TRIBE OF CHIPPEWAS.

Whites are Accused of Securing Much Valuable Land From the Indians by Fraudulent Methods.

Washington, D. C. — Six hundred suits have been prepared by the department of justice and about 700 others are under way in an effort to recover thousands of acres of valuable lands and timber said to have been fraudulently taken from the White Earth tribe of the Chippewa Indians in northwestern Minnesota.

Combined forces of the department of justice and the interior department have been working on the cases more than a year.

The reservation, covering two counties, was deeded to the Indians by the government with the stipulation that no part of it could ever be deeded to any but full-blooded Chippewa Indians. Later, however, an act passed congress permitting sales and transfers.

Attorneys of the department of justice who have had the investigation under way declare that when the latter act passed congress, white men who had gathered at the reservation waiting for it to become law celebrated the news with bonfires and a carnival. The investigators say insignificant sums of money, whisky, trinkets and even promises which were never kept were the prices by which the valuable lands were secured. Conveyances were induced from minors, it is charged.

Many thousands of acres of white and Norway pine have been cut over and the lumber sold. The suits which will be filed in the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota will seek to restore the lands to the Indians and recover for the timber of which they have been devastated.

FOR COUNTY FAIRS.

State Federation Will Ask Legislature To Double Appropriations.

St. Paul.—The Federated County Fairs of the State of Minnesota will urge the Legislature at least to double the appropriation for county fairs, which at present is $34,000, said sum not to exceed the amount paid for premiums.

A resolution to this effect was unanimously adopted at the third annual meeting of the federation. It also was decided that a uniform classification of all exhibits be adopted by the different counties.

The federation will recommend a law be passed limiting the membership of the state agricultural society to representatives of only such societies as are recognized as strictly county agricultural societies.

The question of encouraging boys and girls to exert their influence in making the county fair a success was discussed. In several counties, according to delegates, prizes are offered for essays written by children on subjects dealing with industrial life.

That the amusement end of a county fair is essential also was the sense of the meeting.

J. J. Furlong of Austin was re-elected president; E. E. Miller, St. Paul, was elected vice president; John H. Brown of Tyler and Thomas R. Johnstone of St. Paul were re-elected secretary and treasurer. As directors, E. H. Smith of Austin was chosen from the First congressional district, John Timpene of Waterville from the Third C. B. Wadell, St. Louis Park, the Fifth; S. Hutchins, Glenwood, the Seventh; and A. D. Stephens of Crookston from the Ninth. Directors from the other districts hold office for another year.

The counties represented and the delegates who attended the meeting are:

Brown, Adolph Burmeister and Ferdinand Crone; Beltrami, W. R. Mackenzie; Stearns, C. M. Sprague, F. E. Minette and J. A. Du Bois; Dodge, George R. Little, George B. Healey and C. Willyard; Wabasha, T. G. Bolton, G. F. Sylvester and F. L. Lamberton and John W. Thomas; Pipestone, H. J. Farmer, F. M. Payne and C. S. Walker; Chippewa, S. G. Ellison, F. E. Bentley and C. J. Thompson; Nobles, A. R. Alberties, G. W. Patterson and L. H. Gray; Renville, D. S. Hall, Charles Kenning and Joe Huggett; Nicollet, E. E. Miller and John Hurst; Wright, C. E. Brewster, J. A. McVeity and G. W. Fisher; Hubbard, J. H. O'Neill, L. H. Rice and F. A. Vanderpool; Crow Wing, Gardner Stevens, M. Dunn and W. H. Cloud; Lincoln, Hans Lauritzen, John H. Brown and Rasmus Black; Lac qui Parle, J. F. Rosewald, J. F. Jacobson and H. L. Lokensgaard; Lyon, C. C. Whitney, J. G. Schutz and H. M. Clark; Mower, J. W. Helmer, G. W. King and P. A. Reilly; Carver, C. E. Funk, H. D. Moyer and George Hebrisin; Polk, Theodore O. Propp, Nels J. Kvenoden and T. H. Nesseth; Chisago, T. W. Malcolm, C. M. Johnson, and H. Anderson; Pope L. M. Leanding, S. Hutchins and M. Annez; Blue Earth, G. Norman, W. A. Roberts and J. M. Chapman; Goodhue, Ed Peterson, John Langsdorf and B. A. Kolbs; Steele, J. R. Morley, F. A. Dunham and M. J. Brown; Poll. (Northwest Agricultural society), Thomas R. Johnstone, James Cumming and Thomas R. Brown; Otter Tail, C. R. Wright; Pennington, D. P. O'Neill.

Civil Service Examinations.

Washington, D. C. — The civil service examination for the department service in Washington will be held at the following places in Minnesota. Albert Lea, April 20; Brainerd, March 14; Crookston, March 16; Jan. 24, March 8, and April 12; Duluth, March 13, Jan. 24, March 8, and April 12; Fergus Falls, March 15, March 8, and April 12; Mankato, April 21, Jan. 24, March 8 and April 12; Minneapolis, April 25, and Jan. 24, St. Paul; April 3, Jan. 24, April 25, March 8, and April 12; Winona, April 21.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Jan. 11.—Speaker Dunn has announced the House committees. As had been generally expected, C. A. Congdon of Duluth, R. C. Dunn of Princeton and L. C. Spooner of Morris get the important chairmanships. Dunn heads taxes and tax laws, which will shape the important tax measures of the session. Spooner heads appropriations, giving him one of the most important and most influential positions in the house. This is an especially strong committee, made up of Spooner, Congdon, Dunn, R. C.; Washburn, McKenzie, Johnson, C. E.; Stone, C. E.; Johnson, J. T.; Edwards, Webb, Pfaender, Frankson, Lee, I. J.; Anderson, A.; Kunze, Fowler, Brown, L. D.; Peterson, J. E.; Holten, Brown, G. W.; and Minette.

Reapportionment Fight.

Representative Congdon heads the committee on reapportionment, which was also expected. This gives the northern part of the state a fighting representative in the cause for which it is struggling. Lennon and Lydiard of Minneapolis are also on this committee.

The tri-county committee, of which John Lennon was chairman, last session, and made one of the standing committees of the house, consisting of representatives of three counties. Ramsey, Hennepin and St. Louis, is headed by Representative C. E. Stone, of St. Paul.

The temperance committee which is pledged to report out a county option bill is made up of Palmer, White, Pfaender, J. E. Peterson, Virtue, McKenzie, Webb, Fuchs, A. Nelson, Just, L. D. Brown, Whiting, Hoffman, Wescott and Crane.

Special interest centers in the committee on state fair, which is expected to probe matters relative to the big agricultural show and report a new plan for the management of the concern. It consists of Davis, Kneeland, Christie, Spooner, Campbell, C. E. Stone, Robinson, Holten, Frankson, Moriarty, Perry, R. C. Dunn, Rines, Minette and Robertson.

Avalanche of New Bills.

After the debate on the printed testimony in the senate, came the avalanche of new bills. Senator Wilson, of Minnesota, introduced an appropriation of $175,000 to pay the salaries, traveling expenses and supplies for the legislature.

This and Senator Schaller's bill for $17,000 for the St. Peter asylum were passed immediately.

That all buildings erected in the future by the state should be made of materials, such as brick and stone, produced in Minnesota, was provided for in a bill introduced by Senator J. D. Sullivan of St. Cloud.

Senators Foeseen and Peuly of Minneapolis each introduced a bill. Senator Foeseen's bill provided that all villages that had governed themselves as incorporated villages under the statutes of 1905 should be considered as legally incorporated villages whether or not they had complied with all the legal requirements. Senator Peuly's bill provided that the councils of municipalities should have power to make avoirdupois weights the standard weights except in cases where there was a specific contract that other weights should apply. A pound of bread would have to contain 16 ounces, according to his bill.

Men may vote on measures of statewide application in other precincts than that in which they live if the bill of Senator Sullivan is passed. It provides that on the presentation of affidavits of residence in the state from the election judges of his home precinct, a man may vote in any other precinct on matters that are of statewide application and not local affairs.

Senator Haycraft followed with a bill to make uniform hours for all polling places in the state to be open on both primary and election day. His bill makes the hours during which the polls should be open from 7 a. m. until 9 p. m.

The Hennepin delegation in the senate showed its intention to look out for the needs of the University of Minnesota. Senator Elwell introduced a bill calling for a total appropriation of $628,442 for equipment, maintenence, and new work on university buildings, the proposed appropriations for each department are:

Deficiency in university maintenance fund	$130,000
Increased cost of engineering buildings	75,000
Equipment of engineering buildings	40,000
Engineering library	35,000
Millard hall	60,400
Anatomy building maintenance	47,342
Equipment of anatomy building	84,000
Equipment of Millard hall	75,000
Equipment Elliott memorial hospital	54,000
Maintenance of Elliott memorial hospital	33,700

St. Paul, Jan. 13.—What senate leaders describe as one of the greatest strides towards scientific lawmaking ever taken up by any state is formulated in a bill presented by Senator Hackney of St. Paul. His bill provides for the establishment of a state legislative reference bureau, to be at the service of all legislators and public officials, and to gather facts that will aid in making laws scientifically. The governor of the state, the attorney general and the president of the board of regents of the University of Minnesota, according to the bill, shall have power to appoint a director of the bureau at a salary of $3,000 a year.

It shall be the duty of the bureau to collect the laws of Minnesota and of all other states of the United States and even of foreign countries, data and reference books on governmental and trade facts and to systematize them to aid legislators in determining what bills are necessary and what should be the scope of the bills. The director shall according to the bill, aid the legislators in drafting laws and shall not take sides in determining the advisability of the law, but shall confine himself to producing facts.

State Fair Audit Submitted.

The report of the governor's board of audit on the state fair was submitted to the legislature. It was not accompanied by any recommendation or any suggestion from the executive.

The senate committee on finance and the house committee on appropriations meeting in joint session unanimously decided to report on the Elwell bill calling for an appropriation for the University of Minnesota of $628,442 for immediate passage. John Lind and B. F. Nelson of the board of regents and Dean Shenehon of the engineering department and Dr. Beard of the medical college appeared in person to argue for the bill. Not a figure was changed and the bill will go before both houses as originally presented.

The house cut the additional appropriation from $75,000 to $110,000 which, with the standing appropriation, allows $290,000 to cover the expense of the session.

A joint resolution was introduced by Senator Peterson to make an amendment to the constitution of the United States giving the federal government the right to levy an income tax.

Speaker Dunn announced the following appointments. Richard Thomas, doorkeeper; K. G. Oldre, clerk; R. B. Forrest, clerk; Frank E. Reed, assistant clerk for judiciary; C. A. Reil, clerk; Henry Zierenring, file clerk; James Hunter, gallery keeper; Alex Herbert, sergeant committee rooms; Rudolph Paul, doorkeeper; A. J. Ribestein, sergeant of committee rooms; Henry Gordon, doorkeeper; F. L. Stauffer, gallery-keeper; James Blehe, janitor; T. M. Quinn, doorkeeper; Joseph Cousineau, sergeant gallery; F. T. Waren, sergeant committee room; John Barret, page; George E. Byers, cloakroom keeper; John C. McLeren, doorkeeper; Gordon T. Bright, sergeant committee room.

ISOLATE TOWN, THEN ROB BANK.

Dynamiters at Houstonia, Mo., Cut 'Phone and Telegraph Wires.

Houstonia, Missouri. — Five explosions were heard here but no one paid any attention to them. Three hours later it was discovered that the Bank of Houstonia had been robbed of $2,000 and that all telephone and telegraph wires leading in the town had been cut. After the safe of the bank had been dynamited the robbers took a horse and buggy and drove away.

YOUNG AVIATOR WINS $5,000.

Youth, 18 Years Old, Performs Marvelous Feats.

Charlestown, South Caro.—James Ward, 18 years old, in a 24-horsepower biplane, made a daring flight across two rivers, the harbor and out over the Atlantic ocean, reaching a height of 5,300 feet and winning a prize of $5,000 by circling over two of the strongest fortifications on the Atlantic coast. He covered about 25 miles in 54 minutes.

SKIN TORTURED BABIES SLEEP AND MOTHERS REST

A warm bath with Cuticura Soap, followed by a gentle anointing with Cuticura ointment, is generally sufficient to afford immediate comfort in the most distressing forms of itching, burning and scaly eczemas, rashes, irritations and inflammations of infants and children, permit sleep for child and rest for parent, and point to permanent relief, when other methods fail. Peace falls upon distracted households when these pure, sweet and gentle emollients enter. No other treatment costs so little and does so much for skin sufferers, from infancy to age. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston, for free 32-page book on the care and treatment of skin and scalp troubles.

A Surprise.

"I'm going to give my wife a real surprise this Christmas."

"That so? What are you going to give her?"

"The money."

All subscriptions paid on this notice will be credited at the rate of $1.00 per year, and it would not be a bad idea for some of you to pay two, three or four years while you are about it.

The decision of Judge Willard of the United States circuit court which means the end of the reign of the "possyfoot" Johnson gang in northern Minnesota, was a victory for every self respecting citizine of the state, without regard to what his views may be on the temperance question. No man likes to read in the papers that the state he lives in is not to be trusted to make its laws and manage its own affairs, but that we are the same as Indians, wards of the government, who must have "pussyfoot" Johnson to run our business. All honor to Judge Willard may his decision stand

The last proceedings of the board of Commissioners of Pennington county shows that they allowed bills for over twelve hundred dollars for new record books, which is only a starter, but may begin to open up the eyes of some of the farmer taxpayers who took the statements, made by some of the campaign orators last fall, that the books could be bought for four or five hundred dollars, as facts. Wait a little while and you will see who was representing the intrests of the farmers on that deal.

The new route, that the government will discontinue printing return cards on stamped envelopes has caused us to arrive at the conclusion to put in a job press this spring. We shall endevor to get as many of the farmers to name their farms and get farm stationary printed as we can, as it would be out of the best advertisements for the country that could be had for its expense it would be. Begin to make up your mind what name you are going to give your farm.

The Mexico government granting Japan a supply station on their coast is not likely to set well on the stomach of the Americanpeople.

Trial of a Dead Man.

Mr. Christopher Hare's book on "Cherice de Bourbon, High Constable of France," mentions the strange trial which succeeded the close of that turbulent career. He had died in conquering Rome; which the murderous soldiers straightway sacked. For this crime it was necessary to find a scapegoat, so on July 20, 1527, in the presence of King Francois I., on his seat of justice, assisted by the peers of France and the assembled chambers, Jean de Barre, the usher of the court, called Charles de Bourbon three times from the bar of the parliament, at the marble table and at the marble steps—and then reported that the said De Bourbon had not appeared. The sentence was drawn up, then solemnly read out: "The connetable de Francedond was condemned, his goods confiscated to the crown, and the door of his palace by the Louvre was painted yellow."

A still life by Jan van Huysen to the museum at The Hague was injured, but it is believed that the perpetrator was neither vandal nor thief. The picture represents a basket of fruit on which a number of insects have gathered. On a pole yellow apple, which is the centerpiece in the cluster of fruit, is a large fly, painted so true to nature, so say the officials of the gallery, that the canvas was injured by some one who endeavored to "shoo" it and, brought the cane or hand too close to the canvas. "A tribute to the painter's genius," says the later recording the fact, "for which the work had to suffer."

Arctic Rock Weed.

Drifting down from Alaska comes the greatest of all sea plants, the arctic rock weed, that grows in shape like a huge ship's bunner and sometimes with branches 500 feet long. There are no signs of leaves, but at intervals of a fathom or so a knob, for all the world like the knop on a drift net, grows around the stem, adding, as does the buoy, in keeping the plant afloat and creating the impression that some nets have gone astray. —New York World.

Method in Her Breekega.

"Augusta is on awfully bright girl, isn't she?"

"Yes, indeed. When she is reading a novel on the front porch her mother never thinks of asking her to wash the dishes."

"I've you burglar alarms in your hen house?"

"Don't need 'em. When I've field for it there won't be anything to attract burglars."

Political Passions of 1844.

There were elements of picturesque ness and drama in the politics of the before the war time which are lacking nowadays. Horace Harland tells in the autobiography of a Whig rally which makes the political meetings of today seem tame, cut and dried affairs. It was in 1844, the year of Clay's defeat, and feeling ran high. At that particular time John Tyler was perhaps the most disreputable man in the Union. In the progress of the festive or national affairs this character at last came to the listed ranks. Instantly upon the majestic figure of Captain Cocke, the local eccentric, clad in the scarlet English hunting coat he invariably wore. "The Lord have mercy upon the nation!" he cried, his voice across with wrath and sonorous with the mint julops for which his Belt was noted. "Fellow citizens, I always try to look heaven for mercy upon this country when John Tyler's name is mentioned above and aunts!"

"The Liver Pills act So Naturally and Easily."

Such a statement, coming from the cashier of a bank, shows what confidence responsible people have in these pills. Mr. A. L. Wilson after trying them wrote:

"I have used Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills and also your Anti-Pain Pills, on myself, with good results. The Liver Pills act so naturally and so easily that I scarcely know that I have taken a pill. Frequently after troubled with headache I take an Anti-Pain Pill and get immediate relief in every case."

His Little Joke.

A well known German who is something of a wag walked into one of the public offices in Cincinnati the other day, and from the noise it was plain that he was wearing a pair of new shoes, or ones that had recently been repaired.

One of the clerks remarked about the shoes, and the German said:

"I comes pretty near selling dose shoes the other day."

"How is that?" asked the clerk.

"I had 'em half soled," said the German as he walked out of the office.

A deep groan was heard as he slipped through the door.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Edward Singer and Henry Peterson cut up our years supply of fire wood yesterday, so when we get awful busy at something else the cook wont holler: "You will have to cut some wood if you want any dinner."

The weather has been very cold ever since Christmas, but we have not had any very bad storms although we have about 18 inches of snow which the wind keeps stired up enough to keep the roads in bad condition.

Mr. S. Pelke, of Gully, whose farm joins Mr. Singers land at that place was a valuable witness for him in his damnage case with the railroad company. He also improved it opprotunity to visit some of his old neighbors living in Deer Park, and remembered us by giving his subscription another boost ahead.

Who Are We?

A gentleman, who is sometimes called "windy" by his neighbors got up in the creamery meeting at Highlanding last week and made the motion that WE have all creamery reports published in the Eleven Towns at paying rates. Who are we? If the Highlanding creamery had depended on men that had no more enterprise than that yank and the Eleven Towns crowd there would not be any creamery to publish reports of. But Hoan and THE SUNBEAM got in line and contributed their time and cash to build that creamery. What did we do it for? To help the farmers to have a home market for their cream, and not to feed printing trust at Erie. Bring on your reports, or any other kind of notices we will publish them FREE OF CHARGE. After the creamery was built and running it was sailsbed to let the patrons run it and take all the credit and profit, but if there is any further attempt made to take the money of the farmer patrons of that creamery to feed a newspaper trust, someone is likely to find that we are a mighty noisy partner instead of a silent one.

Ish Names in Germany.

Germany probably holds the record for out of the way signs and fantastic inn names. The most absurd results are usually obtained by the name of some animal with a more or less unsuitable object. The Comfortable Chicken and the Cold Frog, both of them in Berlin, are certainly left in the shade by the Angry Ant (Ort. in Westphalia) and the Stiff Dog (Berlin). The Lame Lobster is an inn in a suburb of Berlin, and not far from it is the Thirsty Fellow, the Dirty Parlor, the Bloody Bones, the Musical Cats, the Fourhundredweight Man; and the Boozers' Den are all in Berlin or the neighborhood, but the Old Straw Bag in Leipsic. The Open Bunchole in Bischofsein, in Ulu Palatinate, and the Shoulder Blade in Jerichow. The Last Tear is a landlord's notion for the name of his inn, entitled men's guard, visited by returning mourners, and is of frequent occurrence throughout the fatherland.

Guessed His Grandfather.

Peter Augustus had a foolish, fond old grandfather. The grandfather was boasting to a visitor one day, as grandfathers will, about the family he had raised.

"My daughter Martha is a fine young woman," he said, "and her little boy, Peter Augustus, is a fine lad. But the finest thing about that pair is the affection that exists between them. They never exchange a cross word. They're more like two young lovers than mother and son. It's beautiful to see them together. Hold on a minute, and I'll call Peter Augustus in. Then his mother will come down, and you can see their relations for yourself."

The old man rose and ambled heavily to the door. There was a beatific smile on his old face. Little Peter Augustus was playing with the cat in the garden.

"Peter Augustus!" he shouted. "Peter Augustus! Your mother wants you!"

The little boy dropped the cat and fixed a searching glance on his grandfather.

"Your mother wants you, Peter Augustus!"

"Does she want to warsh me?" Peter Augustus cautiously demanded.

Really Worth While.

Eben Pratt of Marshby had sent two sons to Boston and knew he had reason to be proud of them. One day a summer visitor lingering in Mr. Pratt's grocery, provision and dry goods establishment mentioned some of the shining lights who had made themselves remembered in and near Boston and others still to be found there.

"We've had a good many smart men and women in and around our city," said the visitor, "and there are a number of them left. We've got scientific men and writers and artists and musicians and—"

Mr. Pratt's dry voice broke in on the list. "If ye call those folks smart," he said, "ye want to go down Bost the teeter to an address I'll give ye and see the way my boys, Ed and Seth, ban open oysters! I guess that'll give ye something to go by when ye're talking of smartness."—Exchange.

Now He Was.

A rich old man was asked how he made his money. "Simplest thing in the world," he said. "I always did the reverse of what everybody else was doing. If everybody bought, I sold—prices were high. If everybody sold, I bought—prices were low."

Some Suspicious Persons

Enquired if we were "hiring" a certain "weekly" paper to abuse us.

Of course every time a spot light is turned on from any source it offers a splendid chance to talk about the merits of the products, but 'pon honor now, we are not hiring that "Weekly."

The general reader seldom cares much for the details of "scraps."

A few may have read lately some articles attacking us and may be interested in the following:

Some time ago a disagreement arose with a "Weekly." They endorsed our foods by letter, but wanted to change the form of advertising, to which we objected.

The "Weekly" discontinued inserting our advertisements while they were negotiating for some changes they wanted in the wording and shape of the advertisements, and during this correspondence our manager gave instructions to our Advertising Department to quit advertising altogether in that "Weekly."

Quite a time after the advertising had been left out, an editorial attack came. We replied in newspapers and the scrap was on.

Then came libel suits from both sides, and some harsh words.

Generally tiresome to the public.

That "Weekly" has attacked many prominent men and reputable manufacturers.

Our Company seems prominent enough for a sensational writer to go after, hunt for some little spot to criticise, then distort, twist and present it to the public under scare heads.

So an attorney from New York spent more or less time for months in Battle Creek hoping to find impurities in our foods, or dirt in the factories. After tireless spying about he summoned twenty-five of our workmen and took their testimony. Every single one testified that the foods are made of exactly the grain and ingredients printed on the packages; the wheat, barley and corn being the choicest obtainable—all thoroughly cleaned—the water of the purest, and every part of the factories and machinery kept scrupulously clean.

That all proved disappointing to the "Weekly." There are very few factories, hospitals, private-use hotel and restaurant kitchens that could stand the close spying at unexpected times and by an enemy paid to find dirt or impurities of some kind.

In any ordinary kitchen or factory he would find something to magnify and make a noise about.

But he failed utterly with the Postum Works and products. Twenty to thirty thousand people go through the factories annually and we never enquire whether they are there to spy or not. It makes no difference to us.

He next turned to discover something about our advertising that could be criticized.

An analysis of the methods and distorted statements of the "Weekly" may interest some readers, so we take up the items one by one and open them out for inspection. We will "chain up" the harsh words and make no reference in this article to the birth, growth and methods of the "Weekly" but try to confine the discussion to the questions now at issue.

Distortion No. 1 stated that we have been accustomed to advertise Grape-Nuts and Postum as "cure-alls for everything."

It has never been the policy of this Company to advertise Grape-Nuts or Postum to cure anything.

We say that in cases where coffee disagrees and is causing sickness its dismissal will remove the cause of the trouble, and we suggest the use of Postum for the reason that it furnishes a hot palatable morning beverage, and contains nutritive elements from the grain which can be absorbed by nature to assist in rebuilding nerve centers that coffee may have broken down.

Likewise Grape-Nuts food does not cure anything, but it does assist nature tremendously in rebuilding, provided the indigestible food that has been used is discontinued and Grape-Nuts taken in its place.

Charge No. 2 states that the passage of the National Food & Drugs Act compelled us to drop from the packages some assertions regarding the nutritive value of Grape-Nuts.

We have never been "compelled" to make any change.

Since the beginning it has been a universal rule in print clearly on every package exactly what the contents are made of.

Before the passage of the Pure-Food Law the packages stated that Grape-Nuts food was made of wheat and barley.

We did not esteem the exact amount of salt and yeast as of value enough to speak of, but after the new law came in we became as technical as the officials at Washington and added the words "yeast" and "salt," although it was by no recollection of being asked to.

We believed that our statement that Grape-Nuts will supply elements to nourish the brain and nerve centers is true and bring authorities to support the fact.

Some state chemists believed this a great scientific discovery and printed Loudness in papers offices of prizes to users of Postum and medical knowledge. Previous to the time when we employed physicians in our own business, we occasionally employed a doctor to write articles on coffee, always insisting that the article be an honest expression of his opinion and research.

The "Weekly" hunted up this physician, and because he seemed to be poor, and in it sure, "professional," and then brought in Court to be exposed before a jury, the "Weekly" knowing that we had endorsed Grape-Nuts, just much to the chagrin of the "Weekly," whom our attorneys asked him if the article he wrote about coffee was true he replied, "Yes."

Distortion No. 3 charges that our testimonials were practically all paid; the Battle Creek "Weekly" says:

These testimonials were demanded by the opposing lawyers. Naturally such demand was refused, for they are held in vaults and kept secret, as are the truth, and are not to be delivered upon demand of enemies.

Testimony at the trial brought out the fact that we never printed a single testimonial that we did not have the honest letter back of. Many of these letters came spontaneously. A record was kept of twelve hundred and four (1204) letters received in one month from people who wrote that they had either entirely recovered their health or been benefited by following our suggestions on food and beverages.

On three or four occasions in the past two or twelve years we printed Loudness in papers offers of prizes to users of Postum and medical knowledge. Five hundred dollars ($1,000 prizes, one hundred ($2,00, twenty ($1,000 prizes, one ($10,000 each—stating that each must be an honest letter with name and address. We agreed not to publish names, but to furnish them to enquirers by letter. These letter writers very generally answered those who wrote to them, and verified the truth of the statements.

Under this agreement not to publish names literally scores of letters came from doctors. We kept our word and neither printed their names or surrendered the letters.

Right here notice an "imitation spasm." The "Weekly" says: "Post got these testimonials by offering for them, that the New York law used for that purpose the New York Mercantile of which one editor is now in the Federal Penitentiary for fraudulent use of the mails. For example, Post announced in that magazine in 1907, etc.," (then follows our prize competition).

We used specific all of the papers and magazines in New York and the rest of America, but the sensational writer gives the impression to his readers that the only magazine we used was one "whose editor is now in the Federal Penitentiary," etc., something that we know nothing of the truth of the matter, never did. Space was bought in the magazine spoken of on a business basis for the reason that it went to a good class of readers. The incident seems to have furnished an opportunity for a designing writer to deceive his readers.

We look upon honest human testimony from men and women as to the means by which they recovered health, as of tremendous value to those in search of it. Our business has been conducted from the very first on upon lines of honesty, and we never yet have published a single testimonial of human experience. Many of these letters covered numerous sheets; some, if printed, would appear in book form or a newspaper. If we would attempt to print one such letter in every one of the thousands of papers and magazines we use, the cost for printing that one letter would run into many thousand sands of dollars.

We hold down these letters exactly as a newspaper writer tells his news,—sticking surcedly to the important facts and eliminating details about the family and other unimportant matters. This work of boiling down, or editing them, is done honestly, and with a full knowledge of our responsibility and duty when one of the "writers" in the way he presents to his readers the law about testimonials.

Distortion No. 4. This is a bad one. It reads as follows: "The only famous physician whose name was ever used in connection with a testimonial was produced in Court by Collyer and turned out to be a drunken, brokendown homeless bum who is now working in a printing establishment. He received ten dollars ($10.00) for writing his testimonial."

Dr. Oslerer in his work on appendicitis refers directly to the use of the well-prepared predigested foods that can be obtained on the market. He also brought out in his address at the time of the appointment that it is advantageous to take on a predigested food.

Now a copy of the package (referred to by the weekly) is not known by us to have any such statement as the question.

Our advice to stop using indigestible food in bowel troubles and to use Grape-Nuts food, has been followed by thousands of thousands of people, and we hope will continue to have a good many more in the succeeding years.

No. 7 is a livo wire. It refers to C. W. Post and his studies and experience in "Suggestive Therapeutics" or "Mental Healing" which further lead to a most careful and systematic study of the effect of the mind on the digestive and other organs of the body.

He attended clinics in Europe and fitted himself for a future career in which he has become known as one of the food experts of the world, fitted to judge both from the material as well as the mental side of the question.

For about eight years previous to 1901 he was an invalid. In that year, after being under the care of several well-known physicians, he was quickly healed, by what to him was a curious and not well-understood method. Sufficient to say he became a well man, weighing about 185 pounds.

This experience challenged his investigation into causes of disease and their amelioration. Those studies and experiences developed a very profound reverence for a Supreme Power which directly operates upon the human being, and this reverence for the infinite became to him a form of religion which included honesty and purpose towards his fellow-men. A statement which will be indorsed by everyone who knows him closely.

He will make a public announcement in detail of these facts, and the Postum Company will back the statement to be published in newspapers and magazines in due time. We suggest the reader look for it.

Prevarication No. 8. "Post spends nearly a million a year in advertising and relies on that to keep out of the newspapers the dangerous nature of the fraud he is perpetrating on the public."

The Postum Company does pay out upwards of a million a year for trade and newspaper space. Newspaper men believe our statements truthful or they would not print them. Large numbers of newspaper men use our products.

They are capable of telling the public whether or not we "belie them."

It may have escaped notice that we did not "belie" that particular weekly.

No. 9 states that the amount of the verdict will "be devoted by the 'weekly' to removing fraud."

This is almost real humor.

We have two suits pending against the "weekly," total, $500,000.00.

We haven't "devoted" the sum to any particular purpose yet.

Item 10 is a "discovery" that wheat bran is a part of Postum.

But the criticism neglected to mention that for years every Postum package announced in plain type that the outer covering of wheat (bran) made no part of the beverage.

They innocently fell into a trap here, not knowing enough of food value to know that "Tala-Diastase" the article used by physicians the world over for "starch indigestion" is made from "wheat bran."

So we use that part of the wheat berry because in combination with other articles to develop the valuable diastase in manufacture. Good Postum is impossible without this part.

These self-appointed critics do make some laughable blunders though ignorance, but—be patient.

Item 11 is an illustration of the sensitiveness and wording of the sensational writer delivering distorted matter to his readers.

While on the witness stand Mr. Post testified to his studies in Anatomy, Physiology, Dietetics and Psychology,—all relating to the proper digestion of human food. Asked to name authorities studied he mentioned six or eight from memory, and commented on some clinical experience covering several years in annual journeys to Europe.

Now notice the distortion. (Copy from the printed editions.)

"He (Post) pointed out a pile of books in answering of his attorneys as the very ones he had read."

Notice—"the very ones he had read," leading the reader to believe that they were the only ones.

"Did you consult the books from these editions?" was asked.

"From these and various editions," answered Post.

The attorney "picked up book after book from the pile and showed the title pages to the jury—all except two had been published since 1905."

There is an example of distortion and false coloring to produce an unfavorable impression.

The facts are Mr. Post purposely introduced the latest editions that could be obtained of prominent authorities to prove by them the truth of his statements regarding appendicitis and the analysis of brain, also the latest conclusions in regard to the action of the digestive organs. These works are:

Human Physiology, by Raymond.
Physiological Chemistry, by Hammarsten.
Digestive Glands, by Pawlow.
Hand Book of Appendicitis, by Ochsner.
Physiological Chemistry, by Hammarsten.
Biochemic System of Medicine, by Carey.

The "Weekly" carefully eliminates from its printed account testimony regarding the years of research and study by Mr. Post in fitting himself for his work, and would lead the reader of the distorted article to believe that his education began since 1905.

Distortion No. 12 reports Mr. Post as a "dodging witness."

His eye is not of the shifty kind observed in the lower of one of his chief critics. On the witness stand Mr. Post looks quietly but very steadily straight into the eyes of the boggling, twisting lawyer, looking by all but trick to nail double barreled questions and bull-doze and confuse a witness.

The "dodging" it seems consisted of replying, "I don't know."

Opposing counsel holds a book in his hand while he queries,—

"I want to know if there is a single thing in your whole book here that suggests any partigular kind of food." Then followed some dissimulation between attorneys.

When Mr. Post was allowed to reply, he said, "I don't know until I read the book over to see."

This book, it turns out, was written by Mr. Post seventeen years ago and probably has been read carefully by him in the last fifteen years. It would require a remarkable memory to instantly say "yes" or "no" as to what a book of 161 pages did or did not contain, without reading it over,—but such conservative and well balanced answers are construed by sensation seekers to be "dodging."

The attorney sought by every art to impress the jury with the fact that Mr. Post's belief in the power of Mind in its action on body branded him as one unreliable and worse.

The following is quoted from one of the printed articles:

"The writer of these pages desires to say nothing of himself other than in a simple instrument through which the Divine Principle chooses to manifest itself by precept and example.

"Still in mental practice is gained in the same way as skill in any department of science—by observation, study, experience and the ability to evolve correct conclusions.

"Read carefully, thoughtfully no more than twenty pages daily. A favored seat an easy position where you will not be disturbed. Relax every muscle. Close your eyes, and go into the silence where mind is plain to the breathings of spirit and where God talks to the Son. The thoughts from Divine Universal Mind come as winged angels and endow you with a healing power. If you go into the silence humble and trusting, you will come out enriched and greatly strengthened in body by contact even for a short time with the Father of all life and all power. You will feel refreshed in every way and food taken will digest readily as the stomach works smoothly when under the influence of a Higher Power."

"I ask you if you did not write that, and if you did not believe it when you wrote it."

For a moment the Court Room was in absolute silence.

Mr. Post slowly leaned forward over the rail, pointed his finger at the Atty's face to emphasize his reply and with eyes that caused those of the Attorney to drop he said, "Yes, I am proud to say I did."

Some Facts

Battle Creek, Michigan, December 30, 1910.

We the undersigned certify that over to our knowledge has a testimonial letter been printed by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., which did not have behind it a genuine letter signed, and believed to be an honest statement.

To the best of our knowledge and belief the Company has receive upwards of fifty thousand (50,000) genuine testimonial letters.

This company has never knowingly made nor permitted an untruthful statement regarding its products or its methods.

M. K. HOWE, Treasurer. (With Company about 14 years)
L. J. LAMSON, Inspector of Advts. (With Company about 9½ years.)
F. C. GRANDIN, Advertising Manager. (With Company about 13 years.)
R. M. STERRETT, M. D., Physician in charge of Scientific Dep't. (With Company about 4½ years.)
CHESTON SYER, Advt. Writer. (With Company about 3 years.)
CHARLES W. GREEN, Advt. Writer. (With Company about 5 years.)
HARRY E. BURT, General Sup't. (With Company about 13 years)
H. C. HAWK, Assistant to Chairman. (With Company about 7 years.)
C. W. POST, Chairman. (With Company 16 years, from the beginning.)

It may be remembered that we were first attacked and have since defended ourselves by placing facts before that great jury—The Public.

A good "scrap" is more or less comforting now and then, if you know you are right.

In the case lately tried, an appeal has been taken to the higher courts. We have unbounded faith in the ultimate decision of our American Tribunals.

Our suits against the "weekly" have not yet been tried. They are for libel and $500,000.00 is asked as damages, and may the right man win.

After all the smoke of legal battle blows away, the facts will stand out clearly and never be forgotten that Postum, Grape Nuts, and Post Toasties are perfectly pure, have done good honest service to humanity for years, the testimonials are real and truthful and the business conducted on the highest plane of commercial integrity.

Beautiful Miss Howard

By ANTOINETTE PATTERSON

Langdon Drew was of a frivolous nature and had already figured in two broken engagements. And now a girl had come into his life determined to teach him a lesson. Katharine Howard and the endearments had been friends at boarding school. This was unknown to Mr. Drew who had moved from Pittsburg, the home of one of his former loves—the other was a Bostonian—to New York, where he had just met the beautiful Miss Howard.

Katharine Howard was a beauty. In her hair was the glint of the sun itself, and in her face the flush of the wild rose. Her eyes were big and clear and blue.

"There were six man supposed to be to love with Katharine; soon, Mr. Drew made the seventh. Also, he felt he was the most favored.

Among the first six was a young clergyman, Rev. Mr. Henry Strong of Boston, who had met Miss Howard the previous summer while visiting friends on the Massachusetts coast. He saw as much of her as his meagre vacation would allow, and in the fall came to New York and asked her to marry him.

Katherine told him she liked him very much, but she wished to see something of the world first; that probably it would prove so charming she would prefer to live in its midst the rest of her life. To her surprise, Mr. Strong agreed at once. It was a natural wish, and it was far from his desire that any woman should be his wife unless she realized the many things she would have to give up; there would be no social else for her to do. He was indeed an unusual lover, for he had added that he would be so busy all winter it would be impossible to leave Boston, but he would find time to see her just before Lent, when perhaps she could tell him whether she felt she could become the wife of a rather hard-working clergyman—but a poor one, as he had an independent income of his own. And then he had quietly said good-by.

Katherine had thought often of that afternoon. Strong was the one man who seemed not to have noticed her beauty. This had not pleased Miss Howard at first, but afterwards she liked to think it implied a greater compliment. All winter she had heard from him three times; letters such as any friend might have written.

Katherine assured herself she did not love Mr. Strong. Yet often amid worldly scenes she would hear the harsh roar of the sea, and the picture against a gray sky a dark figure, virorous, erect—rather militant. She wondered if he would come again before Lent. Then she would become oppressed by a stifling fear that he might not.

Langdon Drew meanwhile grew more in love, daily assuring himself his was making greater headway. If occurred to him he was occasionally avoided rather abruptly; as for instance at the Walkwright dance when, in the beautiful conservatory where he had first met to throw himself at his fortune at Miss Howard's feet she had announced that she was "dying for another ice."

No one would have put up with such things in a lesser beauty than Katharine Howard.

Affairs took Drew to Boston before long and while he was waiting for a Tremont street he collided with a man moving in the opposite direction.

"Why, Langdon!" "Why, Henry!"

The two had not met since they were in college together.

"Come to my rooms tonight," urged Rev. Mr. Strong, "to talk over old times. I haven't a minute just now."

"Awfully sorry, old man," Drew answered, "but I'm just leaving for New York."

"When you come to Boston again, let me know and we'll arrange things better. Not married yet, Langdon?" The smile on Strong's face brought back the days when Drew's friends had teased him unmercifully about the girls.

"Henry, I'm a different man now. I know what it is to be really in love, and—I don't mind telling you, for you were never one to talk—I hope soon to announce my engagement to Miss Katharine Howard, the prettiest girl in New York!"

Had Drew been observant, he would have noticed a tightening of the clergyman's lips.

"Well," Henry said, a trifle unsteadily, "I must be off—I'm late now to an appointment." Then he added, "I hope you'll be awfully happy, Langdon—and will make her happy. Good-by."

"So this is the end," Strong said to himself when he had gone to his room and poked the fire. "That girl with such possibilities will fritter her life quite away." His thought of Drew's well known lack of steadfastness, but he dismissed this as having no aspecial bearing. "She won't be actually unhappy; Drew will never grow tired of her, and he's a nice fellow in a way, and awfully good looking. Ah, Katherine, Katharine! I must have made a poor lover—but you were the only one there. I ever cared. And I think I didn't understand quite the way to show you how much. I wanted you to see the world first; but how could I have been idiot enough to hope for a different ending? Tonight I feel I would give anything if only you could have known how much I loved you!"

Strong awoke to a new difficulty: it was near Lent and he now felt the promised visit to New York would be most unwise. Later, Miss Howard would probably write him. Hardly lay the difficulty: Langdon Drew had assumed he would write; seeing that his love affair, yet the letter must suggest some kind of an explanation.

However, a day afterwards, Katherine Howard received the following:

"My Dear Miss Howard—I feel that for many reasons it will be best for me to postpone my visit to New York this spring. I hope you will believe how great is the interest I shall always feel in you and how much I trust your life will be a happy one.

"Always most sincerely,

"HENRY STRONG.

"February 28, 190—."

Katherine was alone when the note came. She had not been feeling too well pleased with herself. She had refused Langdon Drew and Mary Browning and Bessie Wetherill had been avenged. But since the reading of the note, Katherine felt sorry for Drew.

The main thing concerning the letter was its incomprehensibility. Had Henry Strong become too absorbed in other things—the Boston papers were constantly quoting him as a man worth listening to—to have the time to think of love? "

The season worn away and many persons wondered why the beautiful Miss Howard had not become engaged.

And then an odd thing happened. Mr. and Mrs. Wetherill, whose daughter was once engaged to Mr. Drew and who had just returned from abroad, moved into a house adjoining Mr. Strong's church. Within a few weeks the rector called.

Mr. and Mrs. Wetherill were out, but Miss Wetherill would be down in a few minutes. Mr. Strong's eyes fastened themselves upon a large photogramph of Katherine Howard. He did not know Miss Wetherill had come into the room until he heard her saying:

"I'm glad to see you, Mr. Strong. You are admiring, I am sure, the picture of one of my old school friends, Katherine Howard."

Mr. Strong turned the conversation to other things. When he rose to go Miss Wotherill noticed that his eyes again sought the picture. But this photograph had always attracted attention.

"She is one of the most loyal-hearted as well as beautiful girls," Bessie Wetherill said, "and would do anything in the world for a friend. I hope soon to have her visit me, though I have just heard she has become engaged to a distinguished southerner whose name I can't remember."

Mr. Long took his leave, feeling much confused. Langdon Drew could never in the world be taken for a southerner, and he was not distinguished. Strong bought a New York paper. On the front page was a picture of the beautiful Miss Howard.

It headed a column reporting her engagement to a royal personage, Prince von Schamberg!

Mr. Strong read no more. He stuffed the paper into his pocket, for once in his life he forgot an engagement and took the first train to New York.

Miss Howard entered the drawing room. Her greeting was distant. But Henry Strong noticed nothing. Something was going to him definitely settled then and there.

"Miss Howard, are you engaged to be married, or going to be, to Mr. Drew—a distinguished southerner—or Prince von Schamberg?"

There was something so compelling in the tone that Strong did not have to repeat his question.

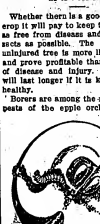
"No," Katherine said, "I am not."

A look came into Strong's face which rendered it at the moments beautiful.

"Katherine, will you marry me?"

"Yes."

Explanations awaited their own good time. Even the need of them was forgotten for the moment.



HORTICULTURE

MANY PESTS IN THE ORCHARD

t Will Pay to Keep Fruit Trees as Free From Disease and Insects as is Possible.

Whether there is a good or poor fruit crop it will pay to keep the fruit trees as free from diseases and injurious insects as possible. The healthy and unhurt tree is more liable to bear and grow profitable than the one full of disease and injury. The orchard will last longer if it is kept clean and healthy.

Borers are among the most insidious pests of the apple orchard in some localities. On account of their habits they cannot be reached by poisonous sprays, and nostrums placed about the roots, as sometimes recommended, are utterly useless. The most efficient means of preventing damage from these pests is by annual inspection of the trees and removal of the grubs with a sharp pointed knife. Various protective measures are also used. One of the most effective is to paint the lower part of the stem in late winter or early spring with a fairly thick paint made from pure really mixed paints for this purpose, since others may contain injurious substances. Wood veneer stripe and wire gauze are sometimes used to prevent the eggs from being laid on the trunks of the trees, but white lead paint is simpler and cheaper.

Black rot is a fungous disease which attacks the fruit, foliage, old bark and branches of apple and pear trees. The leaf spot form probably causes more damage than the other forms. Sometimes black rot cankers on the trunks and the limbs develop so rapidly as to endanger the life of the tree, but this is seldom the case except where pruning is wholly neglected. The fruit is rarely seriously injured, though cutbreaks in this form may sometimes be quite severe.

MOVE BIG TREES IN WINTER

They May Be Transplanted When the Ground is Not Too Much Frozen—Good Method.

Large trees and shrubs may be moved from one part of the place to another when the ground is not too much frozen. The trees to be moved should have a trench dug about three feet out from the trunk all around, cutting the roots at the sides and also underneath the ball of earth. If soil is dry, pour on enough water to make earth stick to the roots.

Have holes dug, and as soon as the ground around the roots is frozen, pull the tree over with a pair of horses, slide the drag under the ball of earth, tie the tree to the drag; then haul to place. Puddle the earth in bottom of hole, set the tree in; see that it is the right depth and top plumb; press the fine black earth round the sides, ramming it in hard; tie the tree to stout stakes, spread six or eight large forkfuls of coarse manure around the tree; then put on top of manure and close up to the trunk several large stones. The manure will keep the soil cool and moist, and the stones will prevent the roots from being chilled from loose by severe winds.

Evergreens 15 to 20 feet in height may be moved by the method, and if well done not one tree need be lost.

Deciduous trees, owing to their roots spreading out so far and going so deep, are much more difficult to move. Trees 6 to 8 feet in height may be moved, but large trees can seldom be moved with success.

Flowering shrubs and large roan bushes may be moved in the same way. Always plant in good earth and upon well-drained land. If soil is sandy or rocky, make large holes; fill in with good earth before planting.

The owner should attend to the transplanting, as the work cannot be left to hired help.

Lime-Sulphur Wash.

During the fall, just the lime-sulphur wash, which for a number of years has been employed to prevent damage to trees by the San Jose scale, was tried with great success in several localities as a protection of orchard tree trunks against the attack of rabbits, says Secretary Wilson. The remedy is cheap, and as a rule a single treatment in the fall appears to protect trees for the entire winter.

In filling apple barrels, fill until the last layer stands an inch above the rim of the barrel. This insures solidity when the head is pressed down carefully.

Wonderful Highland Dialect Responsible for Wrong Impression Given Divine.

Andrew Carnegie, at a dinner in New York, talked about the Scotch dialect.

"It's a hard lingo to understand," said: "It often causes awkward mistakes.

"Once an American divine spent Christmas in a Highland inn. On Christmas morning he gave the maid a tip of a sovereign, and he said, looking earnestly at her—for she was a pretty maid—

"Do you know, Kathleen, you are a very good-looking lassie?"

"Of course Kathleen was pleased, but, being modest, she blushed like a rose and answered:

"Ah, sir, Ah, na! But my kissin, sir, is beautiful!"

"The divine frowned.

"Leave the room, you wicked young baggage!" he said severely.

"He didn't know, you see, that modest Kathleen had been simply praising her highland distinct, the superior charms of her cousin Janet of Peebles."

TIRED, SICK AND DISCOURAGED

Doan's Kidney Pills Brought Health and Cheerfulness.

Mrs. J. P. Pemberton, 854 So. Lafayette St., Marshall, Mo., says: "For years I suffered from Bright's disease which the doctors said was incurable. I gradually grew weaker until I had to take to my bed. The kidney secretions were suppressed. I became terribly bloated, and finally reached the point where I took no interest in life. It was at this time I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and soon improved. When I had used 12 boxes I was without a sign of the trouble which caused to be carrying to my system."

Needed Assistance.

A poor old cast-down bobo started to knock the paint off of a beck door with the end of his cane, and when he tearfully told the lody who opperred thot he had a sick wife at homn and a dozen young kids, she gave him a couple of home-made biscuits. Delntly the bobo bendied them, and once more he trudged up wistfully.

"What's the matter," indignantly demended the housewife, "aren't you satisfied with the biscuits?"

"Yes, dear lady," replied the trampled one, "but I thought perhaps you would be so kind as to loan me a nutcracker for a few minutes."

Children's Food.

Certain little suggestions are always to be followed when planning the diet of the little ones. To keep healthy the milk stomache in the nursery never serves beef stewed with the children. Plenty of stewed fruit and baked apples they should eat, but they must invariably be cooled the day before and dished up cold. The nursery potatoes should always be baked or boiled in their jackets. Stewed and fried potatoes or potatoes boiled without their skins are equally starch, with a lose of nit the wholeseome potash salts that the skin gives out during the process of cooking into the watin part of the vegetable.

A Prime Cause of Ill Health.

A famous physicians on being asked recently what is the chief cause of ill health, replied: "Worry." We can tell-ing about it all the time. This senseless introspection is the cause of many a dreading generation of this nervous folk indulge is certainly wearing and cruel. When they get too worry-ing as to whether they sleep too much or too little, they are digesting over the matter so much that the extra quantity of exercises necessary for health. In short they never give themselves a moment's peace."

There's the Rub.

"Well," said the optiplistic boarder, "there's one thing about our boarding house you can cut as much as you like there."

"Of course; same as ours," replied the pessimistic one, "you can eat as much no you like, but there's never anything you could possibly like."

$1000 In it for you

Calumet has been backed for years by an offer of $1,000 for any substance injurious to health found in the baking prepared with it.

Does not this and the fact that it complies with all pure food laws, both State and National, prove that Calumet is absolutely pure?

With the purity question settled—then Calumet is undoubtedly the best Baking Powder. It contains more leavening power; it is more uniform — every can is the same. It assures better results—and is moderate in price.

A Lesson for Diplomats.

Elihu Root, at the luncheon in Providence preceding the dedication of the John Hay Memorial library at Brown university, said of John Hay:

"His diplomacy was gracious, and it was prudent as well. I remember, in an argument about a certain International complication, how very warmly and aptly he once insisted on prudence.

"It was the Christmas season, and he said that we might learn a lesson from a little girl who was naughty in the early part of December.

"Dear me," her mother said, 'if you're going to be naughty I'm very much afraid Santa Claus won't bring you any presents.'

"The little girl frowned.

"Well,' she whispered, 'you needn't say it so near the chimney!'"

Just Shopping.

A fashionably dressed young woman entered the postoffice in a large western city, hesitated a moment, and then stepped up to the stamp window. The stamp clerk looked up expectantly, and she asked: "Do you sell stamps here?"

The clerk politely enswered, "Yes."

"I would like to see some, please," was the unmoved request.

The clerk daxedly handed out a large sheet of the two-cent variety, which the young women carefully examined. Pointing to one near the center, she said, "I will take their one, please."—Everybody's.

Old Houses.

Old houses have a far larger commercial value than their owners always realize. Such is the substance of observation in the "Areopagitica." Although as well kilt a man as a good book," applies not a little to a good building, which is not only a book but a unique manuscript that has no fellow.—Address by Thomas Hardy.

A Lesson for Diplomats.

Elihu Root, at the luncheon in Providence preceding the dedication of the John Hay Memorial library at Brown university, said of John Hay:

"His diplomacy was gracious, and it was prudent as well. I remember, in an argument about a certain International complication, how very warmly and aptly he once insisted on prudence.

"It was the Christmas season, and he said that we might learn a lesson from a little girl who was naughty in the early part of December.

"Dear me,' her mother said, 'if you're going to be naughty I'm very much afraid Santa Claus won't bring you any presents.'

"The little girl frowned.

"Well,' she whispered, 'you needn't say it so near the chimney!'"

PEACE HATH HER VICTORIES

By EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT BY W.A. PATTERSON

IF THE war and navy departments would publish in book form the records of the services of officers and men in times of peace the readers thereof would be dispossessed of the thought that all the hardships undergone and all the heroism displayed by men of the armed forces were of necessity connected with deeds of warfare. There are many thrilling stories and many human interest stories in the "peace records" of the army and navy.

Recently the monitor Puritan, a heavily armored craft of one of the older types, was used for purposes of experiment with a new high explosive. Willard S. Isham, an ordinance engineer, invented the explosive, and his claim was that with it a vessel could be destroyed from the outside just as well as from the inside. It has been held that high explosives lose their force unless more or less confined. It was known to be the rule that the effect of the explosion generally went upward and outward away from the object against which it was discharged. Mr. Isham believed that a charge of his ammunition against the side of a vessel would open the armor and would not expend its force in the air.

The monitor Puritan was chosen for the experiment. A charge of 200 pounds of the explosive was placed in an unconfined condition against the Puritan's armor plate near the stern. Capt. A. M. Knight, president of the special ordinance board, with four volunteer sailors agreed to stay on board the Puritan when the explosive was detonated. More than this, Captain Knight had the task of punching small holes in the explosive with a lead pencil to permit the introduction of fuses. This was an exceedingly delicate operation and because of the fact that the explosive was a new combination it was possible that something might happen during the puncturing. Lightly as it was performed. After the fuses were inserted Captain Knight connected electric wires with them and then went forward to a position on the booth deck with the four enlisted men who elected to stay on board with him.

The ordnance board officer turned a switch and the explosion took place. The report was thunderous. "It felt like an earthquake," said Captain Knight afterward. With his men the venturesome captain escaped injury, but their heroism was just as real as if they had been blown to atoms, for because of the fact that the explosive was a comparatively unknown quantity, no one could tell definitely what might happen.

Writing of the Puritan, which is a monitor, brings to mind the fact that officers and men serving on vessels of this type undergo hardships of which the people of the country know little. The monitor gradually is passing as an active service vessel and it is not likely that anybody connected with the service from admiral down to cook's mate is sorry for it. The heat in the monitors is something intense, and as the waves wash over the low decks of the vessels when any kind of a breeze is blowing the men are confined below with no air except such as is pumped down to them by way of the engine room, and this air is hot, oily and productive on many occasions of sickness, called sea sickness, but which in reality is nothing of the kind, although it has all the attendant symptoms of the real article.

The modern battleships are frightfully hot below decks, especially when they get into tropical and sub-tropical waters. A civilian who went to Panama with President Taft said that in his cabin when dressing for dinner he was obliged to stand directly in the draught of a blow pipe to prevent the profuse perspiration from so "melting" the bosom of his dress shirt that it would be unpresentable when he appeared at the president's table. But these monster in the staterooms stood at about 112 degrees.

Some years ago an officer who was stationed on a monitor was found dead in his berth and the surgeons pronounced his death to have been caused by apoplexy, heat apoplexy the officers of the ship called it. An old naval officer in Washington has told me that the thermometer in the cabin of the officer who died stood at 140 degrees and that the death was due solely to a heat stroke.

During the Spanish war the monitor Miantonomah was on blockading duty off the port of Havana, Cuba. The Miantonomah is an old steel monitor caused in metal and with the deck just peeping above the water. When the sea was calm and the sky was clear the sun beat down on the metal and the men who had stood the night watches and were trying to sleep suffered more severely than do the people in the crowded back tenements in New York city on a hot July night when death walks through the streets. An officer who served on a monitor during the Spanish war told me that the average temperature for a long period of time in his cabin was 104 degrees.

Recently two young officers not long out of the naval academy were forced to resign from the service because they were constantly seasick while on service on the battleships. The young fellows stuck it out for several voyages, but when it is remembered that a seasick man as a rule is so sick that he is perfectly willing to die, it can be understood what these young fellows suffered during the weeks of the voyaging. They resigned from the navy simply because they could not be of any service. They were sick from the moment the voyage began until they were back once more in port. They were competent officers and since their resignation they have been given land berths as officers of heavy artillery in the United States army.

I asked an old navy officer recently, a man who served on the old frigate Constitution, if he knew of any cases of chronic seasickness among officers and men during the old days of the service. He said he knew of only one case, that of an officer who developed seasickness after some years of service, but that it was thought that a slight injury to his spine had affected his stomach and that it was this more than the motion of the vessel which was the cause of his ailment.

This same veteran officer said that there is considerable seasickness today in the navy, although comparatively few cases that could be called chronic, and that they were due, he believed, more to the heat of the modern steel vessels than to the motion caused by the waves. In the old days of wooden ships with sail power only, there was no heat on board except that given out by the galley and by the small stove which occasionally was to be found in the captain's cabin. The old-time ships in winter were kept in warm climates as much as possible or otherwise the men would have frozen to death.

The old wooden vessel, Jamestown, once commanded by Commodore Perry, who opened the ports of Japan to the commerce of the United States, is anchored in Hampton Roads, where it is used as a marine hospital service station. A surgeon stationed on the Jamestown once told me that in the old days, when the vessel was in commission the only way the captain could warm himself without going to the galley was to have a roundshot heated in the stove, then dropped into a bucket of sand to be carried aft to his cabin, where it gave out just enough warmth to temper for a few moments the cold of the quarters.

THE HOTTEST PLACE ON A BATTLESHIP ★ ★ ★

Capt. Edmund B. Underwood, United States navy, retired from the service recently after forty years' service in the line. Just after Captain Underwood came out of the naval academy and was serving as a midshipman he was assigned to the old ship Cosipee, which went to Cuba to bring back a vessel called the Virginius, which had been seized by the Spaniards in Cuba and its crew of Americans put to death. This country came near having a war with Spain over the Virginius incident. When the Cosipee was towing the Virginius back to America Midshipman Underwood was one of three officers who were assigned to the Virginius to look after it while the towing process was on.

The life on the Virginius is one that it is impossible to describe. The Spaniards had left her in such a filthy state that living on board was intolerable even after cleaning processes had been tried. After a few days on board that ship the men looked as though they had been stricken by a fever of sickness. Finally when off the Virginia capes the Virginius gave every evidence of being a derelict. The officers and men on board escaped to the Cosipee, being obliged to leave their clothing behind. The beseeched United States government, because of some red tape reason or other, declined to make good to the wrecked sailors the property which they had lost through no fault of their own and in direct line of duty.

Captain Underwood was for two years in command of the United States government station in the Samoan Islands. He was considered one of the hindsomest men in the service of his country. He was over six feet high, finely proportioned and a fine physical specimen generally. No war with men went on in the Samoan islands, but the heat and the food and the devilishness of the climate generally did the work of the battlefield. If Captain Underwood had never been given an assignment at the Samoan Islands it is probable that he would have continued in the active service until the age limit of sixty-two years was reached. The dangers of warfare are not the only ones by any means that navy and army officers are subject to meet.

It may do no harm here to recall the story of the heroism of Lieut. James E. Bell of the United States army, who died because of his devotion to duty, died at a time when no bullets were flying, but when an even deadlier foe of necessity must be met. This story has been published many times, but it has its everlasting lesson.

Fort Jefferson, on the Tortugas, in August of the year 1873 was garrisoned by Battery M, First United States artillery. Outside of the surgeons there was only one officer, Lieuten. ant Bell, at the post. Capt. L. L. Langdon had been granted a leave of absence to go north to the bedside of his dying father. On August 28 yellow fever appeared at the post. Within two days four of the garrison had died. Upon the first announcement of the appearance of the scourge Lieutenant Bell sent all the women and children and some of the married men to an island three miles away. Within a day or two he sent to the same place nearly all the well men of the garrison, retaining only enough to nurse the sick. There could have been no criticism of Bell's course had he gone with the garrison, leaving the sick to the care of the surgeons and the nurses. He stayed and devoted himself to the sick in the hospital, assisted by the men who had volunteered. The heat was fearful. There was not a pound of ice on the island and many of the deaths that followed one after another were due to the lack of this necessity. There were 20 cases of the fever and for days and nights continuously the devoted lieutenant commander, the surgeons and the nurses knew no rest. With their own hands they dug the graves for the dead and with their own lips repeated over them the burial services.

Captain Langdon in the far north heard of the yellow fever at Fort Jefferson. He instantly relinquished his leave of absence and hastened to return to his station. Some months before the outbreak of the fever Lieutenant Bell had put in an application to be detailed as instructor of military science at the University of Vermont. The application had been granted, and Captain Langdon, hurrying southward to join his command, carried in his pocket the order relieving Lieutenant Bell from duty at Fort Jefferson and detailing him for work in Vermont. Langdon reached his post.

He called in his first lieutenant and said: "I have here orders transferring you immediately to Vermont. You have done a noble work here. There is no reason why you should stay longer. You have been through enough of this awful thing. Go."

Bell said: "Captain, I don't want the order. If I read it I suppose I shall have to obey simply because it is an order. You keep it in your pocket until the fever is over and then I'll read it and go."

Langdon shook hands with him.

Bell went on with his work. In a few days he felt the hot hand of the scourge on his brow. He went to his tent, pulled up his little camp table and wrote an official letter to the assistant adjutant general at headquarters of the department of the gulf, Holly Springs, Miss. It was a long letter, covering many pages. There was in Bell's heart that day the fear that he might die and leave undone an act of duty to others. He cherished the thought of the loyalty of the surgeons and the enlisted men who had so nobly performed their duties to the sick and dying, facing the fever and death itself without flinching. He mentioned in this official communication each doctor and man by name, recommending them for recognition at the hands of the department. Of himself he said nothing. His whole thought was that recognition should be given to others.

Lieut. James E. Bell put down his pen, went to the hospital and in three days was dead.

MARKED BY A MIRACLE

Extraordinery excitement has been caused among the peasants in the neighborhood of Kiltimagh, County Mayo, this week, by a series of what are described as miraculous happenings at the convent there, the London correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat writes.

Among the children who are being educated by the good nune of Kiltimagh is a girl of thirteen, who has been an inmate of the convent school for the last three or four years. She is described as extremely docile and refractory and more than usually religious. A few nights ago one of the nuns was awakened by fearful screams from the dormitory where the girl slept, and on going to her she was told that the child had had a terrible dream, in which she saw Christ on the cross and a soldier driving a lance into his side.

The nun comforted her and she went to sleep, but in the morning she complained that her arm was sore and on examination it was found to be marked with a cross in red and underneath the cross were the letters "I. H. S." A few days later a second cross appeared below the cross and the letters "I N. R. I.," and these were followed by the appearance of a chalice surmounted by a host in red. The marks have been examined by the parish priest, Rev. Father O'Hare, and by Dr. Madden of Kiltimagh, who vouch for their being there, but decline to express any opinion as to their cause. It is said that during the doctor's examination the child bled freely. The nuns maintain stoutly that the child had no opportunity of inflicting the injuries, if injuries they be, on herself, and I understand arrangements are being made for a thorough investigation of the mystery by a committee of ecclesiastics and medical men.

Another case illustrating in another way the credulity which still is to be found in some parts of Ireland has just come to light by the prosecution at Granard of an Australian who had been traveling in the country extracting money—not teeth—from country people who are afflicted with toothache. Thomas Kiernan said that the man told him he could cure him by extracting the nerves of his teeth and that when he consented to undergo the treatment the man took an instrument like a long needle, picked at his teeth awhile and then said what looked like a little white caterpillar on his sleeve, saying this was the nerve and that he would never suffer from toothache again.

Of course, he did suffer, and when he went to a medical man for relief and told his story he learned how he had been swindled.

GIRL HEIR TO GREAT WEALTH

Millionaire Indians Car Builder Leaves Daughter the Ward of a Chicago Bank.

Michigan City, Ind.—Little Miss Catherine Barker, the fourteen-year-old daughter of the late John H. Barker, the wealthy car builder of this city, has learned of the strange conditions under which she becomes one of the richest girls in the world.

After the funeral of her father, which was held from the family residence here, the relatives gathered in the dining room of his mansion to hear the reading of a trust deed disposing of the Barker estate of upwards of $30,000,000

son of London, nieces, and to Norton W. Berker, a nephew, of Michigan City.

The bulk of the vast estate went to the little daughter, who was an only child and the idol of her father. He was his love for her, according to intimate friends, which made him tie up her fortune in such a way that she might best be protected from fortune-hunting husbands.

Both the girl and the fortune are turned over to the guardianship of the First Trust and Savings bank, Chicago. That institution will direct her education and limit her expenditures until she is of age. Even then the trusteeship continues, and only the income of the estate will be paid to the young women.

PROPOSE A SHAFT TO DANTE

Italian Citizens of New York Subscribing for Memorial Which They Will Give to City.

New York.—New York's Italian citizens, who have already presented the city with monuments to Columbus, Garibaldi, Verdi and Verrazano, are now subscribing to a fund with which to erect a monument to Dante, author of the "Divine Comedy." The figure of the poet, of heroic size, will be backed by a shaft of granite 65 feet high, the base to support Lafe-size figures of Literature and Religion and life-size groups representing Dante's visions of hell, purgatory and heaven, will decorate the bees. At the very foot, in bas-relief, is the Romen wolf suckling Romulus and Remus. Above the poet's head is an American eagle, bearing a laurel crown. The monument is tipped with a single star symbolic of the hope of modern Italy. If the plans are approved by the city authorities, the memorial will be assigned a place in one of the parks.

Tuning the Bells.

Troy, N. Y.—The general impression is that the tone of a bell is largely a matter of accident, but this is not so. A bell must be tuned the same as a piano or any other musicel instrument. Every bell has five sounds, which must blend together in perfect harmony, and this is accomplished by shaving down certain parts until the desired harmony is secured. In the event of shaving too deep the bell is not injured, but the tuning operation is prolonged, as other parts must be operated on and cut away to a corresponding degree.

Uncle Sam May Yet Intervene in Cuba

WASHINGTON.—Troops of the United States army are in readiness to be rushed to Cuba to maintain peace and protect American and other foreign interests.

Officials of the war department took for a crisis in the affairs of the island republic. The last time, 1906, that the United States intervened in Cuba the then president of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, and the secretary of war, William H. Taft, declared that if this country was again called in to settle disputes between factions of the Cuban government and maintain peace throughout the island the Stars and Stripes would remain there.

Officials of the state and war departments have been kept in close touch with affairs in Cuba ever since the evacuation by American troops less than three years ago. Within the last six months reports and information received from American representatives in the island have indicated that the Cuban government was not substantial and could exist but a few months longer. Within the last three weeks the reports have been so discouraging that the war department has felt the necessity of keeping 5,000 troops within a 36 hours' embarkation point.

When Secretary of War Dickinson and Brig.-Gen. Clarence Edwards, chief of the bureau of insular affairs of the war department, visited Cuba in November, last year, they were startled and amazed by the disrupted and corrupt conditions which they found existing there.

It was on the strength of their report and those of John R. Jackson, minister to Cuba, that the administration deemed it advisable to have troops and munitions of war in readiness for immediate use.

Officers of the army familiar with conditions in Cuba liken them to those in Coren, saying the only difference is that the factions in Cuba have not reached the poisoning stage and that they would rather have a revolution than peace proceed along the lines than three years ago. Trouble in Dealing With Drug Evil

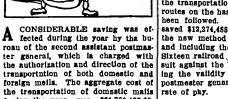
WHILE trying to co-operate with China for the suppression of traffic in illicit opium, our government is having troubles of its own in dealing with the problem in the United States. Under its new law, the drug is not admitted at our ports unless intended solely for medicinal use; yet there is no question of the fact that something like three-fourths of the 75,000 pounds of opium imported annually is consumed by the unfortunates known popularly as "dope fiends."

Of such dope fiends there are a number of species, which is one reason why the opium problem is so hard to tackle successfully. There are, to begin with, the smokers of opium, who are said to compose an army of about 90,000 of our citizens. These, however, are a minority in the total number of victims, most of whom pursue the destructive habit in its more highly specialized forms, particularly the taking of morphine in pills or by hypodermic injection.

As fast as a step is put to one method of procuring or using the drug, another springs up in response to an unfailing and ever profitable demand. For instance, the average apothecary nowadays finds a large and unprecedented demand for "codeine"—one of the alkaloids, or active principles, of opium. It is only about one-third as powerful as morphine, but acts similarly. The sale of morphine is forbidden by law nearly every where at the present time, except on prescription by a physician, but in most of the states there is no such restriction in regard to codeine.

Experts Work on Water Power Policy



A PLAN to bring together the opposing advocates of federal regulation of water power and those who stand for state regulation on a water power policy on which both can agree, is being considered by the executive committee of the National Conservation association.

The object of the plan is to afford a water power platform on which both sides of the water power controversy may unite to protect the public interest and at the same time encourage the development of the many millions of horse power now going to waste in the mountain streams of the far west and the great rivers of the central and eastern parts of the country.

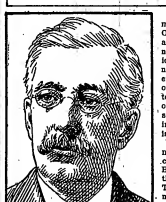
The proposed plan, which is the result of long and careful study of the water power question, has been laid before competent engineers of wide experience in water power development and officers and managers of hydro-electric power companies, who have criticised it and approved it.

The plan concedes that the federal government has no jurisdiction in dealing with the problem of power sites unless its land is to be occupied, or navigable rivers affected. It is proposed that the regulation of service and prices is to be a function of the state, leaving to the national government the duty of obtaining prompt, full and orderly development, a reasonable time limit for the lease, publicity as to financiering and fair rentals for federal property used, perhaps paying a part of the proceeds to the state. The association's plan was submitted to the proper committees in congress.

Millions are Saved in Mail Carrying

A CONSIDERABLE saving was effected during the year by the bureau of the second assistant postmaster general which is charged with the authorization and direction of the transportation of both domestic and foreign mails. The aggregate cost of the transportation of domestic mails during the year was $61,709,433.63, while the cost of foreign mails was $3,112,302.46. Notwithstanding the increased amount of mail handled the percentage of increase in the cost was only 1.15 per cent.

During the year 3,375 mail routes were in operation, covering a distance of 220,780 miles. The distance traveled by the mail of the United States was 416,923,109.56 miles. The amount of money necessary for railroad transportation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, is $446,983,000, being 5.6 per cent more than the appropriation for the current fiscal year.



In every instance possible the policy of equalizing the rate of pay for the transportation of mail by railroad routes on the basis of lowest cost has been followed. The department has saved $19,274,483 by the operation of the new method of adjusting pay, to and including the present fiscal year. Sixteen railroad companies have filed suit against the United States attacking the validity of the order of the postmaster general in readjusting the rate of pay.

Particular diligence has been manifested by the department in the inquiry into the cost to railroad companies of carrying the mail.

During the year there were 446 railroad accidents in which postal clerks were either killed or injured or in which mail matter was lost or damaged. Twenty clerks, four substitutes and three mail weighers were killed, 98 seriously and 617 slightly injured.

EXPOSED OHIO VOTE BUYING

Judge Albion Z. Blair of the common pleas court of Adams county, Ohio, who recently unearthed the amazing vote traffic in his county, is authority for the statement that there is graft in everywhere, and that it is not only the right, but the duty of every official to see that this is stamped out. Judge Blair declared that he intended going over the ground so thoroughly that none would escape, and he estimated that the grand jury would indict 2,000 or more before it had finished its sitting.

Fully 90 per cent. of the indicted men made the trip to West Union, the county seat, appeared before Judge Blair and entered pleas of guilty to the indictments found against them. To all those the court handed out a nominal fine of $5, $10 or $15—usually about the price received by them for their last vote—a suspended sentence of three or four months in the workhouse and disfranchisement for a period of five years. About a dozen men who ignored the summons of the court after indictments had been returned against them were sent for, given a fine of $100, and eight months' sentence in the Cincinnati workhouse and five years disfranchisement.

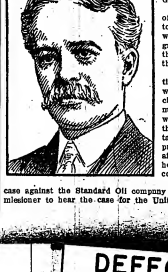
HEADS RAILROAD ENGINEERS

Grand Chief Engineer Warren S. Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, on behalf of the members of the brotherhood, accepted the agreement offered by the railroad managers by which nearly 35,000 of his fellows are to benefit. Four million dollars a year is what it will cost 61 western railroads to make good the provisions of the settlement.

In spite of their repeated assertions that they had reached the limit, the managers made concessions in the face of a threatened strike. Conciliation was made by the men also, but they established two of the chief points for which they contended—injunction over motor trucks and an increased schedule for the Mallet type of locomotive.

Chief Stone in his letter to the commissioner of labor said: "After thoroughly considering the proposal and the question in its entirety, we are of the opinion the offer will meet yield the engineers compensation commensurate with the service performed, and it is with extreme reluctance we inform you it is not acceptable to us. Now we are prompted to accept the proposition through the influence of yourself and a desire on our part to avert a calamity that would bring suffering and loss on a large number of people who are entirely innocent. With those facts in mind you are authorized to affect a settlement in accordance with the proposed terms."

NEW AID TO J. P. MORGAN



With the retirement of George W. Perkins from the great financial firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. there steps to the front as the right-hand man of the great financier Henry P. Davison, once a school teacher at Troy, Pa., who now becomes the most important member of the great banking house, next to Morgan himself.

Davison's rise in the house of Morgan has been one of the most remarkable in the history of Wall street. He has been a firm member for only two years, but in that time his star has steadily waxed. It is known that J. P. Morgan since the panic of 1907 has been convinced that in Davison were of the qualities needed for financial leadership of the highest type.

To the thorough training of Mr. Davison is due the successful outcome for American bankers of the negotiations held in Paris last summer for American participation in the great Chinese loan of $30,000,000. Hankow-Szechuan railroad loan, which foreign bankers had originally intended to absorb with no slice awarded to American bankers.

A MISSOURI SUPREME JUDGE

Governor Hadley of Missouri recently announced the appointment of Judge Franklin Ferris of St. Louis for supreme judge to succeed the late Gavon D. Burgess.

Franklin Ferris is sixty-one years of age and has been a practicing attorney in St. Louis since 1874. He was a native of New York and was graduated from Cornell university in the class of 1872, coming to Missouri the next year.

Though active in Republican politics, he did not hold office until 1893, when he was elected a member of the city council, the lower house of the municipal assembly of St. Louis. He was made president pro tempore. At that time Charles Nagel, now secretary of commerce and labor, was the presiding officer of that body. Soon after the four-year term ended in 1896 he was nominated judge of the circuit court and elected.

When the United States began the case against the Standard Oil company Judge Ferris was selected as commissioner to hear the case for the United States circuit court.

City Rube Shows Foolish Curiosity

CHICAGO.—When the gentleman from the rural districts arrives in the city and goes in amusement at the high buildings and looks with awe into the subway he is immediately set down as a Rube with bayseed in his hair and given the merry laugh by the wise city guy, who will then proceed down the street and stand for half an hour on e curbstone to watch an automobilist inflate a punctured tire, or proceed to murder a perfectly good quarter of an hour watching a cook browning the wheats in a restaurant window.

But for absolutely pure and undiluted inquisitiveness you've got to hand it to the city man, for he is right there with the research stuff. He will poke fun at his wife for her knowledge on the subject of the neighbore's doings, but he can show more genuine interest in absolutely nothing that you can imagine, and nothing out of the ordinary run of things in city streets is too small to claim his attention.

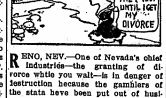
He will let his dinner get cold any day to watch a man sitting on the head of a fallen horse or to stare into a hardware store window where some demonstrator is busily engaged whittling on a stick of cordwood with a razor.

He will send the shoestring vender on his way before he has got his foot fairly inside the threshold of the office door, but will stop upon the street at any time to listen to the remarks of another vender, who is wildly demonstrating a patent collar button.

He will turn himself inside out to get a glimpse of a picture carried under the arm of some citizen, which picture he would never glance at were it hung in some prominent place.

Many a visitor to a city has been badly stung by the simple taste of the natives in the matter of something exciting. A stranger, coming up one of the main thoroughfares o f seeing a crowd of a couple of hundred people, naturally looks for some sort of a catastrophe, and after working his way to the center of the crowd to see them gazing at some new-fangled motor cycle, or watching a lehorer descending from a manhole, is naturally chagrined.

Doctors Want a National Leprosaria

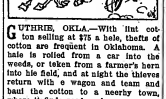


NEW YORK.—Nine lepers, inmates of institutions in the vicinity of this city, were exhibited the other night for public examination at a gathering of physicians by the Academy of Medicine. One of the patients, a Chinaman, was from Paterson, N. J.; two were from Brooklyn, two from the city hospital, three from the skin and cancer hospital. The purpose of exhibiting the lepers is stated to be the beginning of an effort "to educate the public away from the hysterical attitude it has heretofore shown whenever the presence of a leper becomes a matter of general knowledge."

It was declared that the attitude of the people in general toward lepers has not in the least advanced since the middle ages, and that, as a result, many lepers, in fear and terror, conceal the fact that they are suffering from the disease instead of applying for and receiving humane and intelligent treatment. There are at present 35 cases of leprosy under treatment in New York and vicinity. Many of these patients, it is said, make occasional visits to the shopping district, to banks, or to hospitals, riding openly in trains, street cars and ferry boats.

Six physicians from different parts of the United States and the American colonies1 possessions discussed leprosy at the meeting, and all agreed that in New York city there is no likelihood of infection. They declare in favor of a national leprosaria, with stations in Florida and San Francisco, urging in favor of such an institution that it was impracticable for the states to take action on account of the small number of cases in each state and it was unfair from a national standpoint to allow one state to drive its lepers across the border into other states.

Reno Divorce Colony Is Threatened



RENO, NEV.—One of Nevada's chief industries—the granting of divorce while you wait—is in danger of extinction because the gamblers of the state have been put out of business. The legislature will be asked to repeal the law that makes the gamblers go to work, and, if this cannot be accomplished, a bill will be introduced mandating the present divorce law and making it as hard to get a divorce here as it is in other states. Under the present law six months' residence is all that is required, and the divorce colony, all or them good spenders and unemployed, seems here waiting for the time to tell the court about matrimonial troubles, are a fine source of income.

Not' even the most enthusiastic Nevadan believes that these well-to-do, fashionable people of the east come out here because they like the climate, scenery or residents. They come because it offers the shortest route by half of any that leads from matrimony.

In any other state a year's residence is required and Reno is preferred by those in a hurry to living a year under more congenial surroundings.

It is expected that an effort will be made to effect a compromise with those who insist upon this action as retaliation for driving the gambling houses out of the state.

Mules Run Away With Blazing Cotton

GUTHRIE, OKLA.—With fine cotton selling at $75 a bale, thefts of cotton are frequent in Oklahoma. A bale is rolled from a car into the weeds, or taken from a farmer's hern into his field, and at night the thieves return with e wagon and team and haul the cotton to a nearby town, where it finde ready sale.

Two bales of cotton were found in a ravine at the roadside near Guthrie. The fact was reported to the sheriff, who placed eight guards to arrest the persons that came for the cotton. Shortly after midnight three men appeared with a bale and began rolling it down the highway. When the thieves were commanded to halt, under arrest, they fled and the officers opened fire. One of the thieves, all negroes, was captured, the others escaping.

News of the arrest was telephoned to the sheriff, who got out of bed and started for the scene. The two fugitives had returned with a wagon, and were loading in the cotton when they were surprised and arrested by the sheriff. The other officers came up, and the three captives were handcuffed and put into their wagons. On the way to town one of the negroes stepped on the gun, connected at the bottom of the wagon, and it exploded, the bullet narrowly missing one of the mules shead, and the mules ran away.

By the time they were stopped the bale of cotton was on fire, and a strong wind was blowing, with no water near. It was decided to make a fast drive to town, and call out the fire department. The faster the mules ran the higher burned the blazing cotton, scorching one of the negroes. The wagon next caught fire. The fire department put out the flames, but the cotton was destroyed and the wagon ruined.

AMERICA AND IRRIGATION.

Ours is the foremost country in the world in the reclamation of its arid land. To the unreveled easterner the extent of the irrigation of western lands under direct government supervision is unknown. The work of individual and corporate concerns raises the actual reclamation of arid land in the west to an enormous total acreage. Most of this work has been accomplished within the past decade, while each year the plans for still further pushing the conquests of artificial irrigation are extended, says the Pittsburg Gazette-Times. That the prestige in this important department of home building belongs to the United States is further demonstrated by a request recently submitted to the state department by the Australian government. Australia has several wide extended areas of arid land. The reclamation of much of this has been undertaken, but the first difficulty that confronted the government was a lack of expert knowledge of the actual work to be done and of the means used to secure the largest and surest returns on the money invested. In this dilemma Australia turned to the United States, where irrigation on the broadest lines has been ably demonstrated under government control.

Workmen in demolishing an ancient house situated in the Rue de Strasbourg, opposite the old Mont de Piete at Nantes, have made an interesting discovery which is likely to attract considerable attention, since the find was at once dispersed by the men. It consisted of a number of gold and silver coins of different epochs. The most interesting bore the effigy of Alphonse VIII., king of Galicia and Castile, who reigned from 1126 to 1158. They bear on the exergue an inscription in Arabic in these terms: "The Emir of the Catholics is aided by Allah, and Allah protects them." The find is interesting in more ways than one, and it is likely that numismatic writers will not fail to make use of these coins to show the trade relations of Nantes about the period of the Hundred Years War.

The defendant in a case before Judge Ibsen, who objected to being described as a gentlemen, may be commended on his refusal, to be inbcled with n term which even Sir James Murray is shy of defining, says the London Chronicle. There is the old legal definition, "all above the rank of a yeoman," and there is Sir William Blackstone's description of a gentleman as "one who can live idly and without labor." There is also the historic definition given by a witness at the trial of Thurtell for the murder of Mr. Weare as "one who drives a gig." And the eshman probably expresses the average opinion of it to whint constitutes a man, o gontlemnn when he says: "You're a gentleman, sir," to the spendthrift who does not ask change for half n crown on a shilling fare.

Two of the rare dolirrs of 1804 have been found. It is offermed thet only four of these coins are in existence, and numismntologists attach great value to them. The last coin sold brought $3,000. But of course if they continue to be found in this fashion the discoveries are likely to "bear" the market.

Radium has also come down among the other necessaries of life, a grain of it having recently sold for $72,000. Still, at that rate, the time is not clearly in sight when families can afford to by in an entire winter's supply with reduced prices for cash.

A veterinarian on Long Island refused to take an anaesthetic for an operation because he wished to watch it thnt he might get surgical points. A man like this is just the kind not likely to inflict needless pain on athers.

The meanest man has been found in New Jersey. In a quarrel with his wife he took the false teeth from her mouth and kept them, saying he had paid for them. Naturally, in court she made a biting charge against him.

ANDREW CARNEGIE GIVES $10,000,000 TO WASHINGTON RESEARCH INSTITUTE.

GIFTS TOTAL $25,000,000

Donor Announces That Through the Institution 50,000 Worlds Have Been Discovered and New Process for Making of Cement Found.

New York.—The donation of an additional endowment of $10,000,000 to the Carnegie institution of Washington by Andrew Carnegie, the founder, was announced Friday.

This latest contribution brings the total of Mr. Carnegie's gifts to the institution to $22,000,000, and will enable its directors to broaden greatly the scope of the work done under the general guidance and with the co-operation of the institute.

Coupled with the formel announcement was a statement by Mr. Carnegie that the work of the institution had cleared from blame the captain of a British ship who ran his vessel upon the rocks, by proving that the British admiralty charts by which the captain was guided were two or three degrees astray.

The discovery of 60,000 new worlds by Professor Hale at the observatory on Mount Wilson, Cal., also was announced. The observatory was established by the institution, and its operations and discoveries afford Mr. Carnegie more delight, perhaps, than any other workings of the institution.

Mr. Carnegie also announced that a far more powerful telescope than man has ever made is now under construction for the Mount Wilson observatory. With it he hopes to make possible the discovery of still more celestial hodies.

The new telescope will have n lens of 100 inches diameter. Mr. Carnegie declares that "the whole world is going to listen to the oracle on the top of Mount Wilson, and in a few years we shall know more about the universo than Galileo and Copernicus ever dreamed of. I hope I shall live long enough to hear the revelations thnt are to come from Professor Hale on Mount Wilson."

Mr. Carnegie further declared that the institute soon will be ready to show n formule for the making of portland cement.

"It hes found tha ingredients necessary by anniysis," he said, "and that invaluable material can be produced in any part of the world, wherever the elements are found. Hitherto, as I understend it, cement could only be made from certnin comparetively rare deposits."

It was nearly ten years ngo—in 1902—that the institute was founded by Mr. Carnegie. At that time he gave the board of trustees a fund of $10,000,000 returning an annual income of five per cent. Five years later he added $2,000,000 to the endowment of the institution, which was incorporated in 1904.

New York.—Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Life Assurance society and secretary of the navy under Theodore Roosevelt, died suddenly in the Hotel Seymour in this city where he had gone on n huitness errand.

Apoplexy ceused death. After an investigatih by Coroner Feinberg it developed that Mr. Morton had been ill for some time and that his own physician, Dr. Joseph Adler, hnd told him he could not be cured.

Mr. Morton come upon the knowledge thnt he was seriously ill last December, when he proposed taking out whet was called a Christmas policy in his own company. The Equitable's physician told him after an exmnnation that he suffered from kidney trouble and hardening of the arteries. Mr. Morton refused to believe that anything was wrong with him after went ahend with his activities at the Equitable.

He hnd intended taking a trip to Europe, to leave here with his wife on February 22, and statecoons on a steamer hed been engaged. Mr. Morton consented to this trip only after Dr. Frnnk Billings, a Chicago specialist, whom he visited after the Christmas holidays, had urged him to take a complete rest. The physicien informed Mr. Morton thnt he could not endure the strain of work.

Paul Morton was born May 22, 1857, in Detroit, Mich. He received a common and high school education in Nebraska. Entering the employ of the Burlington railroad as a clerk at the age of fifteen, he rose to the position of general passenger agent and later to that of general freight agent. On February 1, 1890, he became first vice-president of the Colorndo Fuel and Iron company.

In 1895 he was appointed third vice-president of the Santa Fe railroad and was later promoted to second vice-president.

President Roosevelt appointed Mr. Morton as secretary of the navy in 1904, he serving from July 1 of that year until July 1, 1905.

In 1905 he became president of the Equitable Life Assurance society and had held that position ever since. He was also vice-president of the Pan American railway.

FREIGHT RATE HEARING ENDS

COMMISSION WILL DECIDE CASES ABOUT MARCH 1.

Arguments on Tariff Advance in Both Eastern and Western Territory Are Concluded.

Washington. — Cheirmen Clements of the interestate commerce commission mede the announcement upon the conclusion of the arguments on the proposed incrense in freight tariffs in the Western Trunk Line association territory that the carriers hnd decided to further defer the advences from Febrnary 1 to March 15 so that the commission might have sufficient time in which to deni with the important questions presented.

The commission expects to announce its decisions in the eastern and western cases by March 1. Meantime the members will study the records with e view to reaching e conclusion.

It is scarcely likely that discussion of the cases will be taken up by the commission, as a body, before the early part of February, and perhaps not before the middle of February.

It is quite certain that the decisions, once they are reached, will be announced as soon as they can be prepared, as it is the desire of the commission to afford both the carriers and the shippers edequete time in which to adjust themselves to whatever conditions the decisions mey make.

Woman's Danger Periods Made Safe

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease.

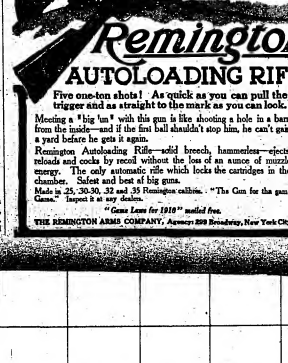
Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Here is proof:

Natick, Mass.,—"I cannot express what I went through during the Change of Life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still. My limbs were cold. I had creepy sensations and could not sleep nights. I was finally told by two physicians that I had a tumor.

"I read one day of the wonderful cures made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it has worked a miracle in me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold for women during this period of life. If it will help others you may publish this letter."—Mrs. Nathan B. Greenleaf, 24 No. Main St., Natick, Mass.

ANOTHER SIMILAR CASE.

Cornwallville, N. Y.,—"I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for some time for Change of Life, nervousness, and fibroid growth.



"Two doctors advised me to go to the hospital, but one day while I was away visiting, I met a woman who told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and I know it helped me wonderfully. I am very thankful that I was told to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Wm. Boughton, Cornwallville, N. Y., Greene Co.

The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have thousands of such letters as those above—they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger—it has stood the test for years.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

TEN MILLION PEOPLE IN THE CANADIAN WEST BY 1920

"Toronto Star," Dec. 16th, 1910.

The prediction is made that before 1920 Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia will have ten million people. It is made not by a sanguine Western journal but by that very sedate business newspaper, the New York Commercial. It is based upon actual observation, upon the wheat-growing capacity of the Canadian West, and upon the prospects of development following the building of railways. The writer shows how the position of leading wheat market of the world passed from Milwaukee to Minneapolis and thence to Winnipeg. Canada's wheat-growing belt is four times greater than that of the United States, and only five per cent of Canada's western agricultural area is under cultivation. There are 170,000,000 acres of wheat lands which will make these Western Provinces richer, more populous, more dependable for food supplies than the Northern States can ever become. The center of food supremacy will change to Canada, and 25 years more will give this country 40,000,000 population west of Ontario.

All these estimates of population are in the nature of guesses, and must not be read too literally. But the enormous area of wheat-growing land, the rapid construction of railways, and the large volume of immigration are facts which must be recognized. They point to the production of an ever-increasing surplus of wheat and other cereals. However rapidly the urban, the industrial and commercial population of Canada may increase, the increase of home consumption is hardly likely to keep pace with that of the production of wheat; for a single acre of wheat will provide for the average annual consumption of four people.

While production in Canada is thus running ahead of consumption at a prodigious rate, consumption in the United States is almost at full operation, and the surplus for export is growing smaller year by year. It is true that the limit of actual power of productive wheat is as yet far away. By methods of intensive cultivation, such as prevail in France, the production could be greatly increased. But with the overflowing granary of Canada so close at hand, it seems likely that our neighbors will begin to import from us, turning their own energies more largely to other forms of agriculture.

It must be remembered that while the Northern States resemble Canada in climate and products, the resemblance diminishes as you go southward. The wheat belt gives place to a corn belt, and this again to semi-tropical regions producing cotton, tobacco, cane-sugar, oranges and other tropical fruits.

The man who secures a farm in Western Canada at the present time secures an investment better than the best of bond of any government or bank. It is no unusual thing for a farmer in Western Canada to realize a profit of from $5 to $10 per acre. There are thousands of free homesteads of 160 acres each still to be had, and particulars can be obtained by writing your nearest Canadian government agent.

Art in the Nude.

The photographer's lady was very preoccupied showing some samples of work to prospective sitters, when a tall red ravaged individual, apparently from "the land," stalked solemnly into the studio, and intimated that he would like to know what the "pictures" were worth.

"Like that, $3 a dozen," said the photographer's lady, handing him one.

The former gazed long and earnestly at the photograph of a very small baby sitting in a wash basin.

"And what would it cost with my clothes on?" he finally asked.

Many who think they mean right are right mean.

Dan Waller's Heart

By STACY E. BAKER

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

After twenty years of harsh battling in the marts of the world, Dan Waller was about to return to the simple people of his early years. Wayville had cut no allurements. He did not want to go back. Nevertheless his valet was, even then, packing the careful selection of clothes that he had decided to take with him. All this was in answer to the imperious demand of a fresh-spoken physician.

"Go back," the specialist had told him. "If you care to live forget that such a place as Wall street exists, and go back to the village."

Dan Waller was thirty-eight years old, but his face was the hard, inexpressive face of the professional stock gambler. He looked older.

Save for a pellet Dan Waller did not have the appearance of a sick man. His every movement was pregnant with vitality, and his broad shoulders were carried proudly thrown back, as became the shoulders of one who had conquered in his every tilt with the world.

It was the heart of the man that had at last rebelled—but before this Waller had accumulated over a million dollars.

An orphan, brought up with a frugal farmer, who had taken him out of an orphans' home with a calculating eye on the wage frame of the boy, Waller couldn't look back over the experiences of his youth in Wayville with thrilly little quivers of joy. Misfortune, his master, had been a master in every sense of the word. He had given the lad no consumption of fear, had compelled him to give in the way of clothes and education, but he had always striven to impress upon Dan with each gift—ill gifts they could be called—that whatever came from him —Martin—was charity.

All this could result in one thing. There came a time when the boy became a young man—and the young man was conspicuously absent from the Martin house one morning when breakfast was being attempted to call his chattel from his attic room.

Dan Waller, his belongings on his back and in a cotton handkerchief, had responded to the beckoning figures of the city.

And now he wobbered how Wayville would receive him. His wonderful wheat Martin, his old taskmaster, would say. Responsive to a sudden vagary, he went across to the massive writing desk in the corner of this luxuriant library, and sprawled once into across a sheet of the heavy linen paper bearing his monogram.

"Am coming back. Meet me at afternoon train tomorrow. I want to talk with you."

The hell brought the valet. "Here came from the then at the desk, "mail this, and, by the way, you are not to go with me to Wayville. You will remain here, subject to my orders."

"Yes, the Honorable Wayville," came in stilted English from the Japanese, who bowed low, and silently left the room.

The only afternoon train from the east came to a standstill into Wayville just long enough to allow its passenger for this point to alight. Waller, dressed in unassuming black, pushed back the broad hat from his face, and stared into the face of the well remembered figure of Martin. A trim, daintily clad girl tripped toward him.

"You don't know me," came in a soft voice.

"You have the advantage of me," acknowledged the broker politely. What there was something about the sunny hair, the great blue eyes that touched some dim chord of memory.

"And yet," laughed the girl, "I knew you but, of course, your note told us that you would come, and as you were the only passenger, I can't claim much credit."

"You are not—Ethel?" queried Waller, in amazement.

"Just so!"

In Waller's pleasureless years with the Martins, Ethel, the daughter of his master, was the one member of the family who, in all his futile revolts, won him clemency from her grizzled father; and each time she came to believe in such a thing as humanity. He had not forgotten.

Waller remembered Ethel Martin as an earnest-eyed little girl with stiff, tawny braids sticking out on each side of her head, and in prim starched dresses on Sunday, and wore pinafores on week days. She had been a good ten years older than she. Waller found himself puzzling as to why a plain whited sepulchre dress could make a maid appear so positively beautiful.

"Yes, I am Ethel," the girl was saying. "We received your letter that day—but papa is dead. He died seven years ago. Fred, the baby, you will remember—mother, and myself are living in the old home, and—and we would like to have you stop with us while you are in Iowa."

In this invitation Waller detected the personal wish of Ethel. He knew well enough that the mother of that girl, a broken-spirited woman, had long since ceased to take interest in any happening, no matter how irregular. Fred, who had been an infant in arms at the time he left, had gone every, would hardly enthuse over the coming of his father's runaway boy.

"I will be pleased to accept your kind invitation," came from Waller. The New Yorker had intended to stay at the old tavern. In accepting Ethel Martin's hospitality, his ready lips had taken the wish from his heart, and he methodical brain dumbly analyzed the reason as he plodded along.

"How does it happen, Ethel," he asked, "that you are so—er—different from these other women of your town?" He waved discreet fingers toward a slovenly pair in a nearby yard.

Ethel laughed. "Dad sent me away to school," she said.

Waller was received by the widow of Martin with a listless palm of the hand, and colorless words of welcome. The woman was beyond feeling or emotion. She, too, had been a slave to the stern men now in his grave.

Waller, explaining that he would be in Wayville for some time, made arrangements for board. His ideas of tavern accommodations had faded since he had seen the daughter of his old master. For the first time in his life Waller was to love.

"Ethel," he said one day, "I have been here nearly four months, and now I must return. My work in the city calls me. Will you not go back with me—as my wife?"

"No," answered the girl shortly.

Fingers seemed to grip the heart of the man. The green fields and the scattered trees by the roadside became a confused jumble, and Waller lost consciousness.

"Dearest!" The appeal in the words came through a mist of oblivion and drew the broker back to life. "Dearest, I didn't mean it. Oh, come back to me, Dan; come back to me!"

His eyes opened and his weak hands fumbled for the willing ones of the girl. "My heart!" he gasped. "The doctor told me that a sudden shock would do this. That is why I came here this summer—for quiet."

"But I didn't mean what I said. I—I will go back with you."

"Rather," came from Waller, slowly, "I will remain here for a time. There can be no more city for me—now. The excitement of it would kill me. Dearest, we have seen enough—and love. We will remain here."

HE WOULD CALL IT SQUARE

Actor Who Was Loaned Money Is In Play, Was Quite Willing to Be Fined.

Edwin Markham, the famous author of "The Man With the Hoe," is a bitter opponent of child labor. Discussing the effort that he is making toward the reform of child labor laws, Mr. Markham said recently:

"I would abolish, too, the contemptible unjust system of fines. What right has an employer to fine a bend an hour's pay for five minutes' lateness? What right has he, because he has damaged some goods two cents' worth, to fine him a dime?"

Mr. Markham then, after a moment's pause, smiled.

"I wish to goodness," he said, "that every victim of the fine system had the same story to tell as an actor I heard of yesterday.

"This actor worked under a manager who was a great flirt. For a bad makeup, for lateness, for noise in the wings, for a hundred things the poor ers were bilked from a quarter to two dollars. The worst of all the fines were one of ten cents for failure to return 'properties;' for this was a duty that every one continually forgot.

"In a financial drama one night the supply of stage money ran out and the manager loaned an actor eight or nine dollars in real bills to use in the next scene.

"The manager said sternly to the actor the following Saturday:

"'By the way, Booth, you haven't returned that nine dollars I gave you in act three Monday night.'

"'Never mind,' said the actor. 'Just fine me a dime.'"

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Jan. 17.—Moses E. Clapp was reelected United States senator for another term of six years.

Governor Eberhart recommended in a message to the Senate, that legislation be formulated to provide state funds for the schools of Koochiching county equal to the amount of taxes that state lands in that section would pay were they taxed. He did this on petition from residents of Koochiching county.

Two house bills increasing the gross earnings tax of railroads from 4 to 5 per cent were introduced in the house. A bill presented by Representative C. P. Warner of Aitkin, calls for an increase from 4 per cent with the provision that the additional 1 per cent tax be placed in the road and bridge funds.

Representative Boerner's bill provides for a straight increase.

A step forward in the campaign for clean milk was taken when Senator Johnston introduced a bill in the senate that would prohibit the shipping of cream more than 30 miles over any railroad line unless pasteurized or shipped in a refrigerator car properly iced and in a sanitary condition.

A concurrent resolution was introduced by Senator Collier directing the Minnesote tax commission to draft proposed laws that would compel all property subject to a personal tax except gross earnings of railroads and other corporations and inheritances, bequeles and gifts. The tax commissioner was further ordered to draw up proposed acts for an equitable gross earning tax on all corporations and on income tax.

Representative Brown introduced a bill withdrawing Morrison county from the Seventh judicial district and enlarging it to the Fifteenth judicial district.

St. Paul, Jan. 18—Planning the construction of state institutions and which shall form a complete network over Minnesota, Representative L. C. Boerner introduced a bill which may have inexcusable influence on the internal development of the state.

Mr. Spooner's bill calls for an appropriation of $40,000 and authorizes the governor, the attorney general and the state auditor to investigate the feasibility of the proposed plan.

This is what is known as the Mesabe system of construction and was first presented to the state legislature by F. D. Morshon two years ago. It would connect the Lake of the Woods with the Red River of the north, draining the Red River valley, carrying the water to the Minnesota river, developing the Minnesota river from St. Paul to the Twin Cities and then connecting by means of the St. Croix and other streams and the necessary artificial channels with Lake Superior. It is planned to make this channel deep enough to carry vessels plying on the lakes. Connected with this idea is a plan to develop the Mississippi river from Minneapolis to St. Paul.

The explicit route of the proposed system of canals involves connecting the Lake of the Woods with Lake Traverse at interstate crossing, connecting Lake Traverse with Lake Vermillion lake with Red lake end developing water powers along the line.

Then comes another berga canal, connecting Red lake with the barge canal from Minneapolis to Duluth, about 20 feet high is to be constructed near the interstate crossing, and another canal to be built near Detroit Falls, 80 feet high, in the Minnesota river, creating between the two falls a permanent lake in the valley of the Minnesota river, while a ship canel is to connect this sea or lake near Sauk Rapids or St. Cloud with the Mississippi river.

Drainage canels are to be constructed to carry the flood or overflow water of the surrounding country into the barge canal, or into the inland lake.

The plan calls for the construction of a new channel for the upper part of the Mississippi river below St. Anthony falls. The canal system north of the Mississippi will run by way of the Rum, Kettle and Snake rivers, running northwesterly from St. Cloud, connecting with the upper St. Croix river, thence down the Bois Brule river to Lake Superior, the ship canel to be constructed from the St. Croix river to a channel navigable for the river boats.

Reapportionment hopes of Northern Minnesota were advanced at the joint session of the senate and senate reapportionment committees.

Senator Hackney, chairman of the senate committee, made chairman of the joint committee. He immediately asked Representative Congdon for recommendations that the two had agreed on as tentative means of limiting the field of activity within broad lines.

The first was that the maximum for membership under the new reapportionment should be 63 senatore and 126 representatives. This would leave the senate unchanged numerically, but would increase the house by nine.

The second was that county lines should be left intact as far as practicable. In Hennepin, Ramsey and St. Louis counties the county lines would have to be cut; or, where there were cities like St. Cloud, situated in three counties, the county lines would have to be severed, but whenever possible the county lines should be kept.

The third was that, in fixing the bounds of legislative districts after grouping of counties for the purpose of electing senators and representatives on a population basis, each such group should have the privilege, by its representatives, of suggesting to the chairman of both house and senate committees how the groups should be divided into districts. The written statement of Mr. Congdon said the reason for this provision was that the different sections understood the conditions in their own parts of the state better than anyone else could, and to have each section of the state divide itself would save the entire committee a lot of work. All three rules were adopted as tentative guides.

J. A. Burnquist, recently defeated candidate for speaker of the house and chairman of the committee on normal schools, introduced the first bill for an appropriation of about $600,000 for the maintenence of the five state normal schools of the state. The appropriation is to be distributed as follows: Winona, $70,860; Manketo, $193,050; Red Wing, $161,350; Moorhead, $142,200; Duluth, $69,500.

Representative Fisher, of Minneapolis, has introduced a bill which would restrict the expenditures of candidates for election to state and county offices.

St. Paul, Jan. 20.—A comprehensive educational bill abolishing the board of regents of the state university and eliminating every educational board was submitted to the house committee on education by Representative W. T. Stone of Park Rapids. It calls for the creation of an entirely new system of educational supervision in Minnesota and is along the lines of the recommendation made by Governor Eberhart to centralize responsibility in the state government.

Mr. Stone proposes the creation of a state educational commission to consist of five members to be appointed by the governor. This board is to act in a supervisory capacity over every state educational institution in the state.

W. I. Nolan's resolution providing for a record of the roll calls on the final vote on all bills, considered by the committee, passed the house by a large majority.

Representative C. E. Stone, of St. Paul, introduced a bill providing for an appropriation of $600,000 for the construction of a historical library museum and collection of historic relics for the State Historical society.

"Representation shall be based upon population, except in cities of 100,000 or more, in which case the population shall be double that of other sections on the basis of representation," the above amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota was introduced by Senator Works in the senate and was referred to the committee on reapportionment.

Senator Wilson introduced a bill regulating liquor licenses and brewery control. Senator Wilson's bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any brewery or wholesale liquor house or their agents to assist in procuring a saloon license or own or rent any building in which the liquor is retailed.

New liquor option rules for cities of the fourth class were proposed by Senator Hughes in a bill introduced before the senate.

The bill provides that a petition signed by 10 per cent of the voters in any village or town of the fourth class sufficient to compel the electors of the town to put the question of liquor licensing or not liquor licensing on the ballot at the next election. At least 10 voters must sign the petition, however, even though there are less than 100 voters. The number of voters, shell be the number who cast their ballots at the last election.

Telephone operators and wire-house commission authority to regulate telephone companies was introduced in the house by Representative Schwertz. It would compel telephone companies to connect with intersecting lines of other companies where this action would improve the service.

Any city that exports special funds for the relief of the fire sufferers at Baudette and Spooner, without authority in its charter, will have their acts legalized if a bill introduced by Senator Sullivan is passed.

ANOTHER MEXICAN BATTLE.

Government and Revolutionists Fight Sixteen Hours.

Chihuahua, Mexico.—A 16-hour battle between 70 government volunteers and escorted and 100 revolutionists occurred at the village of Coyome. This report reached General Hernandez, commanding the military zone. No details were given but from the duration of the engagement it is presumed the losses were considerable.

CHILDREN BURNED IN HOME.

Overheated Stove Starts Fire During Absence of Parents.

Boyne City, Michigan. — During the temporary absence of their parents, two young children of William Johnson, a farmer living near Boyne Falls, were burned to death in their home. The fire, which probably started from an overheated stove, was discovered by Mrs. Johnson when she returned after a half hour's absence.

Different Now, of Course.

"Civil service reform has given us a splendid army of civil servants. It wasn't always so."

The speaker, Mayor Whitlock of Toledo, smiled.

"When I was writing my first short stories," he resumed, "we had civil servants of a different stamp. An elderly relative, a resident of my native town, sought out, back in those days, his congressman.

"'Congressman,' he said, 'I supported you at the polls, and now I expect you to get me boy a good civil service job.'

"'All right, friend,' the congressmen enswered, 'what can your boy do?'

"'Do?' snorted the other. 'What can he do? Why, crime, man. If he could do anything, do you think I'd be bothering you?'"

CHEATED FOR YEARS.

Prejudice Will Cheat Us Often If We Let It.

You will be astonished to find how largely your sex influences us in every way by unreasoning prejudice. In many cases you will also find that the prejudice has swindled you, or rather, made you swindla yourself. A case in point:

"I have been a constent user of Grape-Nuts for nearly three years," says a correspondent, "and I am happy to say that I am well pleased with the result of the experiment, for such it has been.

"Seeing your advertisement in almost all of the periodicals, for a long time I looked upon it as a hoax. But after years of suffering with gaseous and bitter eructations from my stomach, together with sores or less loss of appetite and flesh, I concluded to try Grape-Nuts food for a little time and note the result.

"I found it delicious, and it was not long till I began to experience the beneficial effects. My stomach ressumed its normal state, the eructations and bitterness ceased and I have gained all my lost weight back.

"I am so well satisfied with the result that so long as I may live and retain my reason Grape-Nuts shall constitute quite a portion of my daily food."

THE SUNBEAM.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Seven Years And No More.

It does not matter what our opinion may be regarding any more extension of time for eleven towns homesteaders to make final proof, our readers can rely on the fact, that any information we publish is correct. We wrote U. S. Senator Clapp regarding the matter and last week and received the following reply:

Washington, January 10th, 1911.

Mr. W. G. Hunt,
Sunbeam, Minn

Dear Sir:

Your favor of the 23rd ult. was received in my absence and formal acknowledgement made by my secretary.

It would be impossible to secure any more general extensions, two having already been granted. Of course if there was any particular case where they had suffered very unusual sickness, or the head of the family had died, or something like that the Department no doubt would be disposed to deal with it separately. With kind regards, I am,

Very truly yours,
Moses E. Clapp.

It would seem by the above that there would not be any law passed by congress extending the time of making final proof on homesteads beyond the seven years, as the law now provides.

In all of our experience with homesteads and the making of final proof on them in western Minnesota we only know of one man that now owns his farm who let his seven years run out before he tried to make his final proof. His name is Ole Sandsen, he lives in the town of Chester in Polk county, his post office address is Lindsay Minn. Just write him a letter and ask him if he would advise you to wait until after your seven years is out before you try to prove up.

We note some of our country exchanges begin to appreciate the fact that the Republican county committee has not yet issued a statement of the party funds expended in the last campaign. It certainly is time that a report was made. The position that the secretary-treasurer occupies in the public eye should insure a report. There is nothing so apt to create suspicion in the mind of the public as the witholding of a report of how public funds have been expended.—Bemidji Sentinal.

Maybe they was instructed to put the money where it would do the most good, and put it in their pocket.

On Tuesday of this week Representative O'Neil of Thief River Falls introduced a bill in the house and Senator Hanson in the senate, which will if it passes both houses, authorize the commissioners of Pennington county to levy a tax for county purposes at one-half mills. Spotlight.

Now that we are into the Pennington county deal we may as well admit that there is no cash to do business with and that it is time to acknowledge the facts as they exist. The fairest way to raise the cash would be to call a special election and bond the county for enough to pay for the books, build new vaults to put them in and pay other expenses until we can raise money by our taxes. A representative of all the people should not try to railroad class legislation through the legislature which would make a part of the people, in this locality, pay all the expenses of getting the new county started and others nothing. However there is not much danger of any such a law passing the legislature, as it would have to be a general law, and would open the door for all the county commissioners in the state to levy special taxes, and will not receive support enough to make it a law.

A Mean Advantage.

In a breach of promise case the barrister who held the brief for injured beauty arranged that his fair client should be so placed that her charms should be well under the observation of the jury. He began a most pathetic appeal by directing their attention to her beauty and calling for justice upon the head of him who could wound the heart and betray the confidence of one so fair, concluding with a peroration so full of pathos as to melt the court to tears. The counsel for the defendant then rose, and after paying the lady the compliment of admitting that it was impossible not to succumb to the encomiums lavished upon her face, he added that nevertheless he felt bound to ask the jury not to forget that she was a wooden leg. Then he sat down. The important fact of which the plaintiff's counsel was unaware was presently established, and the jury, feeling rather sheepish at their tears, assessed damages at the smallest amount.

The American Baby.

The American baby has a fine, strong ancestry. The young men of England who were impatient of religious restraint and of physical oppression; the young men of Germany touched with the dream of democracy; the pick of northern Europe, the strong, the fair, the self reliant, the conscientious English at bottom, but with a dash of the best blood of other races—this is the American baby, and so big and so best ever had a better heritage. Take it as it goes, in Massachusetts, in Ohio, in Michigan, in Washington, in California, the average American baby has in its veins more of the blood of the Plantagenets than any king now flying has. It was his fortune to have come from the daughter lines and the lines of the younger sons, not from the elder son, whom British custom has married for the aristocrat.—David Starr Jordan.

Willing to Be Honest.

Eliot May, the great English artist, earned his first fame in Australia. One day a broken down minister applied to him for charity, and May engaged him as a model. As a joke he also demanded that his eighty-year-old possessor agree to leave him his skeleton when he died. When May left Australia he raised his model in. "You've played me a dirty trick," said May. "My skeleton was out of time skeleton. I could never imagine one to sound order and condition for half the money you've cost me." The old fellow, ashamed of his base ingratitude to his best and most ancient friend, answered: "Don't be angry with me, Mr. May. It's not my fault. I meant to keep my word. Stay in Sydney a few months longer and give me another chance to show you that I am a man of honor."

Rachel Plays.

"It is a tremendous undertaking to get a new play presented and produced," once said the late Clyde Fitch to a friend. "So many are written, and so few ever see the light of day. An English playwright with a gift of humorous exaggeration illustrated this fact to me once. He told me how he submitted a play to a celebrated actor and how in the course of the conversation the actor remarked:

"'Don't you think it is growing chilly in this room?'

"'Yes; it is rather,' the young playwright admitted.

"Then the actor rang a bell, and a servant forthwith appeared.

"'James,' said the actor, 'this room is rather cold. You may put three more manuscripts on the fire.'"—Lippincott's.

A Complaint Grim.

A famous delay at an elaborate entertainment at a fifth avenue millionaire's palace in New York rose to receive Mr. Stevenson's "Dead Man," he announced its subject and promised to begin he heard a lady near him say distinctly:

"What is the next piece? Something funny, I hope. You know I detest that, how odd! Of course it must be funny—something about bad cooking, I suppose."

Playing Her Cards.

Tommy—May I play a little game of cards with you, Ethel?

Ethel—What do you want to play for, Tommy?

Tommy—I want to see you find six clean cards in a pack of dirty ones.

Ethel—Let me see me put some clean cards.

Tommy—Oh, yes, you are. Ethel smiled as she saying to herself: "Everything depends on the way in which she played her cards."—Tit-Bits.

Caution!

The young husband—Dear darling, if ever you and I should quarrel and threaten to visit her of my head.

The very wife—Indeed, dear, I should send you to Coventry.

"Eh," answered the husband, "or did you say they are trying to—New York Journal.

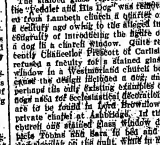
Spider Racing.

Lord Devon's property was greatly impoverished by the twelfth earl, who squandered nearly all his fortune and terribly embarrassed the entailed property. He was addicted to a most peculiar form of gambling, namely, spider races, which he played with the late Marquis of Hastings and the eighth Duke of Bedford. Each player selected a spider, which was placed on the table, and then the latter was gently coaxed from underneath. The wizards caused the insects to run, and the spider which got to the edge first won. But spiders are curious creatures, and it would frequently happen that a spider which was near the edge and looked like winning would double back, traverse the table in all directions and lose its backer the thousands of pounds so nearly won. Lord Devon, Lord Hastings and the Duke of Bedford each of these sportsmen contributed in no small degree to the ruin of the two former.—New York Tribune.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Completely Cured Our Little Boy of Fits."



A family can suffer no greater affliction than to have a child subject to fits or epilepsy. Many a father or mother would give their all to restore such a child to health.

"I am heartily glad to tell you of our little boy who was completely cured of fits. He commenced having them at 10 years of age and had them for four years. Four different doctors and one specialist but all of them said he would not be cured, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills made a complete cure. He is now quite, hearty and gay. It has been three years since he had the last spell. I shall ever Dr. Miles' Medicines praise wherever I go. You are at liberty to use this letter as you see fit and anyone writing to me I will gladly answer if they inclose stamp for reply."—Mrs. Mary Ann Fell

Dogs in Ecclesiastical Occupations.

The stained glass representations of the "Soldier and His Dog" was removed from Lambeth church a glazier. A colliery was owing to the alleged interference or intermeddling the rights of a dog in a church window. Quite as curious instances of canine zeal be found in the Chichester Pictorial. A stained glass window in a Westmoreland church represents the ancient Highland army, and perhaps the only existing assemblage of dogs until recently assembled could be to be found in Lord Brownlow's private chapel at Ashbridge. In this church are stained glass windows depicting Jacob's Dream and Daniel in the lion's den. Jacob is represented as shocked by three men, one of whom is holding a dog by a chain.—Westminster Gazette.

Women as Worships.

In the Westminster Abbey, St. Nelson's day it was not the custom for wives to live in the precincts. Every year their entire household, from the wife of England's "walls of oak" to Nelson's lions but had either followed Nelson into naval battle or been installed in the precincts of the Abbey to wait with the husband. In bitterly every one of the twenty-eight battles or skirmishes under Nelson's command in the great battle of Trafalgar was owned or more women, with their children, present. Lady Hamilton was not singular in the fact that brought both of them were permitted to be present at the battle of the Nile only by special permission of the admiralty that it be owned by those and their husbands were granted admiralty at the request a promise not accompanying the press gang system, which at that time was in force in the streets and other public places and compelled by force of arms all able bodied men to "the king needed men." Some of the men thus seized had political influence with the admiralty compelled to release them, while others, powerless to save their wives share their involuntary privation.

The Young Man's Tact.

The man who was having his picture taken in the photograph gallery was an innocent listener to the conversation between two young ladies on the other side of the screen:

"You know, Kate, I sometimes wear a long curl hanging down the back of my neck?"

"Yes."

"Well, when Phil was calling on me the other evening he asked me if he might have that curl, and I jokingly said yes. Before I knew what he was about he had taken a little pair of scissors out of his pocket and clipped it off close to my head."

"Why, the idea! Didn't that make you furious?"

TRUST REPUDIATED.

The National Grange Opposes the Medical Trust.

In its last annual session the National Grange passed the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, The resolutions adopted at the 43rd annual session of the National Grange, favoring the consolidation of the various federal health bureaus, have been used by the Committee of One Hundred on National Health as an endorsement of the proposal to create a new federal department, to be called the Department of Public Health; and

WHEREAS, The attitude of the National Grange in this matter has been misrepresented by the advocates of a Public Health Department; and

WHEREAS, The creation of such a department would involve the appointment of thousands of unnecessary office holders, and the expenditure of millions of dollars, which could be better devoted to establishing parcels post, aiding the states in the work of road improvement, and other reforms in which the Grange is interested; therefore

RESOLVED: That the National Grange has not endorsed a Department of Public Health, and sees no good reason why the farmers of the country should favor the creation of such a Department, or any legislation that might be construed as a step in that direction.

NURSE TELLS OF SKIN CURES

"I have seen the Cuticura Remedies used with best results during the past twenty years. In my work as a nurse, many skin disease cases came under my observation, and in every instance, I always recommended the Cuticura Remedies as they always gave entire satisfaction. One case in particular was that of a lady friend of mine who, when a child, was afflicted with eczema which covered her face and hands entirely, breaking out at intervals with severer torture. She could not go to school as the disfigurement looked terrible. I told her to get at once a set of Cuticura Remedies. After the use of only one set she was perfectly well.

"A grown lady friend was afflicted with salt rheum in one of her thumbs, and she was cured by the Cuticura Remedies. Still another lady had dry salt rheum in both palms of her hands every fall of the year. They used to be so painful she could scarcely wet her hands until she began to use the Cuticura Remedies which cured her. I have also seen them cure children of ringworm. The children's faces would be all circles and rings around the cheeks, and the neck, and after treatment with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment they were completely cured. My husband had rheumatism on his arm and I used the Cuticura Ointment. It made his arm as limber and nice, whereas it was quite stiff before I began to apply the Ointment.

"Last May I had an ingrowing toe nail which was very painful, as the side of the nail was edging right down in the side of my toe. I cut the nail out of the cavity it made, and of course applied the Cuticura Ointment to the part affected. It soothed it and in less than ten nights it was all healed through constant use of the Ointment. Ten days ago I had my left hand and wrist burned with boiling lard, and Cuticura Ointment has completely cured them. I have just recommended the Cuticura Remedies to another friend, and she is pleased with the results and is recovering nicely. I will gladly furnish the names of the people referred to above if anybody doubts what I say." (Signed) Mrs. Margaret Hederson, 77 Highland Ave., Malden, Mass., Oct. 1, 1910

Back, Then, to the Farm.

Richard Croker, during his visit to New York last month, discussed with a reporter the high cost of living.

"The farmers are all right," said Mr. Croker. "It is the people who insist on living in the towns who find everything too dear. In the towns, you see, the expenses are as bothersome as the children.

"A little boy in a tiny flat looked up from his drum one day and said:

"'Mother, Adam and Eve lived in Paradise. What was it like there?'

"'Like what it is here,' his mother answered, 'when you eight children are all at school.'"

The Boodler and the Voodoo

True Story of the Secret Service

By COL. H. C. WHITLEY

Former Chief United States Secret Service

I HAVE found from experience that men of massive mentalities and lofty ideas are frequently lacking in intuitive faculties. In their efforts to reach something at the top they fail to see the undermining hand at the base.

The little secluded town of Groton, Mass., was the home of Hon. Geo. S. Boutwell, President Grant's first secretary of the treasury, an educated man of sentiment and elegance and Puritanical to his ways. He was possessed of a fair knowledge of politics and finance and was systematic and successful in the management of the treasury department. While in Washington he mixed little with the politicians. He was shy in his manner and abstemious in his living. His favorite diet was bread and milk. He used neither tobacco nor intoxicants. Like other great men with whom I came in contact he was unsuspicious and almost wholly without cunning. He favored reform rather than punishment for rogues. As an evidence of his obliquity of vision and lack of penetration when called upon to face the sharpers ever hovering about the national capital, I will relate a couple of incidents.

On a day when I was busily engaged in my office in the treasury department a messenger hurried in and informed me that the secretary wanted to see me at once. Entering a side room next to Mr. Boutwell's main office, I was by him introduced to two flashily dressed gentlemen who said they had come all the way from Philadelphia to see the secretary and inform him of an astounding counterfeit conspiracy that might shake the nation to its foundation. The gentlemen were city detectives and rather sporty appearing chaps. In their bearing there was an air of self-sufficiency and a know-all-about-it that was quite impressive to the mind of a "green one."

Their story in substance was that while engaged in exploiting the dastardly deeds of criminals they had made a chance discovery that was of tremendous importance to the United States government. For a price they were anxious to assist in capturing the rogues. They were deeply entangled in several mysterious cases at home, but had torn themselves away from their duty long enough to slip slyly over to the nation's capital for the purpose of acquainting the secretary with a dangerous counterfeiting scheme.

The startling story told by the sleuths bore the appearance of truth. The secretary was deeply impressed and appeared worried and greatly disturbed as he handed me the face and back of a five-dollar treasury note printed on separate pieces of paper. He instructed me to investigate at once. My eyesight at this time was remarkably good. I could easily trace the fine eccentric lines upon a note without the use of a magnifying glass. After carefully examining the specimens handed me and comparing them with a good note of the same denomination, I was unable to discover the slightest difference, and I told the secretary that I thought they were genuine. If this was so, in what manner could they have been obtained? It would require collusion on the part of a number of persons in the printing bureau to secure them, as the face and back of these notes were printed at different times by different persons, and besides the work was being done under the watchful eye of trusted officials. If the face and back of those notes were counterfeit they were very dangerous, as they seemed a perfect facsimile of the genuine. The two detectives carried with them an air of great mystery. They professed to be unable to explain anything, but they were of the opinion that the counterfeiters had somehow obtained duplicates of the government plates upon which its notes were printed.

Mr. Boutwell was deeply interested. To him it was an affair of great mystery. To more fully impress the secretary with the importance of the case the Philadelphia sleuths came out boldly and declared that any amount of that kind of money could be bought at fifty cents on the dollar. This was a clincher. I now saw that I was up against a puzzling case. I was silenced, although not fully convinced, in regard to the character of the prints. It made little difference to me. I was sure it was some kind of a trick, but an investigation was necessary. It would not do to allow the impressions to be examined by the chief of the printing bureau, as it was possible there was something crooked among his employes. It was decided that I should go to Philadelphia on the following day. There I was to be met by the two detectives and introduced to a broker who was a go-between. I was to rig myself out in the proper dress and play the part of a cattle man from Texas. I chose to locate myself at Brownsville. Reaching out from this point I was engaged in buying cattle and was not particular where they came from. They might have been smuggled in across the Rio Grande. I was familiar with that part of the country and could easily pass myself off as a resident of that section. Mr. Boutwell wrote me an order on Treasurer Spinner for the sum of five thousand dollars. This was done in the presence of the two detectives. It was understood that the counterfeiters would not make a deal of less than ten thousand dollars of their money. For this they were to be paid five thousand dollars in good money. While the detectives insisted that the counterfeit would pass just as readily as the genuine, they could not explain why it was being offered at fifty cents on the dollar. The two detectives returned to Philadelphia and I agreed to meet them there on the following day.

That afternoon I chanced to step into the office of Mr. William A. Richardson, at that time assistant secretary of the treasury. He was a lawyer of marked ability. I told him confidentially about the suspected counterfeit and of the five thousand dollar order given me by Mr. Boutwell.

"This won't do," said he. "The secretary has no authority to draw on General Spinner. You had better take the order back and explain to Mr. Boutwell that his action in this matter is unlawful."

Acting upon the advice of the assistant secretary, I returned the order to Mr. Boutwell, and he was greatly pleased when I told him that I had concluded to take a bundle of counterfeit money instead. He smiled when I said "I felt sure the two detectives did not know counterfeit money when they saw it."

I took from the safe of the secret service division a package containing five thousand dollars in counterfeit money. It was mostly in one hundred dollar bills, a very clever imitation to the unpracticed eye.

When I reached Philadelphia on the following day I took a room at the Lafayette hotel. Here I was met by the two detectives and a white-haired broker, an Englishman. To him I was introduced as a cattle dealer. After a long talk with him and many expressions of fear on my part, I was induced to chance a deal with the alleged counterfeiter. The old broker sized me up. He saw that I was very timid and that I stood in fear of being arrested in case I was caught by the detectives. He talked a great deal and was at last successful in allaying my fears. I insisted upon meeting the counterfeiter at the hotel before making the deal. On the same evening I was visited by a tall, well dressed young man about twenty-five years of age. He was a right smart chap and understood his business exceedingly well, but in his great anxiety to do me, he evidently overlooked the possibility that I might be doing him. He angled to catch me for a long time before I would take the bait held out. I was fearful of being caught with counterfeit money on my person. He was very much in earnest and grew excited. To convince me and make sure of his victim, he took from his pocket ten new, crisp five-dollar treasury notes. They were genuine. "Look at this," said he; "there's a sample of the stuff. It will go in any bank. Just take it and keep it for twenty-five dollars. You have a chance to try it at the bank."

I took the ten notes and handed him twenty-five dollars in good money. I opened my traveling bag and took out the package of one hundred dollar bills, remarking that I would take it down and put it in the hotel safe. The young man's eyes fairly watered as he glanced at the package. He did not for a moment doubt my sincerity, and of course he believed I did not suspect him. It was agreed that I should think the matter over. He was to call the next day after I had been afforded an opportunity to inquire in regard to the bills I had purchased of him. The next time he came to the hotel I, although still a little suspicious, had made up my mind to chance the deal. He wrote out the directions. I was to meet him at the lower door of an upstairs office on a certain street. We were then to step into an open stairway near the place of meeting and make the exchange. I was to take his package of bogus stuff and he to receive my good money. He urged me for some time to go out into the suburbs to make the deal, but this I flatly refused. Everything was to be on the dead square. The young man swore he was perfectly reliable, but he had to be cautious in his movements in order to prevent the possibility of detection.

I went to the place agreed upon and stood on a step facing the street. When the pretended counterfeiter put in an appearance he carried under his coat a sizable bundle nicely done up. My package was smaller than his and just as valuable. I questioned his good intentions for a moment and said I had come there to make a square deal and I wanted to see what he had in his package, which was so arranged that he could throw open one corner of it. When he did this I saw something that looked like money. I suddenly stepped up a stair and drew my revolver.

"You are my prisoner, sir. I am the chief of the United States secret service."

The fellow showed great disappointment by the sudden turn of affairs. At first he turned slightly pale, but finally smiled and said: "Look here, the government can't hurt me. I was only trying to hoodle you. Put up your revolver and I will go with you peaceably."

He went with me to my room in the hotel where I had first learned the particulars of the origin of the hoodle game, which was successfully played for years afterwards under different names. It finally grew into what was known as the green goods game. The man I had arrested was Andrew J. Wightman, and about the smoothest confidence man that ever came to the front in the country. He was a sharper of no mean legal ability and was able to walk along upon the outer verge of the precipice of crime without tumbling over it. He was the originator of the hoodle game. The precious package with which he expected to get five thousand dollars in good money from me was nothing more than strips of white paper cut to resemble bank notes in size. There was a good five dollar greenback so arranged at the top of the package as to catch the eye of the greedy speculator.

My revolver was a powerful argument with him. He wasn't one of the shooting kind. He was there to get possession of the green one's good money, pass upstairs and down and out on the opposite side of the building. It was a place well chosen to carry out a swindle of this kind.

The two detectives, although familiar with the schema, had concluded that it was much safer and more profitable to them to sell information to the government than to cope with the situation themselves.

For the purpose of convincing the secretary of the treasury that there was a dangerous counterfeit afloat, they had secured from Wightman the back and face of a five-dollar greenback. These had been split from one note and pasted upon paper to make them about the same thickness as the genuine money. It was a skilful piece of work and difficult to detect, but it was easily done by experts. The paper upon which the treasury notes were printed at that time did not contain the localized and distributive fibre which would prevent it from being split. Before the fiber paper was invented the paper upon which the government notes were printed could easily be soaked apart and nicely pasted to other fine sheets of paper. It was very deceptive and difficult to detect.

Mr. Boutwell was greatly disturbed. It was a serious affair to his mind, and he might have been induced to pay a large reward had the scheme not been exploded.

The following is another illustration of the secretary's simplicity.

While at my New York office I one day received a telegram from Mr. Boutwell summoning me hastily to Washington. When I arrived at the secretary's office, in the treasury department, he took me into a private room where he informed me of a contemplated robbery. He said he had learned through a reliable source that plans had been made by a gang of burglars to rob General Spinner's cash division, and that the watchmen on duty at night were in the conspiracy. He had telegraphed for me for the purpose of forestalling the thieves. To my mind the story told by the secretary was a fallacy. It sounded like a romance. I knew that a robbery of this kind was quite impossible, but the secretary was so much in earnest that I was almost afraid to give him my real opinion in regard to the affair.

I saw that some sort of an investigation was necessary to put his mind at ease. Hence I telegraphed several detectives to meet me in Washington. Mr. Boutwell sent a messenger to bring the man who had furnished the information. He was to go to my room in the Owen house. After a lapse of time he came. As he entered he took off his hat. I saw at once that the man was lacking in self confidence and that he was either an ex-convict or a menial of some kind. I shook hands with him.

Assuming a look of benevolence I looked him over carefully. He was a tall, thin man, slightly stooped and with a dull white skin. His protruding eyes were very light and expressionless. I gently turned his face to the window and sized him up. I was quite sure his spirit had been broken and that he was a fraud, yet I was uncertain as to the best manner of handling him.

"I have met you somewhere before," I said.

He raised his eyes timidly. My remark seemed to rattle him.

"Where were you born?" I inquired.

In a faltering voice he answered, "In Columbia, South Carolina."

It flashed across my mind at once that the fellow was of negro blood. Looking him straight in the eye, I quickly placed my finger on the tip of his nose. He shrank back a little but did not appear to be offended. I then said:

"What was your master's name down there?"

I thought to impress him with the idea that I was familiar with the locality from which he came. He gave me the name of his former master in a hesitating way. I told him to take a seat and tell his story. It was fiction, undoubtedly the result of a dream. His version of the manner in which he discovered the contemplated robbery was so improbable that it is not worth relating in detail. I questioned and cornered him until I was sure that his story was a transparent concoction of a weak but criminal mind. It would do in a dime novel or to deceive some credulous person.

He was a dreamer, a sort of voodoo. I had had some experience with this class of negroes in the south. As many persons may not be aware of the fact, I will state that the pad on the end of the nose was the supreme test of pedigree among the negro traders of the south in slave days. The gristle on the tip of the nose of the negro is soft and yielding, while that of a white man is firm, giving the feeling of a bony substance. When all other tests failed in discovering African blood, the trader would place his finger on the end of the nose of the person on trial for his liberty. If the pad was yielding the witness would turn to the recorder and say, "This fellah, sah, is a niggah."

The voodoo negro pretends to be endowed with supernatural power. As vice regent of the devil he conjures up strange tales for those who put their faith in amulets, rabbit's feet, etc.

The negro that I met at the Owen house had, I suppose, been inspired by his evil genius to concoct the plausible story he told Mr. Boutwell. It was now after hours and I went to Mr. Boutwell's residence and told him my experience with the negro.

He was greatly astonished when he learned the character of the man. He said he thought he was a white man and a very fair and candid one at that. When I pointed out the utter inconsistency of the story told and the impossibility of burglarizing General Spinner's cash division, the secretary was satisfied and quite willing to drop the subject. It is unnecessary to say that the burglary did not take place.

The Oldest Klickitat.

Jake Hunt, the oldest living Klickitat Indian known, lies at death's door at his home adjoining this town east of here. The old Indian is reputed to be more than 100 years of age.

Years ago an Indian village stood where the Hunt family now carries on a general farming business. All that is left of the old settlement is a little church, a totem pole and numerous mounds where the Klickitats lie who could not reach the century mark. Old Jake says that this was the Indians' paradise before the advent of early white settlers.

Jake Hunt is destined not to die a poor Indian. His lands are as rich and productive as any in the valley and command a high price. He is said to have married seven times during his long career, but there will be only a widow and a few children to fall heir to his valuable property.—Husum Correspondence Portland Oregonian.

The Modest Model.

The late Julia Ward Howe, though a woman of very good appearance, was extremely modest.

"She once posed for me," said a Boston painter the other day. "But she hesitated a long time before consenting. To urge her on I said:

"'Don't be afraid. I'll do you justice, madam.'

"'Ah, she answered, 'it isn't justice I ask for at your hands; it's mercy.'"

Not Just Off the Shelf.

Little Marget has the childish trait of curiosity, especially in regard to the age of her elders.

"How old do you think I am, dear?" counter-questioned the spinster aunt to whom the child had put the impertinent query. The little girl considered earnestly before replying:

"Well, I don't know, Auntie Alice, but you don't look new!"

INSIDE HISTORY.

Some Self-Explanatory Letters.

Battle Creek, Mich., Jan. 7, '11.

Dr. E. H. Pratt,
Suite 1202, 100 State St.,
Chicago, Illinois.

My Dear Doctor:

"Owing to some disagreement with —— magazine several years ago they have become quite vituperative, and of late have publicly charged me with falsehoods in my statements that we have genuine testimonial letters.

"It has been our rule to refrain from publishing the names either of laymen or physicians who have written to us in a complimentary way, and we have declined to accede to the demand of attorneys that we turn these letters over to them.

"I am asking a few men whom I deem to be friends to permit me to reproduce some of their letters over their signatures in order to refute the falsehoods.

"We have hundreds of letters from physicians, but I esteem the one that you wrote to me in 1906 among the very best, particularly in view of the fact that it recognizes the work I have been trying to do partly through the little book, 'The Road to Wellville.'

"I do not sell or attempt to sell the higher thought which is more important than the kind of food, but I have taken considerable pains to extend to humanity such facts as may have come to me on this subject.

"In order that your mind may be refreshed I am herewith enclosing a copy of your good letter, also a copy of the little book, and if you will give me the privilege of printing this over your signature I will accompany the printing with an explanation as to why you permitted its use in publication in order to refute falsehoods, and under that method of treatment I feel, so far as I know, there would be no breach of the code of ethics.

"I trust this winter weather is finding you well, contented and enjoying the fruits that are yours by right.

"With all best wishes, I am,"

Yours very truly,
C. W. POST.

Dr. Pratt, who is one of the most prominent and skillful surgeons in America, very kindly granted our request in the cause of truth and justice.

Chicago, Aug. 31, 1906.

Mr. C. W. Post,
Battle Creek, Mich.

My Dear Sir:

"I write to express my personal appreciation of one of your business methods, that of accompanying each package of your Grape-Nuts production with that little booklet "The Road to Wellville." A more appropriate, clear headed and effective presentation of health-giving auto-suggestions could scarcely be penned.

"Grape-Nuts is a good food in itself, but the food contained in this little article is still better stuff. I commend the practice because I know that the greed and strenuousness, the consequent graft and other types of thievery and malicious mischief generally can never be cured by legislative action.

"The only hope for the betterment of the race rests in individual soul culture.

"In taking a step in this direction, your process has been so original and unique that it must set a pace for other concerns until finally the whole country gets flavored with genuine, practical Christianity.

"I shall do all that lies in my power to aid in the appreciation of Grape-Nuts, not so much for the sake of the food itself as for the accompanying suggestions.

"Visiting Battle Creek the other day with a friend, Dr. Kelly of Evanston, Illinois, while I was consulting with Mr. Gregory, my friend visited your factories and came away greatly amazed, not only at the luxurious furnishings of the offices generally and the general equipment of the place, but with the sweet spirit of courtesy and kindness that seemed to fill the air with a spiritual ozone that was good to breathe.

"The principles expressed in the little booklet, 'The Road to Wellville,' I well know are practical and they work in business of all kinds, including sanitariums, as will be fairly tested before time is done.

"I know you will not regard this letter of appreciation as an intruding one. It is simply the salutation of good fellowship to you from a man who, although he has never seen you, feels drawn to you by the kinship of thought.

"The only thing that makes a man live forever in the hearts of his countrymen and his race is the good that he does. Your position in this respect is an enviable one and I wish to extend my congratulations."

Yours respectfully,
E. H. PRATT.

ROTATION OF CROPS

W. J. FRASER OF ILLINOIS DAIRY DEPARTMENT ADDRESSES LITCHFIELD CONVENTION.

COW RECORD HELPS FARMERS

Establishes Reciprocal Relations Between Man and Beast, Says Emil Ek—Underwood Discusses Convention.

Litchfield.—One of the best addresses on the program of the Minnesota Dairymen's association, at the afternoon session was that W. J. Fraser of Urbana, Ill., head of the department of dairy husbandry of that state. His subject was "Factors Influencing Profits in Milk Production."

Mr. Fraser showed by a series of carefully compiled tables that amazing results may be obtained by following a better system of cropping. The figures given showed the relative efficiency of four farms of 160 acres each, each cropped under a different rotation, and the results.

R. A. Underwood of Hutchinson spoke on "Conservation as It Applies to the Farmer." He pointed out a number of things wherein the farmer may become an active factor in conserving that which is wasted. Wet or swampy land can be made the most productive part of the farm if properly tiled and drained. If the farmer recognizes the unchangeable law of reproduction of kind, he will secure the best seed adapted to the soil he cultivates. He stated that farmers of Minnesota and other corn states are losing millions of dollars every year as the result of the wasteful manner of gathering their corn crop. He also deplored the great loss sustained by herds because of poorly lighted and poorly ventilated stables. The spread of bovine tuberculosis could be prevented if farmers would furnish stables with an abundance of sun light and air. He urged farmers to encourage the boys and girls to remain on the farm.

Individual Cow Records Pay.

Emile H. Ek of Cokato addressed the convention on "Individual Cow Records." He stated that the individual cow record is a great inducement to every farmer to grow clover and rotate crops; also that the keeping of such records has the effect of establishing profitable reciprocal relations between the dairyman and the cow. The milk from each cow is weighed and recorded and samples of each cow's milk is tested for butter fat once a month. Mr. Ek is a large breeder of Guernsey cattle and can tell to a cent the gross or net earnings of each one of his cows for every dollar's worth of food fed to them.

W. F. Schilling of Northfield, who has been at the head of the association for two years, was re-elected. During that time the membership has increased from 300 to nearly 1,000. Professor A. J. MacGuire of Grand Rapids was placed in nomination but withdrew in the interest of harmony. Other officers elected were: Vice president, Andrew French, Plainview; second vice president, Charles Nelson, Rosendale; secretary, F. D. Currier, Nicollet; treasurer, J. M. Jack, Stanton.

Butter Is Scored.

Secretary F. D. Currier announced the scores in the butter contest held in connection with the state dairymen's convention. More than 100 tubs were entered, but those that received a score under 90 were not counted. Alfred Camp of Owatonna, with the high score of 97 points, was also the winner of the first prize at the national butter exposition held in Chicago last year.

PLANS FOR BOYS' SCHOOL.

Bishop Heffron Issues Advance Statement of Work to Be Done.

Winona.—Bishop P. R. Heffron's new $300,000 Catholic boys' college, to be built upon a site presented by the citizens of Winona at the western outskirts of the city, will be a thorough preparatory and finishing institution. It will prepare students for a business, agricultural, literary or professional career.

Agriculture will be featured and the college will offer a comprehensive course of study with the most advanced methods and ideal surroundings.

In a statement today to President C. A. Boalt, of the board of trade, the bishop said:

"Following out your suggestion that I submit an outline of the curriculum of studies to be followed in the proposed boys' college, I have the honor of transmitting to you such an outline. It is understood that the details of the curriculum are not entirely worked out, and I presume you will not consider this as important at the present time.

"In a general way the curriculum will embrace a preparatory, an academic and a collegiate course. The preparatory will include the higher grades, sixth, seventh and eighth, and students in this department will be prepared to enter the academic. The academic will comprise a four-year course. Students will undergo an examination upon entering the college and will be assigned to a year in the preparatory, academic or collegiate course, according to their proficiency and previous studies. The collegiate will comprise a four-year course. The collegiate course will lead up to the graduation and college degree.

"The course of studies will embrace all the branches of a commercial, English, scientific, classical and philosophical education. A special department will furnish students with practical instruction along the lines of scientific farming and in branches that are useful for this purpose.

"In the scientific department, the laboratory work will be the feature. To this end physical, mechanical, biological and chemical laboratories will be installed.

"The college curriculum will aim to prepare the students for a business, agricultural, literary or professional career."

BIG TRANSFER OF PINE MADE.

Weyerhaeusers Buy 100,000,000 Feet of Timber In One Transfer.

Duluth.—The Weyerhaeuser syndicate has purchased 100,000,000 feet of pine from the Thief River Falls Lumber Company which the latter bought recently from the government.

The timber is situated in the Cut Foot Sioux country, and it was the intention of the Soo line to build a branch from Sturgeon lake to the timber, crossing the Great Northern at Bena. The branch has been abandoned since the sale to the Weyerhaeusers, and this leads to the assumption that the Great Northern will handle the timber.

The consideration for the transfer of the pine is not known. There is about 75,000,000 feet more of pine in that territory, which is expected will be acquired by the Weyerhaeusers.

MINISTER-CARPENTER IS ILL.

Contracted Typhoid Fever While Building Church.

Sauk Center.—Rev. R. G. Green, of Akeley, who, it is said, contracted typhoid fever while acting as boss carpenter of the Methodist preachers who rebuilt the Spooner Methodist Episcopal church, is now convalescent, after several weeks of severe illness.

The church rebuilt at Spooner by these preachers will be dedicated soon, and is the only church building at present in that town.

HACKENSCHMIDT WINS.

Defeats Henry Ordeman in Two Straight Falls.

Minneapolis.—Henry Ordeman, of Minneapolis, the American wrestling champion, was ground down to defeat in a finish match with Geo. Hackenschmidt at the Auditorium. The Russian Lion won the first fall in two hours 37¼ minutes, and took the second fall in the rapid time of 2½ minutes.

Liquor Costs Man His Life.

Tracy.—Liquor which got the better of Joseph Hammershake resulted in his death. He spent the afternoon filling up with a companion, and about midnight the two started to walk on railroad track to Garvin. When five miles west of here and still several miles from their destination Hammershake refused to proceed further and his companion left and went home alone. Hammershake evidently fell asleep and shortly afterwards was struck and killed by a train going east.

GLOTFELTER HEADS THE FAIR

WATERVILLE MAN DEFEATS J. M. UNDERWOOD.

Insurgent Opposition Manifest in Campaign—One Ballot Decides.

Minneapolis.—J. M. Underwood went down to defeat in the annual election of the Minnesota State Agricultural society before the "insurgent" opposition which was manifested late in the campaign and whipped into shape within less than 24 hours by F. W. Murphy of Wheaton and E. J. Stilwell of Minneapolis.

The successful candidate was Chas. W. Glotfelter of Waterville.

But one ballot was required. The result was Glotfelter, 169, Underwood, 123½. That ballot, however, was taken amid scenes of confusion reminiscent of the Underwood-Furlong ballot-battle a year ago, but to which a decidedly dramatic touch was added when death stalked through the court house assembly hall and struck down C. B. Clark, a life member of the association, who, scarcely ten minutes before, had made a ringing speech seconding the nomination of former President Underwood for a second term.

Cosgrove's Fate in the Balance.

Whether Mr. Underwood's defeat will carry with it the retirement of Secretary Cosgrove, who has served the society in one capacity or another for the last quarter of a century, is a question that has not been determined upon.

C. B. Clark had just spoken for Mr. Underwood when he retired to his seat among the delegates, the balloting began and, after he had prepared his ballot for the man for whom he had spoken, he leaned heavily toward H. P. Marks, of Shakopee. Mr. Marks, thinking he was desirous of speaking to him, asked what his wish was and receiving no answer cried out:

"Is there a doctor in the audience?"

Water was brought to the dying man and he was carried into the corridors, where he died while effort was being made to locate a physician.

President, C. W. Glotfelter of Waterville; First Vice-President, E. J. Stilwell of Minneapolis; Second Vice-President, Reuben Warner, Jr., of St Paul.

Managers: George Atchinson of Mankato; W. W. Sivright of Hutchinson; *C. P. Craig of Duluth; F. W. Murphy of Wheaton; *Thomas H. Canfield of Lake Park. *Indicates hold-over members.

Minneapolis.—The following officers were selected by the newly organized state fair board: Secretary, John C. Simpson, now secretary of the Iowa State Fair; treasurer, E. L. Mattson, Minneapolis, succeeding M. L. Dunn, of Brainerd; assistant secretary, Miss Katherine Borgman, St. Paul, succeeding Miss Laura M. Cox, St. Paul.

FARM SOCIETIES ELECT HEADS

Three Associations in Session Last Week at Minneapolis.

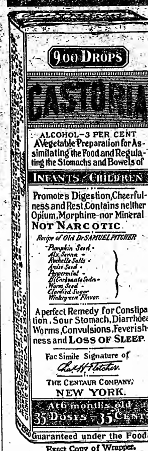
Minneapolis.—The Minnesota Live Stock Breeders' association, at its annual meeting at the courthouse re-elected officers as follows: President, C. P. Craig of Duluth; first vice-president, D. S. Hall, Buffalo Lake; second vice president, C. B. Crandall, Randolph; secretary, Professor Andrew Boss, St. Anthony Park; treasurer, C. W. Glotfelter, Waterville.

While the live stock men were in session the wool growers and the field crop breeders also were meeting. The latter organization had a banquet and their annual election in the Masonic Temple. The officers were re-elected as follows:

President, C. W. Glotfelter of Waterville; treasurer, F. H. Gibbs of Merriam Park; secretary, Professor C. P. Bull of St. Paul.

A. C. Cooper of St. Cloud was elected to fill the vacancy on the executive committee caused by the resignation of Thomas Hoburn, who has removed from the state, and H. S. Libby was also elected a member of the committee. The vice presidents, one from each congressional district, will be appointed by the executive committee.

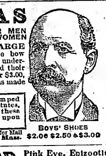
DAMAGE SUITS TRANSFERRED.



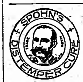
Many Settlers Would Collect From Road Because of Fires.

Crookston.—Forty suits against the Canadian Northern, in which settlers in northern Beltrami county claim losses by fires which they allege were started by improperly protected engines on the Canadian Northern, the claims amounting from $1,000 to $8,000 each, have been sent by Judge Stanton from Bemidji to the district court at Crookston. The total claims amount to $65,000 and will be the feature of the June term of court here. The fires all occurred between June and September of last year, prior to the devastating forest fires which swept Beaudette, Spooner and other places the first week in October.

SHOOTS HIMSELF BY ACCIDENT.



Minnesota Hunter Receives Charge Intended for Rabbit.



Albert Lea.—Albert Olsen of London township, while chopping wood spied a rabbit and went for his rifle, but in some manner he slipped and the gun was discharged, the contents of the rifle entering the young man's abdomen, inflicting a wound that will probably prove fatal. He was hurried to the hospital in this city. Peritonitis is likely to ensue. The young man is 19 years of age.

"Thomas W. Lawson's Thanksgiving proclamation was a very good piece of oratorical writing," said a Boston banker. "Lawson is always full of quips.

"Not long ago I attended the funeral of a millionaire financier—one of those real high financiers' whose low methods Lawson loves to turn the light on.

"I arrived at the funeral a little late. I took a seat beside Lawson and whispered:

"Lawson, nodding towards the clergyman in the pulpit, whispered back:

"'Just opened for the defense.'"

Faint?
Have you weak heart, dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals? Or do you experience pain over the heart, shortness of breath on going up-stairs and the many distressing symptoms which indicate poor circulation and bad blood? A heart tonic, blood and body-builder that has stood the test of over 40 years of cure is
Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery
The heart becomes regular as clock-work. The red blood corpuscles are increased in number—and the nerves in turn are well fed. The arteries are filled with good rich blood. That is why nervous debility, irritability, fainting spells, disappear and are overcome by this alterative extract of medicinal roots put up by Dr. Pierce without the use of alcohol. Ask your neighbor. Many have been cured of scrofulous conditions, ulcers, "fever-sores," white swellings, etc., by taking Dr. Pierce's Discovery. Just the refreshing and vitalizing tonic needed for excessive tissue waste, in convalescence from fevers or for run-down, anemic, thin-blooded people. Stick to this safe and sane remedy and refuse all "just as good" kinds offered by the dealer who is looking for a larger profit. Nothing will do you half as much good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

The Last Chapter in the ROMANCE of FUR

BY JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB CO

THE day of romance—romance of the old sort, of pirate-infested seas of peril-ridden lands of gold, of strange and ucknown countries filled with the lure that has drawn men from the beginning of time—has rapidly passed away. It is followed now by the romance of iron and steel, the romance of invention, of progress, a civilization that is fast crushing out the last vestige of the primitive and adding each day new chapters to its own marvelous achievements. It seems like a fitting decree of fate that the oldest and most romantic of all the industries of man, with the exception of his earliest fight for food, should be the last to die. There is something of pathos in it, especially when it is pointed out to one as it was pointed out to me by Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, head of the great Hudson's Bay Company, who said, "The last chapter in the romance of fur is being written. It has been a glorious story—a glorious story."

For three thousand years the pelts of wild beasts have played their part in the lives of man. For the last ten centuries fur has played an important part in history. It has held out the lure of romance—of adventure and gold. It has caused wars, and has led to the discovery of new lands. Fur hunters have done more exploring than any other one class of men. It was the beaver that lured men from the St. Lawrence to the Mississippi, and thence to the Rockies, opening up a continent. It was the sable that drew the tribesmen of Asiatic Russia across to far Kamchatka, and the sea otter that led the Spanish and the English all around the world in crazy craft, and gave us our first knowledge of the Pacific coast from Alaska to California. When, away back in 1670, a wandering and adventurous Frenchman by the name of Groseller fired Prince Rupert's imagination with glowing tales of a land filled with priceless furs, not a little company was formed with a capital of $50,000, no did not dream that his wild project meant the opening up of a country almost as large as the whole of Europe and the beginning of an adventure which was to run through centuries. It was this little company of "geoticman adventurers" who formed what is today the Hudson's Bay company, the greatest landed corporation on earth—something which will remain for all time in history as a conotaph to the tremendous part which the furred pelts of forest and mountain and sea have played in the fortunes of men.

Last year the raw fur industry of the world amounted to forty million dollars. Next year it will be fifty million, and the year after that the figure will be larger still. For years and years it was less than twooty millions. Yet in spite of these figures—in the face of the fact that the fur-treasure of the world is increasing in value each year, and will continue to increase for perhaps another decade, the furred things of the earth are fast becoming extinct.

A year ago a big London fur buyer, whose business amounts to over a million dollars annually, said to me, "Within another five years only a very few people of moderate means will be buying furs. Only the wealthy will be able to afford those furs which are cheapest today, and even the muskrat, whose pelt sold for five cents and six cents a few years ago, will be prized as a luxury."

Ten months did much to verify this fur dealer's statement. While that time raw pelts advanced from twenty to one hundred per cent. A Montreal dealer who purchased $5,000 muskrat skins at twenty cents per skin a year before sold them in London for seventy. A month later they had gone to eighty. Two months later they were bringing a dollar. In a single season the value of the world's annual consumption of fur leaped from $25,000,000 to over $40,000,000. I had just come down from my last trip to the Barren Lands, where I had spent eight weeks among the far northern fur hunters, when word was passed from post to post and from trapper to trapper throughout hundreds of thousands of square miles of Canadian wilderness that a fur famine had struck London and Paris, the fur centers of the world, and that a from Winnipeg, Otiawe, Toronto and Montreal both the "Independents" and the agents of the big companies were making fabulous offers for pelts.

It will be interesting to note the conditions that this famine will bring about during the next two or three years. Millions of women are as yet unaware of what the great fur dealer I have quoted above describes as the "mine that is about to explode under their feet." It cannot be said however, that they have not had some warning. The woman who bought a mink muff for twenty dollars five years ago pays sixty for the same grade of article today. She will pay from seventy to eighty for it this coming season—a hundred or more two years from now.

These statements are not made at random, but only after the closest personal investigation of the fur situation as it exists today, and after a long acquaintance with the great fur companies, buyers, and trappers. But a few facts are necessary to show at what ruthless pace the slaughter of fur animals has gone on during the past decade. It was not long ago that 150,000 skins of the sea otter were taken from the Aleutian islands each year. Today there are less than 400 skins taken annually. Ten years ago sea otter was a popular fur; today it is worn only by the royal blood of Europe. Twenty years ago it was estimated that seel herds of the Pribilof's numbered over five millions. Today, in spite of international treaties for their protection, there are not more than 150,000 seals on the island! About 10,000 skins were taken last year, and so relentless was the slaughter on account of the princely sums offered for the fur that 10,000 baby seals died during the season, chiefly of starvation because of the death of their mothers.

The glossy little wood marten is dying out. Four years ago I met two Canadian trappers who were coming down from the upper New Ontario game regions with 300 martan, worth from $one four to five dollars a skin. Today they are worth twenty-five dolars, and a half dozen are a big "catch" for any one man for a single season. Five years ago 1,760,000 foxes were killed to supply the world's market. Three years ago the number had fallen to 1,200,000. Last year less than a million were caught. From two dollars a skin the red fox jumped to twelve; the "cross" fox from twenty-five to as high as a hundred, silver and black fox to prices that made their skins ten times the value of their weight in gold!

The silver and black are now so rare that they are "bid" for only by dukes and duchesses, the rulers and the heirs of kingdoms and empires. Seldom does one sell in the London or Paris markets for less than from $700 to $1,000. A year ago one pelt sold for $4,000. In this same way nra going the black sable and the little white ermine whose pelt has been worn in the robes of royalty for more than seven centuries. It was not long ago that 100,000 skins of the black sable found their way into the market each year. Last year this number had dwindled to fifteen thousand!

The "signs of the change" are now at hand in another way, and as a consequence never in history will the women of the world be "up against" a greater assortment of substitutes in the fur line than during the coming seasons.

The world's prosperity and its rapid increase in population are, of course, the chief causes of the extinction of fur." As recently as ten years ago the people of the United States were not counted among the great buyers of fur. Now the majority of women among ninety million people are purchasers of fur of one kind or another. Five years ago London was the world's greatest fur center, with Paris a close second. Today, so enormous has the demand for fur become in this country as well as across the sea, that there are over 2,000 establishments in the treatment of fine furs and tha making of fur garments in New York City alone.

London and Paris have now taken second and third places in the actual making of fur garments, though London handles more raw fur than the other two combined. Last year the value of New York's "finished" output was nearly $20,000,000, and fully sixty per cent. of this was represented by the furs which a few years ago were considered almost worthless.

"These years will clost out the cheaper class of fur," said a Montreal buyer to me, "and then the real famine will be at hand."

This passing of the old romance of fur is marked not only by the pathos of the furred things themselves, but by that of the wild and picturesqhe life of those thousands of wilderness people whose centuries-old vocation must go with the things which gave it birth. There is some comfort for the lover of the wild and what it holds in the thought that at least in a great part of the far Canadian wilderness the picturesque fur-hunter will never, like tha courier du bois, quite die out. In a country one-third as large as the whole of Europe railroads and civiltection will never go. This vast wilderness region, long described as a "waste," stretches from the coast of Labrador, through Ungava, skirts Hudson's Bay and swings north and west to Mackenzie Land and the polar seas.

It is a land where for six months out of the year man's life is a bitter fight against deep snows and fierce blizzards—against hardships of all kinds, starvation, and a cold that reaches sixty degrees below zero and which is so "dry" that one may freeze almost to the point of death without being aware of especial discomfort or pain. It is, as Lord Strathcona says, "the last great trapping ground." Out of this trapping ground there has come a constant stream of treasure for nearly two and a half centuries. Last year, according to Canadian export figures, this treasure amounted to $2,719,822, but no credit was given for the enormous home consumption of raw pelts. The catch was worth at least $5,500,000. The coming season will see $7,000,000 worth of furs caught in Canada, in spite of the fact that the actual number of skins will be at least a quarter less than a year ago, when the lives of between thirty and forty million wild things were taken that Milady of civilization might have her furs.

As recently as eight years ago, when the writer first began his journeys into the north land, one struck the great fur country as soon as he crossed Lake Superior. From there it ranged to the Arctic sea. Less than a decade has brought about a tremendous change, and now one travels a hundred miles farther north before he enters the "last great trepping ground." From this great trapping ground comes seventy per cent. of the better class of furs worn by the American woman and her Canadian sistar.

In a vast desolation onh-third as large as tha whole of Europe there is no railroad, no white man's village, and its population is less than that of the Sahara Desert. In its center is Hudson's Bay, the great "ice box" of the north—nine times as large as the state of Ohio. Over this vast territory at distances of from one to three hundred miles apart are scattered the Hudson's Bay Company's posts and those of its French competitors, tha Revillon Brothers. In most instances a post consists of nothing more than a company "store," tha factor's house, and two or three log cabins. Except during the months of the trapping season these are practically the only points of human life in a country that runs two thousand miles east and west and from two to eight hundred north and south.

With the first breath of winter the fur-gatherers begin to hurry themselves in the vast desolation about them, traveling one and sometimes two hundred miles awar from the post to their old trapping grounds.

From tha moment he leaves his door to go ovar his line, three days' supply of food and a thick blanket in his pack-sack, a knife, a belt-ax and a rifle as weapons, avery hour is filled with exciltement for the hunter of fur. On his snowshoes he speeds swiftly from trap to trap, avery mile of snowy forests and swamps raveeling the mysteries of the wild things to him as plainly as a picture-book.

In ona trap he finds a great white owl, and cuts off the beautiful wings for the wifs and children back in le cabin. In the next there is a huge snow-shoe rabbit, frozen stiff as it had died. And then, from through the thick and gloomy hetsana ahead, he hears the faint clinking of a chain. His blood leaps now, for this royal sport of the wilderness never grows dull to the fur-hunter. The chain clinks louder, and ha draws in quick, excited breaths as he lifts the hammer of his rifle and listens ahead. He comes suddenly upon the next house, and there is a snarling, leaping, thing at the end of the chain, a great silver-gray furred thing, lithe and beautiful as it crouches at bay—a lynx. And a magnificent speciman, its six-inch fur, as fine as a woman's hair, crumpled and lying richly upon the bloodstained snow as it waits for the man to come within springing distance. But the hunter knows better. He aims carefully for a spot where he can sew up the bullet-hole, and fires. Only a short time from now will ha gently nurtured beauty of civilization will press the warmth and regal lovelinss of that thing to her face, and—if it possible that a vision of this wilderness tragedy will come to her then? No more than the dark-faced hunter sees a vision of that woman's loveliness as he skins his catch and hurries on. To each is given but a part of the picture.

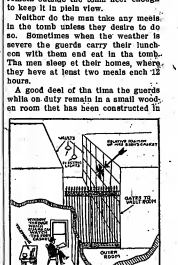
The dark-faced man knows only that he has caught a "Number One, Extra" lynx, and that the skin will carry it to Paris or London, where it will be sold at great profit; nor to the furrier's shop, nor to the dainty girl or the society matron in New York who will pay $150 for that same fifteen-dollar lynx—in an "imported" muff. Ha goes on, keyed to higher excitement as the end of the day comes, and in the first gray gldom of early night he stops at one of the three or four small log shelters which he has built for himself along the trap-line, gets his supper, lights his pipe, and reviews the happenings of the day until slumber closes his eyes.

It will take him three days to cover a forty-mile trap-line, and when he returns to his cabin at the close of the third he is welcomed by the glad cries of his children and the laughter and joy of his wife, who has a tender roast porcupine or a venison stew waiting for him. For two days after that he rests, smokes his pipe, and tells of his adventures, while his wife scrapes the fat from his pelts and stretches them on sticks. Then, once more, he shoulders his pack, and goes again upon his round of exciltement, adventure and profit.

EDDY TOMB GUARDED

Four Armed Men Watch Body of Dead Scientist Leader.

Precautions Taken to Prevent Act of Vandalism — Church Head Believed in Admonition, "Pray, but Keep Your Powder Dry."



Boston—The tomb of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy in Mount Auburn cemetery is being guarded carefully day and night, to protect it from possible vandals, by four armed guards selected by the directors of the Christian Science church in Boston. The guards are members of the Christian Science church and are known to be of entirely trustworthy character.

Certain members of the First Church of Christ Scientist of New York city have protested against the maintenance of an armed guard, but this is being ignored. The protest sets forth that the action of the directors is comperable to that of the authorities of Jerusalem, who set a guard at the tomb of Jesus Christ. They contend that the placing of an armed guard shows lack of faith.

The guards work in pairs with two shifts of 12 hours each. It has been generally understood that they live while on duty shut up in the tomb. This is not necessary if they do not desire to do so. If the weather permits and they prefer it the guards remain outside the tomb near enough to keep it in plain view.

Neither do the men take any meals in the tomb unless they desire to do so. Sometimes when the weather is severe the guards carry their luncheon with them and eat in the tomb. The men sleep at their homes, where they have at least two meals each 12 hours.

A good deal of tha time the guards while on duty remain in a small wooden room that has been constructed in the outer room of the receiving vault. The little room is about ten feet long, eight feet wide and seven feet high. There is a door in one side. Through a tiny square window fitted with a wide the guards may look through the greted inner doors into the catacombs. Through an opposite window of the same kind they may gaze toward tha outer door of the vault.

The receiving vault is 26 feet wide, about twice as long and is divided into two compartments. To reach tha outer compartment one goes through a decorated double gate of metal. Tha caskets are placed on either side of the long room with a corridor between them about ten feet in width.

The vault has a capecity of 50 caskets. That how long the caskets of Mrs. Eddy will remain there has not yet been determined, but the guards will stay as long as the casket remains.

"This precaution on the part of the Christian Science church," said one of the members, "is in keeping with the usual wisdom of that body and exemplifies the fact that Christian Scientists are rational.

"In this world every sensible person takes reasonable precaution. Mrs. Eddy was careful and wise to protect for her foresight. She believed in fire insurance and the approval of every business and personel safeguard. She evidently believed in the old admonition, 'Pray, but keep your powder dry!'"

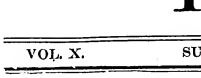
In the matter of guards for Mrs. Eddy's tomb, every sensible person indorses the approve of it. The vandalism which have in the past been perpetrated after the deaths of noted persons would justify the precaution.

"No doubt the directors felt that they would be derelict in their trust if they did not safeguard the remains of Mrs. Eddy.

"Tha directors adopted what seemed the simplest and most effective way of doing it."

Rich Kansas Negro.

Hutchinson, Kan.—A few days ago John W. Thomes, a negro, planked down something like $10,000 cash for a piece of farming land south of Hutchinson. Thomas also closed the deal about the same time for the sale of a farm southwest of town for $15,000. Thirty years ago Thomes went to Kansas without a dollar and took odd jobs such as he could get. But unlike the majority of his people, he did not stay in the city, but sought the country and began farming. Today Thomas is worth not less than $50,000, owns a couple of farms and some city property, has a touring car and enjoys other luxuries of life.



MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

VOL. X. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1911. NO. 45.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Social Gayeties Are in Full Swing

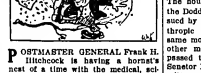
WASHINGTON.—Washington's social season is in full swing and the big balls, the official receptions and state dinners at the White House now follow one another in bewildering rapidity.

A tradition, well-nigh as old as the republic itself, prescribes the four official receptions at the White House of which the first is given for the diplomatic corps, the second for the Supreme court, the third for the members of congress and the last for the officers of the army and navy. During President Taft's incumbancy of the White House these receptions have acquired a significance which they have lacked for many years. By limiting the number of invitations and endeavoring to avoid asking the same persons twice, the receptions have been made more enjoyable and also far more brilliant.

State dinners at the White House follow the same order as the receptions, the first being given for the diplomatic corps. President and Mrs. Taft will this season add one dinner, and the reception to congress will be followed by a dinner to the speaker of the house, a custom which will likely be accepted as a precedent hereafter. Each member of the cabinet, beginning with the premier, the secretary of state, and following in order of precedence gives a dinner for the President and Mrs. Taft. These dinners will be on Thursdays during the season. Previous to the Roosevelt regime the guests at the cabinet dinners were limited to the President and his wife and the cabinet members and their wives. Meeting the same small set of persons nine times during every winter proved a bit dull for all the guests, and when Mrs. Roosevelt signified that she would be glad if each cabinet hostess should ask whomever she chose when dining the President, there was general rejoicing.

"At home" days of the women of the official circle are also regulated by precedent. Society, for instance, has long accepted Wednesday as the day on which calls shall be made upon the wife of the vice-president, the wives of the cabinet members and at the home of the speaker of the house of representatives. Custom has likewise appointed Monday as the official reception day for the wives of the members of the judiciary, Tuesday for the wives of the representatives in congress and Thursday as the day on which calls shall be made upon the wives of senators.

New Insecticide Law Now in Effect



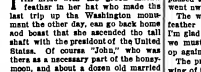
THE insecticide act of 1910 is now in effect and joint regulations for its enforcement have been issued by the secretaries of the treasury, of agriculture and of commerce and labor. The act forbids the manufacture or sale in federal territory of adulterated or misbranded insecticides and fungicides, especially mentioning Paris green and lead arsenate. It also forbids interstate shipment of such articles and this is its most important feature.

Under the regulations samples of insecticides and fungicides are to be collected by purchase by agents of the United States department of agriculture and analyzed or examined by such chemist or examiner as the secretary of agriculture may designate. If a sample then appears to be adulterated or misbranded a private hearing before the secretary or his representative will be given to the party from whom the sample was obtained and to others interested who may appear personally or by attorney and may submit oral or written evidence. If it still appears that the act has been violated the proper United States attorney will be informed of the facts. Provision is made for state officials to co-operate in reporting violations to the secretary of agriculture.

Paris green is adulterated if it does not contain at least 50 per cent. of arsenic oxide; or if the other hand it must not contain arsenic in water-soluble forms exceeding more than 3½ per cent. of arsenous oxide; and no substance may be mixed with it so as to lower its strength.

Lead arsenate is counted adulterated if it contains more than 50 per cent. of water, or if its total arsenic is equivalent to less then 12½ per cent. of orsenic oxide

Protest Against Postal Rate Rulings



POSTMASTER GENERAL Frank H. Hitchcock is having a hornet's nest of a time with the medical, scientific and other societies of like character whose publications he is trying to rule out of the mails at the 2cents pound rate. For years societies of this character have been availing themselves of this privilege under the law of 1879, but about a year ago the postmaster general served notice on them that unless they changed their method, they must pay the rate of another class, or about five times as much as they are paying now.

The societies mode vigorous protest, in consequence of which Mr. Hitchcock has held his order in abeyance. The house, in the meantime, passed the Dodds bill, to give publications issued by educational, scientific, philanthropic and fraternal societies the same mail rate privileges enjoyed by other magazines. The bill has not passed the senate, nor, in fact, can Senator Penrose, chairman of the committee on postoffices and postroads, be induced to call a meeting to consider it.

The postmaster general maintains that he is simply complying with existing law. It is pointed out by the postoffice department that the postmaster general would have no end of trouble on his hands if he made exceptions in administering the law specifying the rate of matter that may be carried at the cent-a-pound rate.

President Goes to Top of Monument

THE bride with the green macaw a feather in her hat who made the last trip up the Washington monument the other day, can go back home and boast that she ascended the tall shaft with the president of the United States. Of course "John," who was there as a necessary part of the honeymoon, and about a dozen old married people can make the same boast, for the big elevator was comfortably filled when the president and secretary Norton, with two secret service men, came down the gravel walk to the foot of the monument.

The president took one look at the stone shaft rising to the mist more than 500 feet, one look at the elevator, and then said to Secretary Norton, "I think we'll ride up, Norton." It was Mr. Taft's first visit to the top of the monument, although he had lived in Washington more than ten years.

The president walked to each of the windows in turn. "It must be fine up here on a clear day," he said, as he turned away at last to enter the elevator for the trip down. At the entrance to the shaft the president paused a minute undecided, and then went away.

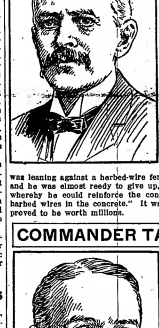
The witness with the green macaw feather exclaimed: "Oh, John, dear, I'm glad we've seen the president, but we mustn't miss the view. We'll go up again by-and-by."

The president strolled to the senate wing of the capitol. The elevator man took him down in the basement and he next made his first tour of inspection of the celebrated subterranean passage. After having lived in Washington ten years he had seen some of the things that tourists see on the day of their arrival.

The way of the transgressor is soft—until he is found out.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

RISE OF PENNILESS RUSSIAN



The failure of the Northern bank of New York for $8,000,000 and the story of Joseph G. Robin's career in New York is the story of the gold filled streets of America that lures the ambitious of Europe here. Sixteen years ago he was a penniless immigrant, with perhaps a half-dozen words of English at his command. For the past year he has had a controlling voice in three banks, two holding companies, two real estate development companies and two traction roads.

A Russian by birth, Robin came to the United States as Joseph Rabino-witz. He was about twenty-two years old then, and is now about thirty-eight. He came to this country alone and he is still single and without relatives here.

A year after Rabinowitz reached America he fired upon journalism as the profession he meant to follow. For rother less than a month he was a reporter on the Herald, with only broken English and tremendous determination as his stock in trade.

Four years later Rabinowitz had become Robin and was attracting attention as deputy to Gen. James R. O'Beirne, Oom Paul Kruger's commissioner extraordinary for the Boers in the United States. Within five years more he was banker and financier both, his associates in ambitious enterprises including some of the best known men in the United States.

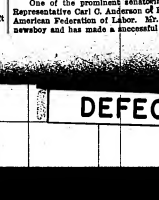
AGED INVENTOR'S SUCCESS

The people who declare that a man has outlived his usefulness when he attains the age of sixty years and should be put out of his misery with a dose of chloroform, will have to extend the limit if they wish to make a hit with the residents of San Jose, Cal., since it has become known that George Gates, a struggling seventy-year-old inventor of that city, will become a multi-millionaire through the sale to a syndicate of eleven of the greatest railway systems of the United States, of his patent rights in a concrete railroad tie which he has invented. The price to be paid for the patents is $10,000,000.

Gates has been working on the concrete tie for about five years. He cast thousands and thousands of concrete ties in those years and was not discouraged when they failed to stand tests and crumbled and cracked under the vibration of heavy traffic.

One day about two years ago Gates was leaning against a barbed-wire fence. His meager funds were about gone and he was almost ready to give up, but the barbed wire suggested a means whereby he could reinforce the concrete. "I will just cast some of these barbed wires in the concrete." It was a happy idea, and one thet afterward proved to be worth millions.

COMMANDER TALKED TOO MUCH



Commander W. S. Sims of the United States navy has gotten himself into a lot of trouble after a long and very creditable career. He attended a banquet in London and made a speech, during the course of which he had the misfortune to "slop over." He was very anxious to impress on the minds of his British hosts the feeling of friendship which exists in the United States, but he went too far and assured them that:

"If ever the time comes that the British empire is menaced by an external foe she can count on every man, every dollar, every ship and every drop of blood of her kindred across the sea."

Now, Uncle Sam thinks a whole lot of John Bull, but he doesn't propose to have every Tom, Dick and Harry making wholesale promises for him. So Commander Sims has been called up. President Taft characterizes the offense as conspicuous and orders that he be politely reprimanded by the secretary of the navy.

This action on the part of the president was necessary, because had he taken no notice of the commander's statement people would have had a right to be offended. In international relationships it is necessary to steer a pretty straight course to avoid giving offense.

THE NEW SENATOR FROM OHIO

The election of a United States senator from Ohio, to succeed Senator Dick, precipitated a lively contest, which ended only with the selection of Atlee Pomerene of Canton, McKinley's old town. It is said to have been one of the hottest senatorial campaigns in the history of the state.

Mr. Pomerene is a lawyer and is forty-seven years old. He is a native of the state, a graduate of Princeton and has been a practicing attorney since 1886. He has held the office of city solicitor and prosecuting attorney and was the most formidable rival of Harmon for the nomination for governor. He was forced to accept second place, however, and was elected lieutenant-governor.

Mr. Pomerene is married and his wife is one of Ohio's popular and cultured women, who will no doubt be warmly welcomed to senatorial circles at Washington.

One of the prominent senatorial candidates before the legislature was Representative Carl C. Anderson of Fostoria, who had the endorsement of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Anderson likes as a bootblack and newsboy and has made a successful uphill struggle against early limitations.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Divorce Record Held by Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—How to be happy though married seems to be a question hard to solve in this city, for recent statistics show one divorce for every four marriages. This is believed to be the highest record for matrimonial detachments in the United States. Taking Missouri and Kansas there is one divorce for every eight marriages, and in the United States one for every 12. [illegible]

Dr. Charles A. Elwood, professor of sociology in the State University, has recently compiled the figures upon which the divorce statements regarding Missouri marriages that failed are based.

He has found that 80 per cent of the divorces are obtained by women and in nearly all cases the allegations made by wives are sufficient. Among the reasons advanced by Dr. Elwood for the increase of divorce is the decay of religion, particularly in the religious theory of marriage and the family. Another probable reason advanced is the development of individualism, self-assertion and self-interest.

This spirit is said to be antagonistic to the simple life. It is the spirit fostered by the New Woman, the women of the clubs and the suffragette movement. A number of avocations are now open to women in which a bright girl can earn a salary making her independent. After a few years of this life she may marry well or she may marry a man who cannot provide the little luxuries of life she would like to provide for herself before marriage.

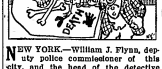
That a women should be discontented after giving up independence and a life full of diverting incidents, the daily trip downtown, the work in an office until noon, the daily gossip hear at luncheon and the mingling with e busy world, is not considered surprising. From this class many domestic discords come to swell the big grist for the divorce mill.

Men in the professions do not think of marriage until they are at least 30 years old. They try to become established and to attain a dependable position before marrying. This contributes something to domestic discord, for the men of 30 or over has accumulated habits that are not easily adaptable to those of his wife, particularly if she is near his own age.

One Man Booms Street Fakers' Sales

CHICAGO.—"Capping" for street fakers has been found a highly lucrative if novel way of earning a living by at least one young Chicagoan. It could hardly be called work, strolling about the streets at such times as might suit the stroller's own whim, but still there is money in it and the vender rekes in the coin and passes over his goods.

"Capping" is the word. Oh, yes. I have from twenty to thirty fakere on my list, and they come around to my room every night and gimcracks you see peddled on the streets, the capper said, that I boom the fakers' sales. I get a percentage.



"The only rule I follow," he went on, "and the only rule a fellow to this game can follow consistently, is to change his make-up as frequently as possible. I never attempt e disguise of the stage sort, with false whiskers, grease paint or anything freaky. But I do wear covered suits, coats and hats in the course of the day and make it a rule to dress inconspicuously, so that I cannot easily be detected by persons I have induced to purchase by suggestion instead of direct appeal, as the ordinary salesman would do.

"I never hint into a crowd that is buying. That would be useless. I wait until things are slow or stagnent, and then I jump in and e laugh or a pointed comment does the trick. I never sell directly. I merely suggest and the vender rekes in the coin and passes over his goods.

"My rule-of-thumb. Oh, yes. I have from twenty to thirty fakere on my list, and they come around to my room every night and gimcracks you see peddled on the streets, the capper said, that I boom the fakers' sales. I get a per-

Criminals Threaten Police Official

NEW YORK.—William J. Flynn, deputy police commissioner of this city, and the head of the detective bureau which rounded up the great Italian kidnaping gang and also placed about a dozen members of two or three large counterfeiting gangs behind prison bars, is a "marked man." The Italian criminals of the metropolis have declared that he must die, and for the last two or three weeks have been working overtime in advising him of the fact by sending threatening letters. Death is his most horrible forms has been promised him; he has seen the death sign given him scores of times in court rooms, and on the streets

Probably no man in the United States is more bitterly hated by "Black Hand" members and Italian criminals generally than Flynn. Relentless in the rucking down of these bands of foreign scum, he has succeeded a hatred for himself among them that amounts almost to madness. Yet it is a hatred that is not accompanied with fear that, up to the present time, his life has never been attempted. He has been doomed to die, if the criminal element among the Italians ever finds a way to accomplish it, yet he is still at his old post. For years he has gotten threatening letters—letters with crose bones and skulls and black hands and death marked all over them—but as yet no criminal has had the courage to put his threat into execution.

Delivery of a Letter Long Delayed

YONKERS, N. Y.—Uncle Sam set a new record in rapid postal service when he delivered at Yonkers the other day, a letter sent from Geneva, N. Y., on April 29, 1838.

Yonkers is just 335 miles from Geneva. It took the letter seventy-two years to travel the distance.

Both the sender of the letter and the man to whom it was addressed are dead, the latter forty years ago. Mrs. Walter Paddock, of the old Paddock family of Yonkers, received it. She is a grandniece of D. O. Paddock, to whom the letter was addressed. He was in the lumber business. Mrs. Paddock had never seen him.

The postman called at her home with a postoffice department envelope. Within was the time-yellowed sheet of paper. It was not an envelope, for it was written when envelopes were unknown. It was folded square and the ends turned in, and a postage stamp was pasted across to keep them there. The stamp was canceled and the postmark bore the date, Geneva, N. Y., April 29, 1838. Scrawled across this was another one, which read Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 27, 1910.

No explanation of the delay appeared upon it. There was no mark from the dead letter office. It probably had been mailed by the sender, who signed himself Whitney, and had been mislaid in the postoffice at Geneva to be found again just now.

It was in relation to a shipment of lumber which Mr. Paddock was to make from Yonkers, and contained the information that $2,000 in payment would be sent on receipt of the consignment.

FORGETTING THE PAST.

Because a man has failed in achieving success, or because he has gone even further and wilfully wrecked the life that once promised so much, it does not follow that he can never get up again. Yet there are men everywhere who believe that certain incidents in their lives have placed them beyond redemption and that it is useless to try and begin over again Sometimes they become impatient for the success that seems so far away and frequently give up just before it comes within their grasp. Repeated failures seem only to convince them that they can never hope to accomplish anything because of their former mistakes, and yet the miracle may be performed when least expected. It is wise to forget the past, whatever it may have been, and to train ourselves to live only in the present, says the Charleston News and Courier. Sometimes the past projects its shadows across our path and for a time we feel helpless and think it but natural that we should move in its gloom. It is possible, however, to leave the shadow behind and step out into the sunshine of the new and untried life which spreads all about us. No man can hope to make any headway in his business career who goes about with the remembrance of an unworthy past hanging like a millstone about his neck. Its weight will bear him down if he undertakes to begin the new life with the memory of the old still clinging to him.

A Russian who recently came to this country and located in Pittsburg became very irate because his wife "was disobedient and had become imbued with American ideas." So he threatened to shoot the woman, and did tear her clothes from her and burn them in the street. Then the police took a hand, and the overzealous Russian was fined $50 and sentenced to 90 days in the workhouse. When he has paid up and gets out he is likely to have a lasting recognition of the fact that one "American idea" is that a husband cannot treat his wife like a slave. And if he objects he is at liberty to return to the land where the laws are less objectionable to him.

Continental United States has a population of over 91,000,000. That does not include outlying possessions, which have a number of millions more. The figures put this country foremost among nations having a homogenous and united people. There are several countries where the aggregate population is larger, including China and India with their hundreds of millions. But nowhere else is there such solidarity and harmony of general purpose as in the United States. We have out little differences, political and otherwise; but taking in the fundamentals the Americans are a pretty harmonious family.

BUCK'S SUIT AT END

SUPREME TRIBUNAL OF UNITED STATES RULES "BOYCOTT" LITIGATION OUT.

RULE IT A MOOT QUESTION

Issues Now Remains Whether Gompers, Mitchell and Morrison, Under Jail Sentence for Contempt, Will Have to Serve Terms.

Washington.—Reaching the conclusion that the Bucks Stove and Range company in St. Louis, and the American Federation of Labor had settled that dispute out of court, the Supreme court of the United States Friday decided that no issue remained in the so-called "boycott" case for the court to pass upon.

The court proceeded to hear arguments on the "contempt" case which arose out of the "boycott" case.

The court arrived at the conclusion that the "boycott" case was moot, or one leaving nothing substantial to be decided.

Attorneys on both sides being interrogated informed the court that an agreement had been entered into between the company and the federation for the settlement of their disputes.

Chief Justice White announced that the court considered that this left nothing but the matter of costs to be determined upon and that nothing remained for the court to decide when a staggering blow to its industry of blackmailing distracted parade.

FAST MAIL HELD UP

YOUNG MAN ROBS COLORADO AND SOUTHERN PASSENGERS.

Robber Secures $117 in Cash and Much Jewelry—Is Wounded and Jailed

Pueblo, Col.—A score of passengers in the Pullman sleeper attached to the Texas fast mail, on the Colorado & Southern railroad, were held up and robbed Friday by a young man, who, singlehanded, compelled them to hold their hands above their heads while he went through the car from end to end and relieved them of all they had in the way of money and jewelry. The total loot amounted to $117 in cash and a quantity of jewelry. After having robbed the car full of passengers, he failed to make good his escape.

Just as he jumped from the train William McCafferty, a special agent of the Denver & Rio Grande railroad, who was in the forward part of the train and who had started back on hearing the signal to stop the train, reached the Pullman and poked his head in the door. A yell from the passengers that they had been robbed brought the situation home to McCafferty at once. The robber had in the meantime jumped from the car and started to run. McCafferty drew his gun and fired at the retreating bandit, wounding him in the right wrist. After a short chase he gave himself up and all the money and jewelry was recovered. He was brought to Pueblo and placed in jail.

He gave his name as Al Buckley, but refused any further information concerning himself.

U. S. AIDS DIAZ TO END WAR

Troops Ordered to Four Texas Towns to Stop Supplying of Arms to Rebels.

Washington. — Arrangements were made Tuesday through the department of state, the war department and the department of justice for the United States to end the revolution in Mexico.

This action was taken at the instance of representatives of American financiers having large investments in the republic of Mexico and comes after the Mexican government, through its diplomatic representative here, Ambassador De La Barra, has failed utterly to act on any requests or to its representations that the revolution is being fostered by the violation of neutrality laws that prohibit the shipping from one country to another of arms and munitions of war to its used against the constituted government of that country.

Orders were issued to move United States troops, with pack trains, from Fort Sam Houston to Brownsville, Laredo, Eagle Pass and Del Rio, on the Mexican border. These troops will patrol the border from Brownsville to El Paso to prevent further shipments of arms and ammunition to the Mexican revolutionists from their agents in the United States.

CANADIAN PACT OUT

AGREEMENT BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND DOMINION SENT TO CONGRESS.

MANY ARTICLES ON FREE LIST

Farm Products and Live Animals for the Market Are Included in Tariff Changes—Taft Urges Confirmation of Treaty.

Washington.—The new reciprocity pact recently agreed to between representatives of the United States and Canada governments was made public Thursday, both in Washington and Ottawa.

President Taft sent it to congress with an extended message urging the confirmation of the proposed treaty. The state department gave out a summary of the tariff changes provided for, which in part is as follows:

"The basis of the agreement is this: Reciprocity on leading food-products, such as wheat and other grains; dairy products, fresh fruits and vegetables, fish of all kinds, eggs and poultry, cattle, sheep and other live animals. Also certain commodities now free in one country are to be made free by the other, such as petroleum oil by Canada and rough lumber by the United States. Tin and tin plates, now dutiable in countries are made mutually free.

"Barbed wire fencing, now exempted from duty by Canada is also exempted by the United States. Some raw materials, such as mica and gypsum, which enter into numerous industries, are to be made free by the United States. Printing paper is to become free on the removal of all restrictions on the exportation of pulpwood.

"Mutually reduced identical rates on secondary food products, such as fresh meats, canned meats, bacon and hams, lard and lard compounds; canned vegetables, flour, cereal preparations and other foodstuffs, partly manufactured.

"Mutually reduced rates on a list of manufactured commodities, which includes motor vehicles, cutlery, clocks and watches, sanitary fixtures, hatches and similar leather goods, plate glass, brass bend instruments, printing ink and miscellaneous articles. Agricultural implements, such as plows, harvesters, threshing machines and drills are reduced by Canada to the United States rates.

"A small list of articles is given an special by each country. Canada reduces coal to 45 cents per ton, and cement to 11 cents per 100 pounds.

"The United States reduces iron ore to ten cents per ton, lowers the rate on aluminum products and on dressed lumber.

Total amount of duties to be remitted by the United States, $4,850,000. Duties remitted by Canada, $2,680,000. Value of articles now dutiable which the United States proposed to make free, $29,511,000, equal to 76.4 per cent. Value of dutiable articles on which the United States proposed to reduce duties, $7,521,000, equal to 14.4 per cent. Value of articles imported into the United States, now free affected by the reciprocal agreement, $47,232,000, equal to 91 per cent.

The treaty and messages will go to the committee on foreign relations.

JUDGE ADMITS USING CASH

Kimbrough of Danville Says Payments Were Legitimate Liquidations of Campaign Expenses.

Danville, Ill.—One of the most dramatic situations Vermilion county has ever witnessed was enacted on Thursday when Judge E. R. E. Kimbrough testified as to vote trafficking charges of which he himself is said to had instructed to investigate the matter.

Every effort was made to safguard the secrets of the grand jury room. Special bailiffs guarded the door.

Just prior to entering the jury chamber Judge Kimbrough admitted the truth of the rapped distribution of bags of money on election day.

"It is true that I went around the city on election day," said Judge Kimbrough, "and distributed money to the men who were employed by the election judges."

"I deny absolutely that the money distributed from the automobile was for illegitimate votes. It was for legitimation purposes, a legitimate campaign expense."

Judge Kimbrough was before the grand jury 77 minutes.

Mayor Platt followed Judge Kimbrough into the juryroom. His stay before the jurymen was very brief.

In Cincinnati he will speak to the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick March 17.

TELLS OF BRIBE OFFER

$100,000 TENDERED TO SUPPORT SHIP SUBSIDY.

Manager of Journal of Commerce Bares Efforts Made to Buy Up His Paper.

Washington.—Several offers, including one of $100,000, made to the New York Journal of Commerce, to induce it to drop its hostile attitude toward ship subsidy legislation and to give such legislation its support, were revealed to the house committee investigating ship subsidy by Alfred W. Dodsworth.

Mr. Dodsworth is business manager of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.

As a result of the evidence Mr. Dodsworth's brother, John W. Dodsworth, the editor of the Journal of Commerce, will be recalled to Washington to explain why he failed to embrace the committee during his recent testimony.

The witness said that his paper never had been subsidized by any interests whatever, and its business and editorial columns had no relation. But, he testified, about six years ago an unknown man came into his offices and offered to pay the Journal of Commerce $100,000, taking 1,000,000 copies of his paper for the insertion of an article in one issue supporting the ship subsidy legislation.

This men refused to disclose his identity unless his proposition was to be accepted. His proposition was, in the event of acceptance, to make out a certified check immediately for $10,000 to bind the agreement and to pay the $90,000 upon publication of the article.

Mr. Dodsworth said he immediately called his brother, John W., into his office as a witness to the conversation and the proposition was turned down as an attempt to make an improper arrangement.

PAYNTER ELIMINATES TAFT

President's Name Is Brought In Lorimer Case for First Time by Kentucky Senator.

Washington.—For the first time since the debate in the senate in the case of Senator William Lorimer of Illinois began mention was made of the reported interest of the president in the unseating of that senator.

The reference was by Senator Paynter of Kentucky, who was a member of the subcommittee which made the investigation into the charges.

Declaring the question to be a judicial one, Mr. Paynter said:

"I did not approach the investigation with any feeling or thought that the country demanded a victim to appease its wrath, or that any member of this body, if such a demand was made, would subserviently yield to it; neither did I suppose that a sacrifical offering would be made of the accused because of the public pressure that now did I suppose it was necessary to do so to give character and standing to the administration."

Having brought the president into the discussion, the Kentucky senator professedly undertook to eliminate him from it. Referring to the frequent assertion in the public press that the president is using his personal, if not his official, influence against Mr. Lorimer, Mr. Paynter said in effect the resent the imputation against the president.

Head of United Workers is Given Ovation When His Defeat for Re-Election is Announced.

Columbus, Ohio.—"I am going back to the mines. I am going to work there just as the rest of you are working, and I won't sell to any organization of coal operators the information which I received as president of the Mine Workers."

This declaration from President T. L. Lewis, made after the tellers had made their report to the mine workers' convention, during which he had been defeated for re-election by J. P. White of Oskaloosa, Ia., was received with a demonstration of cheers. The ovation was greater than the one given White when he made a short speech expressing his gratitude over his election.

The report of the tellers showed the vote:

THE SCHOOLS OF WESTERN CANADA

In Some of the Cities and Towns the School Buildings Cannot Accommodate the Increasing Numbers.

One of the most important factors in the building of a new country in the attention that is paid by the authorities to the education of the rising generation. Fortunately for western Canada, the settlement of that new country began in such recent years that it was able to lay a foundation for this work, gained by the experience of older countries. In this way the very best is the result. Throughout the entire country one is to see the most improved style of architecture in school buildings. The cities and towns vie with each other in their efforts to secure the best of accommodation and at the some time get architectural lines that would appeal. Sufficient to say that nowhere is there the greater attention paid to elementary and advanced education than in western Canada. A report just to hand shows that in Calgary, Alberta, there are eighty teachers employed, and the enrollment 4,228 pupils. In the Province of Alberta there was a total of 45,000 pupils attending schools in 1909. The total enrollment for the year in city, town and village schools was 22,883, and the total in rural schools was 23,165. There are in the province 320 schools with 1,282 departments. At the close of 1909 there was a total of 1,095 school districts in the province. Great attention is paid also to agricultural education. The best uses of the soil and such other matters on tend to make the agriculture less a of drudge and more of a success are employed. When there is the combination of good soil, splendid climate and healthy and advonced ideas in the methods employed in agriculture, we see accomplished the results that have placed western Canada on its present high plene in the agricultural world. There is to be found men of high standing in literary spheres os well as in financial circles who are carrying on farming, not alone for the pleasure they derive but for the profit they secure. Mr. Adler, a wide-awake business man of New York, bos a ranch near Strathmore, Alberto. He is highly pleased with his investment last year. He says:

"On July 25th we estimated our crop at 6,000 bushels of wheat. A week later we increased our estimate to 12,000 bushels. A few days later we again increased our estimate, this time to 13,000 bushels, but after harvest in September we found we had 20,110 bushels. If that isn't a record, what is?" he asked.

"This crop was made with practically no moisture," he continued, "and we now have a better opinion of the fertility of Alberta than ever before, and value our lands higher than we ever did before."

Mr. Adler, who has been on the ranch for about a week, leaves for New York Saturday.

This gentleman is conducting a farm on a large scale, and has plenty of means to develop it, and his may not be taken as a fair sample. There are, though, instances of thousands who have begun life on small means in western Canada with only brains and the determination over and above the couple of hundred dollars with ready money that they possessed, and today are owners of large farms and handsome incomes, all the result of their efforts on land that was responsive to the touch of the hand that held the plow. Information as to these may be quoted if you will communicate with the nearest Canadian government agent, who will also mail you free descriptive literature.

The exhortation of two of his men, charged with the duty of following the suspected animal to ascertain whether her owner was an Italian spy.

BLAME PHYSICIANS FOR GROWTH OF DOPE HABIT

Druggists Say Prescriptions and Not Patent Medicines the Cause.

New York.—Blame for the prevalence and growth of the morphine habit was placed on the shoulders of physicians, who prescribed the drug, at a meeting of druggists here tonight to protest against the recently enacted city ordinance prohibiting the sale at retail of any preparation containing morphine or its salts except upon a doctors prescription.

The ordinance is aimed primarily at pategric and at proprietary remedies, according to members of the board of health who were instrumental in obtaining its passage. Caswell Mayo, one of the druggists, said he had made a canvass by mail of several manufacturers and the replies convinced him 90 per cent. of the victims of drugs formed the habit as a result of using prescriptions given by physicians and only 8 per cent. from using proprietary medicines.

There is no surer way to friendship than the honest and sincere appreciation of the good qualities and merits of others.—Henry Lee.

Indeterminate Sentence Urged.

Many recommendations in the government of state institutions and criminals are urged by the board. A strong recommendation is made in favor of the indeterminate sentence. With this plan the board feels that it can be more at liberty to parole its prisoners and the men who are released, knowing that if they violate the conditions of their parole they are liable to be returned for an indeterminate period, will make greater efforts to obey the laws.

The report calls attention to the crowded condition of the insane hospitals and recommends either a new hospital for the aged and senile which will relieve the state institution of several hundred of its patients, or the building of another insane hospital. In discussing the question of the care of insane people the board urges the erection of detention hospitals throughout the state.

The board believes that if the hospitals for the insane were called detention hospitals, instead of insane asylums, the feeling of disgrace held by the relatives of the insane persons would to a great extent be relieved. The board also recommends that each county pay half the cost incurred for the care of its insane.

Other recommendations made by the board are for a separate reformatory for women, an amendment of the pardon laws, the purchase of additional lands for state institutions, a clinical and scientific investigation of the criminals and a change in the title of the Minnesota Industrial School for Girls to "The Minnesota Home School for Girls."

TEACHERS WILL MEET.

Five Hundred Expected to Attend Convention at Fergus Falls.

Fergus Falls.—The city is making preparations to entertain the North-west-Central Educational association, which is to hold its annual convention here Feb. 16 and 17. Between 400 and 500 teachers are expected to attend.

The convention will open in the evening of Feb. 16 and the general subject for discussion at this meeting will be "The Status of Education in Minnesota." Addresses will be delivered by George B. Aiton, state high school inspector, and E. C. Higbee, superintendent of the new agricultural school, established by the state, at Morris, Minn. George W. Cooley, secretary and engineer for the state highway commission, will also deliver an address on good roads, and will tell of road making methods in vogue in Europe and in the eastern states.

Visiting teachers will be given an opportunity to inspect the Fergus Falls school Friday afternoon, and at 10 a. m. of that day a school officers and rural teachers meeting will be held under the direction of the county superintendent, Charlotte M. Knudson. C. G. Schultz, state superintendent of public instruction; E. G. Quigley, of the colleges of education at the state university, and S. A. Challman, state graded school inspector, will address this meeting.

A short general program will also be presented late in the forenoon and the general subject will be "English in the Public Schools." Among the speakers will be President Bohannan, of the Duluth Normal school, Miss Stella Woods, of the Normal Kindergarten, of Minneapolis, B. G. Martin and Miss Nellie A. Chase, of the Moorhead normal, A. G. Arvold, of the North Dakota agricultural college, Miss Decker, of Minneapolis, and others.

The address of the evening will be delivered by Professor E. G. Lewis, instructor in English at the University of Chicago, and the author of several text books and other works.

PAYNESVILLE HEARS LECTURES.

School Children Interested in State Anti-Tuberculosis Exhibition.

Paynesville.—A free anti-tuberculosis exhibition under the auspices of the state board of health was begun here. A. R. Blakey, director of the exhibit, operated the stereopticon and lectured before a large audience composed mostly of school children above the fifth grade. Professor Loudenby presided. The lecture will be repeated today, when an address will be made by Dr. H. W. Hill of the state board of health, and others. In the evening Dr. Hill will deliver an address on "Personal Defense Against Tuberculosis," and will be followed by other speakers and a stereopticon lecture by Mr. Blakey.

SHORT COURSE FOR FARMERS.

Big Attendance at the School of Agriculture.

Minneapolis.—Much interest is reported in all parts of the state in the farmers' short courses which began Jan. 15 at the school of agriculture and about 200 sturdy sons and daughters of the soil are foregoing the husking bees, barn dances, harvest homes, spelling bees, sleighing parties, candy pullings, meetings and all the various other pastimes usually associated with the slack season on the farm for the purpose of taking up the instruction outlined. Preparations were made to take care of as many mature "farmer students" as may desire to avail themselves of the advantages of a four-weeks' course.

The short course for farms was established by the University of Minnesota to meet the needs of any farmer who is unable to take up the regular courses of agriculture. There's no entrance examination, and no age limit is prescribed. Any man or woman interested in farming and the betterment of farm life is eligible.

The time devoted to this course is so limited that the faculty has endeavored to compress much valuable information in a nutshell. The classes are combined for the morning lectures, and divided into sections for the afternoon practical work, which will be given simultaneously on various farm and home topics, in several rooms.

Many Subjects Outlined.

Some of the topics touched upon in the course of study and lectures are "Agriculture," comprising the selection of soils, planting, developing, harvesting and general farm management "Dairy Stock Judging," in which the instruction given in judging dairy stock will be based upon the actual performances of animals bred and reared in the dairy; "Dairy Husbandry," covering the characteristics of the various breeds of dairy cattle, their comparative adaptability for many phases of dairying, and the style and type of cow that has demonstrated her worth as a large and successful producer; "Animal Husbandry," for which a series of lectures will be given on animal breeding.

The chemistry of plant growth and the chemical principles involved in farm life, and their application to the production of crops forms the basis of other lectures. Other subjects will deal with the conservation of soil and methods of cultivation; dressing and curing meats and the use of farm implements will be illustrated, as far as possible, by samples. All the different agricultural devices will be touched upon. In addition to this, four lecture periods will be devoted to farm working hints, such as splicing rope, making rope halters and rope belting, and tempering of simple tools.

Business Methods Urged.

Business methods are advocated in a large measure to apply to the farm and this feature of the Minnesota school's work has attracted considerable attention and was recently recommended for adoption by the University of Illinois by a party of experts who were here. The short course aims to devote quite a little time to instruction on business forms, business arithmetic, and the keeping of simple farm accounts and records.

MANKOTA TO ENTER PROTEST.

Will Send Petition to Legislature Against Fair Appropriations.

Mankato.—A remonstrance that is being numerously signed is being circulated by Henry E. Hance and will be presented to the legislature. It reads as follows: "The undersigned citizens of Mankato and vicinity take this method of protesting against an appropriation of public money by the present legislature for the state fair, for the reason that we think the fair is and ought to be self-supporting, and that there is no such urgent need for more buildings and improvements as to call for an appropriation of public money. Also, that the earnings of the state fair are sufficient so that all needed improvements can well be made from year to year from the net earnings received."

TROLLEY STOCKHOLDERS MEET.

Twin City Rapid Transit Co. Re-elects Officers and Directors.

New York, N. Y. — At the annual stockholders' meeting of the Twin City Rapid Transit Company, held in Elizabeth, N. J., the retiring directors were re-elected. Subsequently the directors met in New York and re-elected the former officers. C. G. Goodrich presided. The directors declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ on the preferred and ¾ on common, both payable April 1. Stated dividends were declared so long in advance because it might be impossible to get a quorum later. President Goodrich said the annual report would be ready next week. No preliminary figures were given out. It was officially stated that no financing had been arranged at the meeting.

FINED FOR ILLEGAL FISHING.

Sauk Centre Nimrod Used Wrong Kind of Tackle.

Sauk Centre.—As a result of a raid made some weeks ago on an illegal fishing outfit at the inlet of Sauk lake, when Deputy Joe Miller and his city confiscated several nets, Ole Emblom was arrested and taken before Justice Bleker of Long Prairie and fined $10 and costs. Emblom's attorney appealed the case to the district court and it will come up in April.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Jan. 26.—The county option battle is on. Following a long series of conferences, with long debates as to when would introduce the measure, whether it should first appear in the House or senate, the measure finally was introduced in the house today by Representative Henry Rines, of Moorhead. It was immediately referred to the temperance committee.

This committee is pledged to report it out promptly so that the issue on the discussion will commence at once. In the senate the same measure will be introduced by Senator Victor L. Johnson, of Chisago county.

The new measure is the result of the work of Rev. C. Charles Ver Stark and of P. J. Youngdahl, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league.

Mr. Stark says that as to its intent it is practically the same as the bill introduced two years ago, although some of the provisions are different.

It provides for the submission of a county option measure at special elections to be held on other than general or primary election days."

A petition of 25 per cent of the voters of the county will be sufficient to cause such an election. After an election to be held under the provisions of the bill, another election is not to be held for three years subsequent to that time.

If the county votes "dry," then, after a lapse of sixty days, the saloonmen must dispose of their property and the county lid goes on.

The issue on county option are to be held on days other than primary and general election days.

The ballot at election shall represent different sides of the question.

Sixty days' advance notice of the election is to be given.

A simple majority of the votes will determine the result of the election.

Penalty for violation of the county option law if passed will be a fine of from $20 to $100 or imprisonment of from 30 to 90 days.

Seed For Fire District.

Representative C. H. Allison's bill setting aside $25,000 for purchasing timothy, clover, red-top and other grass seed for the reforestation in the northern Minnesota forest fire district for reseeding their lands, passed the house.

A bill introduced by Representative C. H. Dean sets apart $25,000 for a statue of Alexander Ramsey, first territorial governor of Minnesota. The statue is to be erected on the capitol grounds.

Andrew Anderson of Lakeville proposes a reformatory prison and reformatory for women. In a bill he provides authority to the board of control to expend $85,000 for acquiring not less than 160 acres for such institutions.

Senator W. S. Dwinnell's bill permitting the city of Minneapolis to increase the rate of interest on its permanent improvement bond issue from 4 to 4½ per cent was passed.

Senator Dwinnell has introduced the creation of a board, consisting of the governor, attorney general and state auditor, who shall have the power to loan the state and school funds which may be available to the farmers of Minnesota. Only 30 per cent of the value of a farm may be loaned, and in no case shall the amount exceed $5,000.

The rate of interest is placed at 4 per cent.

A resolution calling for a legislative investigation of the state drainage commission was adopted by the house committee of the Minnesota legislature. The committee consists of Representatives Thomas Kneeland, Herbert Pfaender and C. H. Warner.

St. Paul, Jan. 26.—Reapportionment was given its first tryout in the legislature in the senate when a bill was introduced providing that the mandate of the constitution, which provides that the representative district shall be effected on the basis of population, be followed, together with provisions that the representative district be divided to form senatorial districts and that the senatorial district be divided to elected to 63 members, while that of the lower house be limited to 126 members.

J. N. Johnson of Lac Qui Parle county started the fireworks in the house when he moved that the first reading of the resolution, that referring to the provisions of the constitution, be stricken out before passage. This brought out a storm of protest from the reapportionment members.

Johnson and others opposed to this section of the bill failed 40 give any special reason for opposing the motion and when a final vota was taken it stood 71 for and 44 against.

In the senate the resolution met defeat by a vota of 39 to 23 on a motion to pass the resolution under suspension of the rules, the vota being as follows:

Yess—Ahmann, Anderson, Benson, Carpenter, Chesgro, Colter, Cook, C. P., Coke, L. O., Dale, Donegre, Donaldson, Duxbury, Elwell, Glotzbach, Handlan, Haycraft, Johnson, Klein, L'Hamil, McGrath, Moonan, Murrary, Nelson, Odell, Olson, Pauly, Peterson, Poehler, Putnam, Rochne, Saugstad, Schaller, Stebbins, Sullivan, G. H., Sullivan, J. D., Thoe, Van Hovan, Weis, Works.

Nays—Bedford, Boyle, Chesaks, Dues, Dunn, Dwinnell, Fosseen, Frobsug, Gunderson, Gunn, Hackney, Hansen, Johnson, Kleis, L'Estrange, Pugh, Rustad, Sagang, Sunberg, Swanson, Watfers, Wilson.

Money for Soldiers' Home.

Representative Harrison Whita presented a bill appropriating the following amounts for the Minnesota Soldiers' Home at Minnehaha: For addition to women's building, $75,000; addition for support of home, $50,000; for enlarging heating plant or providing plant for women's building, $10,000; for new bake oven and storeroom, $10,000; for repairs and improvements, $10,000; total additional, $155,000.

Road Taxes in Cash.

Representative Ole Peterson's old favorite, a bill abolishing highway labor taxes, appeared in the house. His measure abolishes also the offics of overseer of highways and provides as a substitute the offics of inspector of highways. Instead of working out their road taxes, the farmers will pay their road taxes in cash, by Mr. Peterson's bill.

Proposes Civil Service.

A comprehensive civil service system for all employees of the state is provided in a bill offered by Representative Thomas Kneeland, Minneapolis.

St. Paul, Jan. 27.—State fair matters and a plan for the reorganization of the governing board of the fair made the committee room, and not the chamber of either body, the center of interest.

Forest Fire Bill Passes.

The O'Neill bill, relating to the prevention and suppression of forest fires and appropriating money for the prevention of fires, passed the house by a unanimous vote.

For Non-partizan Judges.

Senator F. E. Putnam introduced a non-partizan judiciary bill. It provides for the election of delegates at the primary election, without any name on the ballot, on the basis of one delegate for 150 voters. These delegates will constitute a district judicial convention to nominate candidates for district judges, and elect delegates to the state judicial convention, which will nominate candidates for supreme court justices. The district convention will meet 15 days before the general election and state convention four weeks before. If at any time a district judge candidate receives 75 per cent of the votes, only one shall be nominated. Otherwise the convention shall nominate two or more candidates for each place, who will go on the general election ballot without party designation.

To Pay Capitol Debt.

The senate committee on finance recommended that authority be given the state to call in $850,000 of new capitol certificates now held by the permanent school fund. A letter to the chairman, from Governor A. O. Eberhart stated that there are ample funds in the treasury for redeeming the certificates, and the promise of future revenue justifies the state in redeeming the certificates. The certificates bear 3 or 3½ per cent interest. Funds of the permanent school fund are low and $1,000,000 or more of loans to counties or other state organizations has been allowed and it is held up until funds are at hand. These loans are made at 4 per cent. The transaction becomes necessary that the state will save the interest it is paying on the certificates and get a higher rata by redeeming the money to the consumers.

By a vote of 71 to 44 the house passed the university emergency bill appropriating $256,000 to cover the deficit in the university fund and to carry out the contracts for constructing new buildings.

Proposes Electreculen.

Electrocution instead of hanging is proposed as an capital punishment by Representative Rufus P. Morton in a bill presented to the house. The board of control is directed to provide a permanent death chamber in the state prison where all executions must be conducted.

Representative Fred L. Palmer of Minneapolis introduced a bill raising the pay of state capitol guides, doorkeeper and mail carrier to $80 a month. Their salaries were fixed five years ago at $60 a month.

NEGRO WAS LYNCHED.

But His Victim, a Deputy Sheriff, Will Likely Recover.

Opelousas, Louisiana. — Ovel Boutan, a negro, who shot and killed Deputy Sheriff Edgar Lefleur of Evangeline Parish was lynched at Ville Platte. The negro was taken from the jail and hanged to a tree. Officer Lefleur, who was shot while attempting to arrest the negro on a charge of discharging fire arms, will recover.

REDMOND IS RE-ELECTED.

Home Rule Leader Again Chosen President of Irish League.

Dublin, Ireland.—John E. Redmond and his minority received re-elected president of the United Irish league. The league adopted resolutions reaffirming its position that no settlement of the Irish question would be acceptable which did not confer the right for a full self government through an Irish parliament with an executive responsible to such a parliament.

WINONA SCOTS CELEBRATE.

Anniversary of Bobby Burns Remembered by His Countrymen.

Winona.—Winona sent a delegation of curlers and others to the big Burns' festival at Gainsville, at which a program and ball were the features. Some of the said Scots of Winona carried out a program here at the Wesley church, at which Mr. Burt was the speaker. A special Burns program was presented at the Winona Normal School.

GUESTS FLEE IN NIGHT CLOTHES

Hotel Hart at St. Paul Has Midnight Fire.

St. Paul. — By jumping from windows to the roof of an adjoining building, fifteen women and ten men, guests at the Hart hotel, escaped with their lives, when fire of a suspicious origin threatened to destroy the three-story brick building and was finally extinguished with an estimated damage of about one thousand five hundred dollars.

ECZEMA GONE, BOILS CURED

"My son was about three weeks old when I noticed a breaking out on his cheeks, from which a watery substance oozed. A short time after, his arms, shoulders and breast broke out also, and in a few days became a solid scab. I became alarmed, and called our family physician, who at once announced the disease eczema. The little fellow was under his treatment for about three months. By the end of that time, he seemed no better. I became discouraged, and as I had had the advertisements of Cuticura Remedies and testimonials of a great many people who had used them with unmistakable success, I dropped the doctor's treatment, and commenced the use of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and in a few days noticed a decided change. The eruption on his cheeks was almost healed, and his shoulders, arms and breast were decidedly better. When he was about seven months old all trace of the eczema was gone.

"During his teething period, his head and face were broken out in boils which I cured with Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Surely he must have been a great sufferer during the time of teething and from the time I dropped the doctor's treatment, I used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, nothing else, and when two years old he was the picture of health. His complexion was soft and beautiful, and his head a mass of silky curls. I had been afraid that he would never be well, and I feel that I owe a great deal to the Cuticura Remedies." SOLD OUT THE FARMERS.

A test vote was taken in the state senate last week on reapportionment and the proposition was defeated by a vote of 39 to 22. Our senator Hanson stood by his word and voted Yes, although it would legislate him out of office. All honor to him. But that dirty skunk from Polk county, who voted NO had ought to be ashamed to ever again show his mouly face in northern Minnesota. After the aggressive fight that has been made by all the counties in the northern part of the state during the past year to get up a sentiment strong enough to get a reapportionment bill passed, to give the northern part of the state fair representation in that legislature, then to hear that a senator from Polk county had voted against it, would make one think of a bucket of tar and a pillow of feathers, or a well greased rope as the most suitable articles to be used at his reception, when he again shows up in Polk county. By the way this same Sunestad is asking the farmers of Polk county to contribute money to help him pay the expenses of his election contest with Senator Stephens, but we think they had better raise that fund big enough to hire a gang of St Paul "thugs" to ride him out of that legislature on a rail and dump him into the Mississippi river, at a point where the St Paul sewers enter it, and then take a long pole and make his head under the water a couple of times. That's the way to honor a man from northern Minnesota that votes against reapportionment.

A county option bill was introduced last week by representative Hines of Mora, and the fight is now on.

It would seem to sensible people that Oklee, Lambert and Brad ought to get together and agree, so as to have the village and post office the same. As it is now Lambert post Office and Oklee station, it leads to confusion which is enough to stunt the growth of the town.

Hon. Halvor Steenerson will get a curative act through congress for the benefit of homesteaders who took land on the eleven towns in good faith for a home, that forfited their rights to take land here by making previous homestead entries. It is no easy job to do this and you settlers whose homes are at stake are fortunate to have a man behind the gun that has the ability of Steenerson.

With this issue THE SUBEAM takes its place with the other legal papers of Pennington county and will always be found in the front ranks worning for the best interests of our home county. We have for some time been in about the same position of the little boy whose ma cut the bias on his panties the wrong way. He said: "I can never tell by looking at my pants whether I was going to school, or returning home." That is about the way we felt until we heard from his honor, the supreme court. Our patent printed part have neglected to change ears as ordered but mabe they will get to it next week.

Representative O'Neil has got his law passed legalizing the levy of special taxes in Pennington county. This is necessary as we must have money to run a county and the tax payers are the boys to dig it up.

Editor Quist is enjoying him self visiting friends in Wisconsin with the fit fess he is making transcribelog records in the register of deeds office, while the poor Pennington county farmer is being butted arround the barn by a calf that he is learning to drink to raise the money to pay his special taxes.

Senator Geo. P. Wilson has introduced bills making it necessary to secure marriage licenses five days before the ceremony is to be be performed unless the time is shortened by a judge in case where circumstances justify and raising the legal age of males from 18 to 21 years, and of females from 15 to 18 years That's right; this marriage business needs straightening out. There should be a little more of a rigamarole to go through before the ceremony, and a trifle more cement used in the contract mixture when it is applied.--Crookston Times.

AS TO "SLEEPY JOHN."

We desire to say to the Editor of the Eleven Towns, who is doing considerable worrying about our methods of doing business, as regards to Pennington and Red Lake Counties, that we was in active business in northern Minnesota for a number of years while he was hoboing it in Pennsylvania, and when we came to Northern Minnesota, our brother did not have to pay our fare or treat us to a chew of T. Tobacco on our arrival. So far as the danger of getting title to property mixed up we do not think John need to worry as he is not likely to get the title to any of his property mixed.

WILL BE A GOOD LAW

A bill has been introduced in the legislature providing for complete publication of personal property tax lists. there is no matter that there is more reason for giving publicity to thsa the personal property tax lists, yet legislators in the past seem to have assumed that the question of who paid the taxes did not concern the public. The gazette believes that provision should be made for complete publication of personal tax lists, and that opinion is formed not because publication will mean a few shekles for the printer but because publicity more than any other force will secure equalization of personal property taxation. A few papers have published lists, as the Gazette has been doing for the past three weeks, at their own expense. However, this is simply chance publicity and a large majority of the publishers in the state feel that they cannot afford to go to the expense of preparing and publishing lists, for they make a newspaper feature that always means a substantial expense item with no returns.--Red Lake Falls Gazette.

Musicians and Sneezing.

Nobody can dispute the sincerity of the players in a big orchestra like the Philharmonic or the New York Symphony. Most of the time they take their work seriously, but sometimes the men break loose and play tricks on one another as though they were youngsters in school. Of course the audience knows nothing of these things; they're usually perpetrated in rehearsals.

The red pepper trick is the commonest. The jokers scatter it where the bassoon and trombone players are likely to suck it up. The result is chokes and sneezes. Sometimes the epidemic reaches even into the strings, but of course the players on the wind instrument get it worst.

As a matter of fact, the jokers are playing with fire. "A confirmed sneezer can't get a job in a good orchestra, no matter how good a performer he may be," said a consistent concert goer. "Think of the effect of a rousing sneeze on a pianissimo! Why, it would spoil a whole concert, one sneeze would. A conductor has to guard against a sneeze as he does against lockjaw."—New York Sun.

Twain's Most Quoted Witticism.

Of all the witty things said or written by Mark Twain no phrase has been quoted oftener than his reply to an alarmist report, "Rumor of my death greatly exaggerated." I think the history of this bonmot, says a correspondent, may interest. Mark Twain was on a visit to London some years ago and had been secured as the chief guest of a dinner to be given by a literary club. On the morning of the day when the dinner was to take place the secretary was shocked to hear a rumor that Mark Twain had died suddenly. At his wife' end, he sought to verify it by a diplomatic note to Mrs. Clemens, in which he mentioned the rumor. Mark Twain got hold of the note and telegraphed the now famous reply, "Rumor of my death greatly exaggerated."

Beauty and the Beast.

A well known churchman was visiting New York, accompanied by his wife, who is as beautiful as her character is homely. They were walking down Broadway one afternoon, and the pair attracted much attention. One of two young "sports," evidently thinking to attract the favorable attention of the churchman's wife, in a audible tone remarked that it was another case of "the beauty and the beast." Quick as a wink the husband turned and, as he swung his right to the sport-e's jaw, scoring a knockout, said, "I am a man of peace, but I never allow any one to call my wife a beast."

Solitude.

Solitude is dangerous to reason without being favorable to virtue. Pictures of some sort are necessary to the intellectual as to the corporeal health, and those who resist gayety will be likely for the most part to fall a sacrifice to appetite, for the solicitations of sense are always at hand, and a drum to a vacant and solitary person is a speedy and seductive relief. Remember that the solitary person is certainly luxurious, probably superstitious and possibly mad. Fasting stomaches for want of employment and is extinguished, like a candle in foul air.—Johnson.

Rastus and His Razzer.

"You are charged with carrying a razzer," said the magistrate. "What have you to say?"

"But bit's a safety razzer," pleaded Rastus.

A Fair Proposition.

"I shall cure you," the doctor replied, "if you only will be patient and give me time."

The Race With the Ram.

In Morocco the strange season of the Mohammedan new year, beginning March 9, is generally called "Aid-el-Kebeer," the ram feast. The people of Morocco pay more elaborate attention to the feast of sacrifice than any other Moslems. In every town a supreme offering of a ram or he goat takes place in the door of the principal mosque. Immediately after it is struck by the official imam in presence of the multitude it is flung on the shoulders of a stalwart Moor, who, exerting his utmost strength, runs like a deer through the narrow streets, pursued by a rabble. The poor animal is pelted with stones by boys and is jeered at with execrations from every house, as it is reputed to be carrying the sins of the people. The man who flung with his burden till he reaches the door of the cadi's palace. If the animal is still breathing the feast is excellent, for good luck is to be expected all through the year. But if the ram is dead all sorts of evil prognostications are muttered.

He Started the Trouble.

Mrs. Johnson had begun to learn French and was gleefully informing her husband of the rapid progress she was making in her studies.

"I'm afraid," remarked Johnson, "that you'll soon grow tired. I've known people take a foreign tongue, expecting to know all about it in a few weeks, but before they have mastered even the rudiments their enthusiasm has evaporated and they have given up the task as hopeless."

"Oh, that's not the case with me," declared Mrs. Johnson confidently. "I am getting on splendidly, and Professor Dubois says I shall soon begin to think in French."

"Well," the husband murmured, "I won't suppose any further objection, and I shall be glad when you are able to think in French. It will be something you have been unable to do in any other language."

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Applications to make final proof written free at this office.

Superintendent of schools E. A. Mestad visited our school on Monday afternoon.

The Star Route mail carriers earned their salary yesterday plowing their way through the snow drifts.

Walter McAudress drove down to Oklee Monday with a load of wheat, to try the new market on the Soo line.

We had another heavy fall of snow on Wednesday, which will make our snow about two feet deep, fully equal to what it was three years ago.

The Deer Parkers are trying to get a telephone line to connect with High Landing. We would like some stock in that line and be glad to hook onto it.

The probate judges of Minnesota who have been in session in St. Paul, will ask the legislature to make the term of office of a judge of probate six instead of two years.

P. C. Wold moved his daughter Mrs. Hermenson and two small children down from Riner last Saturday and they will make their home with him for the present.

We have a large stock of winter foot ware which we are now selling at cost prices. Get our prices on rubbers and socks before you buy. Singer's at Kratka.

We are waiting for some of the bridge builders to start an effort to get a bridge across Red Lake river in the eastern part of the county. Come on you wise men from the east! Come on! Don't act like a dog in the manger, that won't eat the hay himself nor let the cow have it.

If people living along the mail routes would hitch up their team and help to break out the roads after one of the big snow storms it would be highly appreciated by the mail carriers and their weary horses. Some of the farm horses would no doubt enjoy the exercise. Hitch up and take a drive and meet your neighbors.

Lattimore claims that our figures were not correct as to the bills allowed for new books for Pennington county. Our figures was taken from the official figures as published, but it was to hard a problem for John, so here is an easier one. "If a jug and a half cost a dollar and a half how much will three jugs cost?"

We can't see what is the use kicking about the appointed officials of Penningtou county. We believe that all of them are well enough qualified for the position that they have been appointed to fill so let them alone until the next election then put in a kick to change them that do not suit you and make you will fire them out, and if make you won't.

We would advise the Eleven Towns target his type setters ready to set up "bucking" bridge communications pretty soon as we are only waiting for some one else to start to get a bridge across Red Lake river anywhere in the east end of this county and we will help them, but we are not going to sit down here like a drone and let that legislature sjurn without asking them for the money for one bridge in east ern Pennington county.

There is no use to kick about the levy of a special tax in this county for we have got to have money to run the county with. We honestly opposed division for this very reason, but you though we were talking through our hat and stood with open mouths to be loaded up with "hot air" shot from an automobile speaker at so much per shot. Now we are into the deal and are in favor of getting the county started right to do business. What we object to is some of the county division leaders persisting with the claim that we are rich, when we have not got a dollar to pay a county warrant with. Levy the tax, our share is ready.

Ellingson Bros. are selling winter underware and foot ware at cost.

That County Surveyor.

About the only complaint that we have heard about the Appointment of C. H. Martz for County Surveyor is from the Kennel of the Eleven Towns Office. As a matter of fact there could not have been a better selection made for this important office at this time, as Mr. Martz from his past experience with the County ditches in this County, can give much better satisfaction to the people than a new man in that position. All the trouble with John is that he got his fires turned over by the refusal of County surveyor Martz to dig a ditch to drain the yard of the Eleven Towns office, instead of the farms in that locality, and we are of the opinion that our board of county Commissioners will not listen to the howls of the "windy" or snors of "Sleepy John," in this matter but will stand by the man that is the most satisfactory to the masses of the people.

The One Dish Diet.

A food specialist said of dieting: "The simplest, easiest and most efficacious diet to bring down the weight is the one dish diet. At no meal, that is, should more than one dish be eaten.

"The dish may be what you will—Irish stew, macaroni and cheese, roast beef, vegetable soup, bacon and eggs—but no courses are to precede or follow it. You may eat as much as you choose of the dish, and yet for all that you will lose weight steadily.

"It's the variety of dishes—the oysters, soup, fish, turkey, mince pie, ice cream—it's the variety of dishes, creating an artificial appetite when the body has really had all it requires, that causes corpulence. If we confine ourselves to one dish we know when we've had enough—we don't know otherwise—and the result is that we soon drop down to the slimness natural to children, animals and temperate and healthy men and women."

Spoiled His Sport.

"How many ducks did you shoot, Pat?"
"The divil a wan."
"Weren't there any there?"

SEVEN YEARS OF MISERY

All Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Sikeston, Mo.—"For seven years I suffered everything

I was in bed for four or five days a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I cramped and had backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do my own housework, boo my garden, and when I have company I can entertain company and enjoy them. I can visit when I choose, and walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the month. I wish I could tell to every suffering woman and girl."—Mrs. DEMA BETTUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

The most successful remedy in the country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It is more widely and successfully used than any other remedy. It has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means had failed. Why don't you try it?

ENLIST AID OF CHURCHES

Powerful Weapon Brought to Bear in the Fight Against Tuberculosis.

Just how serious a problem tuberculosis is to the average church, and in just what ways pastors are called upon as to minister to those suffering from this disease, is the subject of an investigation which the national association for the study and prevention of tuberculosis is conducting in connection with its plans for tuberculosis day on April 20. Statistics are being gathered from thousands of ministers regarding this subject, and among other figures the number of deaths lost year from tuberculosis in the church congregation will be given. It is planning to place these statistics together with other educational material, in the hands of every minister in the country for his use in connection with Tuberculosis day. Millions of circulars and pamphlets on the prevention of tuberculosis will also be issued, both from the national office and from the headquarters of the 450 anti-tuberculosis associations who will cooperate in the movement.

EASY CHANGE
When Coffee is Doing Harm.

A lady writes from the land of cotton of the results of a four years' use of the food beverage—hot Postum.

"Ever since I can remember we had used coffee three times a day. It had n more or less injurious effect upon us all, and I myself suffered the old torments from indigestion and nervousness caused by it.

"I know it was that, because when I would leave it off for a few days I would feel better. But it was hard to give it up, even though I realized how harmful it was to me.

"At last I found a perfectly easy way to make the change. Four years ago I abandoned the coffee habit and began to drink Postum, and I also influenced the rest of the family to do the same. Even the children are allowed to drink it freely as they do water. And it has done us all great good.

"I no longer suffer from indigestion, and my nerves are in admirable tone since I began to use Postum. We never use the old coffee any more.

"We appreciate Postum as a delightful and healthful beverage, which not only furnishes the body with the best of nourishment as well." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A CITY WHERE PALACES ARE

By EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT BY W.N. PATTERSON

I ALWAYS has seemed that the poet John Boyle O'Reilly must have had Washington in mind when he wrote the poem which begins with the words "A city of palaces." I am more convinced than ever that Washington must have been in the poet's mind because he added the words, "No, not quite, a city where palaces are, is best." One can forget all about the beautiful government buildings in this city, and yet know it as a place "where palaces are."

The capital city has within its borders hundreds of the mansions of the rich. More and more every year it is becoming a residence city, a sort of place of rest and refuge after the storm of business life, for the retiring man of wealth. Here they build beautiful homes, and here they are more than content to stay from the early fall days until the heat of the summer drives them to the seashore and the mountains.

When a man is elected a senator of the United States and knows that he has six years' lease of official life he is almost certain either to rent or to buy outright one of the palaces of the city, or if he is morally certain that he is to have two leases of official life, the chances are that he will build a castle for himself.

Foreigners in Washington say that residential sections of that city are the most beautiful in the world. Poverty and wealth appear side by side in the capitals of the Union. In scores of the city blocks little frame structures, many of them shaky on their foundations, the homes of negroes, stand under the shadow of the marble and granite palaces of the rich, so it readily can be seen that the words of the poet, "A city where palaces are is best," fit the case perfectly.

John Hays Hammond was a classmate at Yale of President Taft. Two years ago last spring Mr. Hammond developed suddenly an ambition to be the candidate of the Republicans for the office of vice-president of the United States. It was a perfectly worthy ambition of course, for every American ought to have the right, if he has lived a square life, to feel a pulsing desire to serve his fellow men in office. Mr. Hammond was not nominated, but has been in the public eye in Washington only to a less extent than he would have been were it he instead of James S. Sherman who presides today over the deliberations of the United States senate. The city home of Mr. Hammond has a history of some interest.

Some years ago Levi P. Morton, who was vice-president of the United States under Benjamin Harrison, built a great palace-like house on a triangle of land covered by Rhode Island avenue, M and Fifteenth streets. It is said that this residence still belongs to Mr. Morton. It has been the scene of official social gatherings uninterruptedly for years. When Mr. Morton retired from the vice-presidency the residence was taken by Count Cassini, the ambassador of the czar of Russia to the United States. The Russian and his niece, the Countess Cassini, were great entertainers, and in their residence met the high representatives of all the different departments of government, the twin armed services, and the diplomats from all parts of the world.

The Morton house, under the rule of the Cassinis, was the scene of social activity season after season. Then the house passed into the possession of Elihu Root, secretary of state in Theodore Roosevelt's cabinet. The secretary and his wife are to domesticity inclined. With the exception of small affairs to which only close friends were invited, the former home of the Cassinis saw little gaiety during the occupancy of the family of the former secretary of state, although there were certain "official society" affairs which, because of his office in the government, the secretary was in duty bound to hold and to countenance.

The most interesting gathering, from the social point of view, which the old Morton house ever held was that of the invited guests who came to gather to witness the marriage of the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Root to U. Simpson Grant III. It was a simple affair, in perfect keeping with the desire of both the bride and groom, for young Grant, who is a subaltern army officer, is of a retiring disposition, and is not given at all to a desire for the social limelight. The family gave over their lease of the Morton residence to the bride and groom, and took it up anew when the lease today.

Levi P. Leiter, now dead, a Chicago multi-millionaire, built one of the most imposing residences which that city of Washington holds. It stands close to Dupont circle, a fashionable residence section, and its front and side grounds are of great extent then are usually found adjacent to a house in the city where every inch of land costs much money. The widow of Mr. Leiter still occupies the great pillared house which her husband built. Within a stone's toss of the Leiter residence is the marble Washington home of Mrs. R. M. Patterson, daughter of Joseph Medill, the great editor of the Chicago Tribune. The Patterson house was designed by Stanford White, who was killed by the degenerate Harry K. Thaw in New York city three or four years ago. The design for the Patterson house was one of the last works of the great architect.

Close to the marble Patterson residence is the home of William Boardman, his wife and daughters. The Boardmans are Cleveland people. They came here some years ago, as other rich people have done, to take up their residence and to lead the life of the capital. It is, however, rather a different life which the Boardmans lead. Miss Mabel Boardmen is the chief American spirit in the Red Cross movement. She is devoted to this work, and gives to it the major portion of her time. The Boardman house is a scene of many gatherings of people, but it can be said of them they have humanitarianism for their object.

The Boardman house is one of the few in Washington which President Taft visits in a purely informal way. He "drops in" at Boardman's for afternoon tea or for an evening call just as he would if he were not president of the United States and therefore bound by strands of the tape of etiquette. The president is greatly interested in the work of the Red Cross. He is the organization's president, as Miss Boardman is one of its highest workers and its guiding spirit.

There is one home in Washington with which there is connected a curious story. It is the Massachusetts avenue residence of Mrs. R. H. Townsend, who is known in Washington as Mrs. Scott-Townsend. She is the niece of "Tom" Scott, the Pennsylvania multi-millionaire, who died several years ago. Mrs. Townsend's only daughter, Matilde, recently has been pronounced the most beautiful of the young women of the capital city. Rumor connected the daughter "in marriage engagement possibilities" with half a dozen foreigners, all of them well within the titled circle, and one or two of them of the blood royal. The daughter showed her good sense and her rare discrimination by marrying an American.

Now, as for the story about the Townsend house, it should be said that it is of rather grewsome interest. Mrs. Townsend, some years ago looked at the elite of her present home, and decided to build. There was a small house on the grounds. The story is that a fortune teller informed Mrs. Townsend that if she built a new house and took up her residence therein she would be dead within a year. She therefore resolved to compromise. She built a magnificent new house, but in such a form that it encloses like an envelope the old house which stood on the building site.

The Association of American Architects has been occupying recently what is known as the Octagon house. It is the famous old Tayloe mansion which the Octagon house is one of the historic homes of the District of Columbia. The chances are that the spirit of patriotism will see that the structure is preserved for all time. When the British entered Washington Dolly Madison fled from the White House just before the Red Coats arrived to apply the torch. Mrs. Madison went to the Octagon house, which was the residence of the Tayloe family. Suddenly she remembered that the Stuart portrait of George Washington had been left hanging on the wall of the White House. She ran back and cut the picture from its frame and escaped with it just as the British soldiers crossed the threshold.

On Sixteenth street hill in Washington is the house known to the populace as Henderson castle. It is the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Henderson, who have lived in Washington ever since Mr. Henderson was, years ago, a Republican senator from the state of Missouri. The Henderson house has every appearance of a castle. It is of brown stone, turreted, and it stands on a commanding hill. The Henderson home is the scene of constant hospitality, and the diplomats representing foreign governments in the capital are frequently dinner guests of the "castle" host and hostess.

Larz Anderson, a relative of Nicholas Longworth, lives on Meeseehuenitz avenue in a huge house about which the "lecturer" on the big sightseeing automobile calls out interesting information to the passengers eight or ten times a day, and the latter especially is very much interested when gardener boy Smith, whose home is in Cincinnati, 1912, Ford Agents. The Boardman house is one of the few in Washington which President Taft visits in a purely informal way. He "drops in" at Boardman's for afternoon tea or for an evening call just as he would if he were not president of the United States and therefore bound by strands of the tape of etiquette. The president is greatly interested in the work of the Red Cross. He is the organization's president, as Miss Boardman is one of its highest workers and its guiding spirit.

There is one home in Washington with which there is connected a curious story. It is the Massachusetts avenue residence of Mrs. R. H. Townsend, who is known in Washington as Mrs. Scott-Townsend. She is the niece of "Tom" Scott, the Pennsylvania multi-millionaire, who died several years ago. Mrs. Townsend's only daughter, Matilde, recently has been pronounced the most beautiful of the young women of the capital city. Rumor connected the daughter "in marriage engagement possibilities" with half a dozen foreigners, all of them well within the titled circle, and one or two of them of the blood royal. The daughter showed her good sense and her rare discrimination by marrying an American.

Now, as for the story about the Townsend house, it should be said that it is of rather grewsome interest. Mrs. Townsend, some years ago looked at the old Tayloe mansion which the Octagon house is one of the historic homes of the District of Columbia. The chances are that the spirit of patriotism will see that the structure is preserved for all time. When the British entered Washington Dolly Madison fled from the White House just before the Red Coats arrived to apply the torch. Mrs. Madison went to the Octagon house, which was the residence of the Tayloe family. Suddenly she remembered that the Stuart portrait of George Washington had been left hanging on the wall of the White House. She ran back and cut the picture from its frame and escaped with it just as the British soldiers crossed the threshold.

On Sixteenth street hill in Washington is the house known to the populace as Henderson castle. It is the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Henderson, who have lived in Washington ever since Mr. Henderson was, years ago, a Republican senator from the state of Missouri. The Henderson house has every appearance of a castle. It is of brown stone, turreted, and it stands on a commanding hill. The Henderson home is the scene of constant hospitality, and the diplomats representing foreign governments in the capital are frequently dinner guests of the "castle" host and hostess.

Her Tardy Coming

By STACY E. BAKER

Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press

Cornelia Dean suddenly received a letter from John Oliver answering pertinent questions that had been asked of him twenty years before.

Cornelia, still a spinster—and a most comely one—was surprised. The yellowed pages, the faded ink, and the late line told her that the letter had been written on the day following her imperative demands, while the postoffice stamp showed that the letter had been mailed from Boston but one day before.

Romance had long been dead in the heart of Cornelia Dean. She had loved John Oliver nobly and faithfully, and when he had passed out of her life as a lover, none other had come in. A flush on her pretty cheeks, the little lady carefully opened the letter, and read, for the fifth time, its contents.

"My dearest: I have waited several days—and impatiently—for the letter you wanted me to read and answer before coming for your answer to my proposal—and now it is here.

"I know, dear, that I am practically a stranger to you and the good people of Sneedville, but in Boston, where, as you know, my father owns a large dry goods store, I am well known. My reputation in my own town will stand the test of investigation.

"Now, to answer your questions.

"1. I do not touch liquor. Have never used intoxicants in my life.

"2. No; if you consent to marry me we cannot live in Sneedville, but must make Boston our home, where I will eventually go into business with my father.

"3. I will give up smoking, if you wish me to.

"4. You know that I will always love you. There is no need to ask this. Ask, rather, your own heart.

"Here, to great, lonely Boston, I am writing a note bidding me to come to you. You will realize how lonesome I am, and you will answer at once. I am sure of this.

"Always yours,

"JOHN OLIVER."

The ancient screed fell to the lap of the little lady, and tears glistened in her eyes as her thoughts wandered away in reminiscent reverie. John Oliver! She could see him now, a stalwart, manly youth. He came to woo her, the most popular girl in Sneedville. She remembered herself as she looked then—a mere wisp of a girl, to be sure, but with that winsome prettiness that allowed her to pick and choose from the ranks of the best and most popular men in the city.

Blue eyes, and a wonderful head of wavy brown hair that was at once the envy and delight of her girl chums, had been among the potent gifts given her by the goddess of beauty, and she had most careful taste in dress. All these, and countless other feminine attractions, had won to her the young Bostonian who was spending his summer vacation in Sneedville.

He had proposed, but before she would answer him she had sent him away until she could compile a list of questions. These he was to answer by mail. She did not wish him to plead his own cause.

Cornelia Dean sat for the greater part of an hour dreaming. When she was again mistress of her thoughts, a great resolve had been made within her. Cornelia had decided to go to Boston! She had not been out of town since the death of her parents, some ten years before.

"But—what shall I wear?" asked Cornelia, speaking, as was her wont, to herself. "Surely if—if I find him, I must look as nearly as possible like the girl he knew. Nothing that I have now will do. I must be more—more up-to-date; more like the girls of today. I am not so—so old, anyway, even if I do dress plainly. I haven't a gray hair in my head."

At last the day of her departure came, and the little cottage was safely locked, the key hidden in a plant rack on the porch, and the more than pretty little lady on her way to the station.

The trip was a frightful one to the conophiticated Cornelia, and a sigh of relief came to her lips when she found herself safely arrived. Boston was a larger city than she had imagined. She began to realise the hopelessness of her quest.

The address of his—John's—old home was burned indelibly on her brain. She called there after depositing her little baggage at a modest hotel. She found herself in front of a roofless domicile, the clapboards of which were being rapidly stripped from the scantlings. Consternation she stood an idle second watching the workers reduce the building.

"Is there anything I can do for you?"

Unconsciously she had entered the gate shutting the lot of the building from the street. A man in the garb of a carpenter stood before her.

"I—I" Cornelia hesitated. "I was hunting for the residence of the Olivers. They used to live here, I believe?"

"Moved," elucidated the man briefly. "This is the site o' a skyscraper that the Olivers are having erected. This piot is too valuable for a residence to occupy. It's right in the heart of things, as you might say."

"But can you tell me where the—where John Oliver lives?"

"With his parents, I believe; hint as to that, I don't know. I don't even know where they have moved to. Young Mr. Oliver is here almost every day to see how the work progresses. Can I give him some message?"

"Tell him that Cornelia Dean was here."

"Cornelia Dean," repeated the man. "O—then you're the lady to whom the letter went!"

"What—what letter?" asked the puzzled Cornelia.

"One of my men found an old letter, sealed and addressed to you, under the tin roof of this house. Some one, while inspecting the timber, probably, after the shingles were off, had dropped it, and the tin fitters covered it up without noticing. I mailed it."

"O," gasped Cornelia.

"There comes Mr. John Oliver now." The carpenter failed to notice the woman's embarrassment. A well-built man of about forty years of age approached. As he came nearer a pasted look crept into his eyes, and then suddenly his pace quickened and he advanced, both hands outstretched.

"You!" cried John Oliver, the trembling fingers of the woman pressed closed in his; and there, before the wondering eyes of the men, he kissed her. "I have waited centuries for you," he said.

Philippine Forests.

After several years' investigation of the forests of the Philippine islands, Dr. H. N. Whitford is enabled to make some statements concerning their extent and richness which will be likely to surprise many readers. He says, for instance, that the virgin forest area of the islands, covering 25,000,000 acres, contains 200,000,000,000 board feet of lumber, and he contrasts this with the 400,000,000,000 feet of timber growing on the 200,000,000 acres contained in the forest reserves of the United States. In other words, the Philippine forests are, acre for acre, four times as rich as those of this country. Other authorities agree with Dr. Whitford in the opinion that when the world's eyes are opened to the value of the tropical forests a great asset will have been added to the common wealth of mankind.

A Gift Book.

"Yes, do you send me a book . . . not a bargain book bought from a haberdasher, but a beautiful book, a book to caress—peculiar, distinctive, individual; a book that hath fret caught your eye and then pleased your fancy written by an author with a tender vein, all right out of his heart. We will read it together in the gloaming, and when the gathering dusk doth blur the page, and sit with hearts too full for speech and think it over."—Dorothy Wordsworth in Coleridge.

Doctors Said He Would Die

A Friend's Advice Saves Life

"I wish to speak of the wonderful cure that I have received from your noted Swamp-Root, the great kidney and bladder cure. Last summer I was taken with severe pains in my back and sides. I could not breathe without difficulty and was nearly well with the desire to urinate. Was compelled to do so every ten minutes with the passage of quite blood with the urine. I tried all the different doctors from far and near, but they said it was no use to doctor as I would die anyway. I was at the end of my rope and was so miserable with pain and the thought that I must die that words cannot tell how I felt. One day a friend told me of the wonderful help she had received from Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. She gave me one of your pamphlets which I read and determined to try Swamp-Root. After taking half a bottle I felt better. Have now taken ten bottles and as well as I ever was, thanks to Swamp-Root. I wish to tell all suffering people that have kidney, liver or bladder trouble, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is the best medicine on the market.

All persons doubting this statement can write to me and I will answer them directly.

Stops Pain in the Bladder, Kidneys and Back.

Couldn't it be nice within a week or so to begin to say goodbye forever to the scalding, disabling, straining, or too frequent passage of urine; the forehead and the back-of-the-head aches; the stitches and pains in the back; the growing muscle weakness; spots before the eyes; yellow skin; sluggish bowels; swollen eyelids or ankles; leg cramps; unnatural short breath; sleeplessness and the despondency?

I have a recipe for these troubles that you can depend on, and if you want to make a QUICK RECOVERY, you ought to write and get a copy of it. Many a doctor, would charge you $5.00 just for writing this prescription, but I have it and will be glad to send it to you entirely free. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. R. Robinson, K-88 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send it by return mail in a plain envelope. As you will see when you get it, this recipe contains only pure, harmless remedies, but it has great healing and pain-conquering power.

It will quickly show its power once you use it, so I think you had better see what it is without delay. I will send you a copy free—you can use it and cure yourself at home.

A Corner in Candles.

As an example of trusts and monopolies prevalent even in that early day it may be mentioned that in 1760 one Benjamin Crabb obtained the exclusive right to make sperm candles in Massachusetts for 14 years.

A year later, however, a factory was started in Providence, R. I., and within the decade there were eight factories in New England and one in Philadelphia. Their output greatly reduced the price of candles, which not long before sold for five shillings a pound. In those days $1.25 was worth fairly three times as much as it is now.

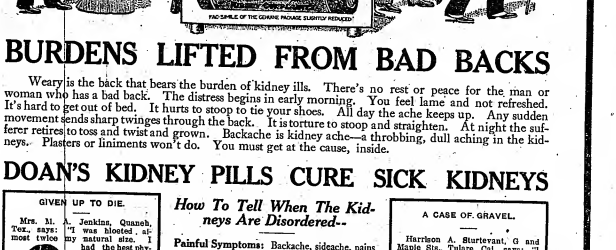
When You Think



Of the pain which many women experience with every month it makes the gentleness and kindness always associated with womanhood seem to be almost a miracle. While in general no woman rebels against what she regards as a natural necessity there is no woman who would not gladly be free from this recurring period of pain.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well, and gives them freedom from pain. It establishes regularity, subdues inflammation, heals ulceration and cures female weakness.

Sick women are invited to consult us by letter, free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Write without fear and without fee to World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

If you want a book that tells all about women's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 31 one-cent stamps to pay cost of wrapping and mailing only, and we will send you a free copy of Dr. Pierce's great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser — revised, up-to-date edition, in handsome French cloth binding.

BURDENS LIFTED FROM BAD BACKS

Weary is the back that bears the burden of kidney ills. There's no rest or peace for the man or woman who has a bad back. The distress begins in early morning. You feel lame and not refreshed. It's hard to get out of bed. It hurts to stoop to tie your shoes. All day the ache keeps up. Any sudden movement sends sharp twinges through the back. It is torture to stoop and straighten. At night the sufferer retires to toss and twist and grown. Backache is kidney ache—a throbbing, dull aching in the kidneys. Plasters or liniments won't do. You must get at the cause, inside.

GIVEN UP TO DIE.

Mrs. M. A. Jenkins, Quaneh, Tex., says: "I was bloated almost twice my natural size, had the best physicians, but they failed to help me. For five weeks I was as helpless as a baby. My back throbbed and the kidney secretions were in terrible condition. The doctors held out no hope and I was resigned to my fate. At this critical time, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and soon was cured."

How To Tell When The Kidneys Are Disordered--

Painful Symptoms: Backache, sideache, pains when stooping or lifting, sudden sharp twinges, rheumatic pains, neuralgia, painful, scanty or too frequent urination, dizzy spells, dropsy.

Urinary Symptoms: Discolored or cloudy urine. Urine that contains sediment. Urine that stains the linen. Painful passages. Blood or shreds in the urine. Let a bottle of the morning urine stand for 24 hours. If it shows a cloudy or fleecy settling, or a layer of fine grains, like brick dust, the kidneys are probably disordered.

A CASE OF GRAVEL.

Harrison A. Sturtevant, G and Maple Sts., Tulare, Cal., says: "I was in bad shape with kidney trouble. Intense frequent urination compelled me to arise at night, my bladder became inflamed and I suffered severe pain. The Battleship Delaware and Her Great Cruise

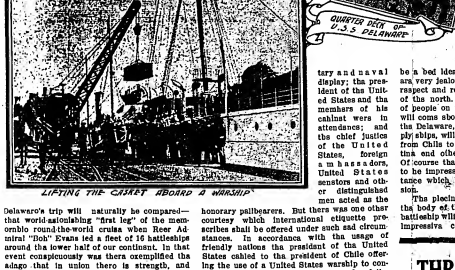
THE battleship Delaware, our newest, largest and finest sea warrior, is now making preparations for a most notable cruise. According to present plans she will sail on this jaunt early this month, and the cruise will consume the best part of the spring. The itinerary—prepared all of a sudden, for this cruise was not even contemplated a few weeks ago—calls for a voyage around the continent of South America, or, at least around the major portion of that triangular continent and it bids fair to be the most notable undertaking assigned to any single battleship since the famous old battleship Oregon made the long trip around South America (over much the same route) at the time of the Spanish-American war.

The cruise of the Delaware takes on importance from the fact that it is the first stunt of the kind attempted by one of our new battleships of the Dreadnought class—floating fortresses so much larger and heavier and more formidably armed than any of our old-time battleships that they might be referred to as the "big brothers" of these ships that were so awe inspiring a few years ago. Now, of course, these now "all-big-gun" ships are as yet something of an experiment in our navy in so far as actual service goes and consequently naval officials and shipbuilding experts will await with no little concern the outcome of this prolonged "shaking down" cruise.

Another circumstance that makes this coming cruise stand out as a notable achievement is that the Delaware is to take her long "hike" absolutely unattended. As all readers of the newspapers must have noted, it has not been the practise of our naval authorities of late years to assign single battleships to long cruises. They usually go in fleets, or in divisions of four ships, or at least in pairs. Why, it will be remembered that when President Taft made his recent trip to Panama a second warship was sent along with the one that carried the presidential party, not because there was any real need for it, but simply to have a companion ship at hand to render assistance in the event that the first craft met with a mishap of any kind, great or small.



And take that other naval cruise around South America, with which the Delaware's new cruise will naturally be compared—that world-astonishing "first leg" of the memorable round-the-world cruise when Rear Admiral "Bob" Evans led a fleet of 16 battleships around the lower half of our continent. In that event conspicuously was there exemplified the adage that in union there is strength, and aside from the self-confidence inspired by the co-ordinate action of a whole fleet of battleships there was the further assurance against the unexpected offered by the presence with the fleet of a repair ship, supply ships and naval colliers. The Delaware, on the other hand, must traverse the same sea track figuratively as well as literally "on her own bottom," as the seafaring men say.

However, without underestimating the prestige that will come to the Delaware through all these unusual attributes of her present trip, it must be admitted that the greatest significance of all attaches to this 1911 cruise because of the mission of the Delaware. The fleet of battleships that visited South American ports a couple of years ago went solely on the initiative of President Roosevelt as a practise cruise and a sort of object lesson to other nations, but the Delaware goes on a specific mission of condolence, out of respect to the memory of an international statesman and in compliment to a friendly nation. She is to convey from our shores to their native land the body of Senor Don Anibel Cruz, the late minister of the republic of Chile to the United States.

When a foreign diplomat dies at his post of duty in an allied capital it is customary for the officials of the government to which he had been accredited as envoy and for his fellow diplomats to accord him every possible honor in death. Elaborate ceremonials are prescribed, not merely as a tribute to the statesman whose work in behalf of international good feeling has been interrupted by death, but also as a compliment to the country and the government whose accredited agent he was. All the unwritten laws were carefully observed in the case of the late Chilean minister. His funeral at Washington was made the occasion of an elaborate military and naval display; the president of the United States and the members of the cabinet were in attendance; and the chief justice of the United States, foreign ambassadors, United States senators and other distinguished men acted as the honorary pallbearers. But there was one other courtesy which international etiquette prescribes shall be offered under such and circumstances. In accordance with the usage of friendly nations the president of the United States cabled to the president of Chile offering the use of a United States warship to convey on his last journey home the body of the deceased diplomatist. The offer was accepted and the Delaware has been assigned to act as a funeral barge on this voyage of thousands of miles to Valparaiso and return. In accordance, however, with the wishes of the Cruz family the battleship did not start on her journey immediately after the funeral, but the trip was deferred until this month, the flag-draped casket reposing in the meantime in a receiving vault in a cemetery at Washington.

The United States government has been called upon twice before, within a comparatively few years, to convey home the bodies of eminent Pan-American statesmen who have died in this country. Soma years ago the body of an ambassador of Mexico was thus conveyed home in state and only a year ago similar honors were paid to the remains of the late Senor Nebuco, who was for years the ambassador of Brazil at our seat of government. On neither occasion, however, was there employed for the service so imposing a vessel as the Delaware.

That the officials and the public of Chile will appreciate the significance of Uncle Sam's sending his largest and finest warship in the expectation of the American authorities and there is plain intent to thus create an especially favorable impression—possibly the more so because Chile is one of those South American countries with which the United States has at times in the past been on the verge of ill feeling, and it is the desire of our statesmen to allay any lingering suspicions and cement friendship in this quarter. The Delaware was not, of course, a member of the round-the-world squadron that visited Chilean ports several years ago so that not only will she be a novelty to eyes beyond the Andes but she will afford the people of Chile their first opportunity to inspect an example of the world's latest ideas in heavy battleship building.

LIFTING THE CASKET ABOARD A WARSHIP

Incidentally, Uncle Sam's impressive method of paying tribute to a worker for Pan-American unity will be brought to the attention of the people of other South American republics and this will not be lost on the Latin-Americans of the north. This focusing of the attention of people on the east coast of South America will come about through the circumstance that the Delaware, being unattended by coal supply ships, will find it necessary en route to and from Chile to put in at ports in Brazil, Argentina and other places for fuel, supplies, etc. Of course the natives at each port cannot fail to be impressed by the vessel and the importance which Uncle Sam attaches to her mission.

The placing of the metal casket containing the body of the deceased diplomat aboard the battleship will be made the occasion of another impressive ceremonial. The heavy-draught battleship cannot ascend the comparatively shallow Potomac river to Washington to receive the body, and so the president's yacht Mayflower will be used to convey the casket from the capital to Hampton roads, Va., where the transfer will be made to the big vessel. When the casket is conveyed from the receiving vault to the Mayflower there will be another military and naval pageant and guns will boom in salute and high officials of the government will stand with uncovered heads while the casket is swung by means of the long arm of a crane from the caisson used as a hearse to the deck of the vessel. A high official of the state department will accompany the body to Hampton Roads as a representative of our government and, in all probability, one or more Chilean diplomats will go with the body on the battleship all the way to Chile.

Captain Goya, who will command the Delaware on this important cruise, is one of the most capable officers in the United States navy. He was for years the commandant of midshipmen at the United States naval academy and is thus known personally to almost every one of the younger officers of our sea service. The Delaware, of which he is in command, is 510 feet in length, 85 feet breadth and displaces 20,000 tons of water, which means that she is fully one-fourth larger or heavier then any other vessel now in commission in our navy except her sister ship, the North Dakota. She is also the speediest of all our battleships built or building, being capable of a gait of 24 or 25 miles per hour, which is dictinctly "going some" for so ponderous a craft, and which will enable her to make good time on her round trip beyond Cape Horn if necessity should arise.

The Delaware is the heaviest armed of all our "peacemakers," excepting of course her twin sister, the North Dakota. She carries ten of the big 12-inch guns, four of which were a few years ago considered ample for any battleship, and in addition she has ranged on her sides 14 of the tremendously effective 5-inch guns, to say nothing of a whole array of smaller navel "shooting irons." Some of these latter—the three-pounders, for instance, will be the only ones used on the present cruise and then merely for firing salutes. The Delaware has a ship's company of record-breaking size—65 officers and nearly 900 men.

THREE ORDERS OF SOCIETY IN NAPLES

There are three distinct classes in Neapolitan society—it would be bettar to call them castes—the nobility and aristocracy, the "gabentunnisi" or middle classes, and the "lazzaroni" or the "submerged multitude."

The first class it is unnecessary to describe, the other classes live side by side, and are yet distinct and hostile. They differ in religious and political convictions, in morals, in social customs, in food and clothing.

The gabentunnisi include the shopkeepers, the small manufacturers, tradesmen, bookkeepers, persons engaged in clerical occupations, and practically all who are compelled to earn their living, but who are not engaged in manual labor.

They are generally liberal and often radical in politics. The men express an open indifference and often contampt for the church, but require their wives and daughters to observe all the conventional religious duties, and they themselves never fail to reach for a crucifix or call for a priest whenever they imagine their own lives to be in dangar.

They are fond of dress and display and judge their taste as far as their means will permit, but their wives and daughters are kept in seclusion and are never allowed to leave the house without duennas to protect them.

The lazzaroni regard with contempt as well as aversion the families of the gabentunnisi, who are not wealthy and have to struggle to keep up appearances. The lazzaroni are strongly attached to the nobility, have often given practical evidances of loyalty and on several occasions have been of supreme service to the crown.

They live cheaply in the open air, with a room in the basement or the attic of some old tenement, to which they can retreat for shalter in cass of storm, and when the hour comes for sleep.

They dalight in garlic, shall fish, raw vegetables and fruit. The women pay little attention to their dress and always go bareheaded. There are probably not a dozen hats or bonnats to the thousend of the women population of the lazzaroni.

The lazzaroni are so accustomed to fetid odors, the misary, the loathsome sights in the "Pendaci," as the slums are called, that it is difficult for them to be happy under any other circumstances. They are born to it, they live in it and they die in it, and yet there are grades of misery, just as there are grades of prosperity.

There are lazzaroni who are rich and comfortable, compared with others who may occupy the adjoining attic, but it is said by those who have studied this class that they are never reduced to a condition which is beyond their philosophy to endure; that they will always jest about their bunger and laugh about their pains.

Sentimentalists who have made a study of them insist that tha poorar and more loathsoma the family the stronger the love and attachment. As misfortune comes upon them they seem to cling more closely together, parents to children, children to parents and brothers to sisters, and not one is so low or so destitute as to be unable now and than to do an act of charity or express compassion to neighbors who are even more badly off than themselves.

BOY SCOUT BRIGADE

Movement Is Becoming Widely Popular in This Country.

Starting in England, There Are Already Over 200,000 Lads Enrolled in America—Appeals Strongly to the Boys.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The Playgrounds Association of America has joined in support of the Boy Scout movement as started in England by Gen. Baden-Powell and fostered here by Ernest Thompson Seton. There are already about 200,000 lads enrolled in the Boy Scouts of America in 45 states, though the organization is only a few months old. Those who have been watching the movement here say that nothing has ever seamed so appeal so strongly to the boys of America.

Ten years ago Mr. Seton organized the Woodcraft Indians. About 100,000 boys became members, but soon after Gen. Baden-Powell's organization, begun only two years ago, attained such quick and wide popularity in England Mr. Seton and those working with him adopted its best features and merged the Woodcraft Indians into the Boy Scouts.

Every American boy a hundred years ago, he points out, lived either on a farm or in such close touch with farm life that he reaped its benafits. He had all the practical knowledge that comes from country surroundings; that is, he could ride, shoot, run, swim; he was handy with tools; he knew the woods; he was physically strong, self-reliant, resourceful, well developed in body and brain. In addition, his moral training was got at home, and it was good. He was respectful and obedient to his aldera, and, as Mr. Seton thinks constituted altogether the best material of which a nation could he made.

"We have lived," says Mr. Seton, "to see an unfortunate change. Partly through the growth of immense cities, with the consequent specialization of industry, each individual has been required to do one small specialty and shut his eyes to everything else, with the resultant perpetual narrowing of the mental horizon. "Partly through the decay of small farmieg which would have offset this condition, each mixed farm was a college of handicraft. And partly through the stereotyped forms of religion losing their hold, we see a very different type of youth in the country today.

The new boy scout is a tenderfoot. He is usually about 12 years old. In time he will become a second-class scout, the next higher grade, and finally a first-class scout. To become a graduata in this out-door school a boy must do these things:

1. Swim fifty yards or run a mile in 8 minutes.

2. Must have 50 cents at least in the savings bank.

3. Signaling. Send and receive a message either in semaphore or Morse, sixteen letters a minute.

4. Go on foot, or row a boat, alone or in a pair seven miles away and return again; or if conveyed by any vehicle or animal, or in a division of fifteen miles and back, and write a short report on it. He is preferable that he should have two days.

5. Describe or show the proper means for saving life in case of two of the following accidents (allotted by the examiners): Fire, drowning, runaway carriage, sewer gas, ice breaking, or bandage an injured patient, or revive apparently drowned.

6. Cook satisfactorily two out of the following dishes, as may be directed: Parridge, bacon, hunter's stew; or skin and cook a rabbit, or pluck and cook a bird. Also make a "damper" of a half pound of flour, or a "twist" baked on a thick stick.

7. Read a map correctly and draw an intelligent rough sketch map. Point out a compass direction without the help of a compass.

8. Use an ax for felling or trimming light timber; or as an alternative produce an sketch of carpentry or joinery or metal work, made by himself satisfactorily.

9. Judge distance, size, numbers and height within 25 per cent, error.

This first-class scout must also know a lot of other things. He must know how to tie a rifa line, the position of the main arteries, how to stop bleeding from veins and arteries, how to improvise splints, and many other things which constitute "first aid to the injured.

All the leading branches of the general scout movement in the country have now been consolidated. 0A

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Uncle Sam Nips Many Postal Frauds

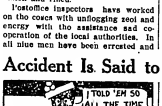
WASHINGTON.—Interesting tales of frauds are told in the report of Robert S. Sharp, chief inspector of the postoffice department.

During the year 1,650 postoffices were robbed as compared with 1,950 during the previous year. There were 2,363 arrests, of which 417 were postoffice burglars, as compared with 2,395 arrests during the previous year, of which 416 were postoffice burglars.

Of the number arrested 100 were postmasters, 35 assistant postmasters, 95 clerks in postoffices, 25 railway postal clerks, 36 city letter carriers, 37 rural letter carriers and 19 wagon mail carriers. Of the total number 1,579 were persons not connected with the postal service.

Train robberies in the west occurred with alarming frequency. Since March, 1903, nine mail trains have been held up and robbed and a large amount of registered mail has been stolen and rifled.

Postoffice inspectors have worked on the cases with unflagging zeal and energy with the assistance and cooperation of the local authorities. In all nine men have been arrested and convicted for these train robberies, one being sentenced to 15 years in the penitentiary and a fine of $3,000, one to 43 years and a fine of $5,000, two to serve 45 years each and five were sentenced to life imprisonment.



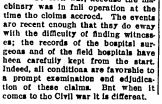
A very important case recently handled by postoffice inspectors covered the operations of the so-called Meharg gang. The swindle is believed to have been the most gigantic scheme of this kind that the postal inspectors ever had to contend with. It was worked by an organization of confidence men by means of fake horse races, athletic contests, etc.

The swindle was perpetrated successfully in various parts of the United States and victims in all parts of the country were robbed of sums varying from $1,000 to $30,000. It is estimated that the promoters secured approximately $5,000,000.

A scheme to defraud, international in its scope, known as the "gold brick" swindle, by which victims have been fleeced out of various sums, ranging from $500 to $25,000—and it is believed the swindlers secured over a million dollars—has been in operation a number of years.

The investigation of this case required the utmost skill on the part of the inspectors handling it; a trip to England was necessary to obtain important information and evidence and investigation had to be made in various parts of the United States and Canada.

Accident Is Said to Have Sunk Maine



THE United States battleship Maine, destroyed in Havana harbor in February, 1898, with a loss of many lives, was blown up by an internal explosion, and when the ship is raised it will be shown that the Spaniards in Cuba had absolutely nothing to do with the destruction of the vessel. This is the opinion of officials of the war department, based upon information conveyed to them by army officers engaged in the work of raising the shattered hull.

Persons who have arrived in Washington recently, and have an intimate knowledge of the work of raising the battleship, it is learned, agree that the destruction of the Maine was due to the explosion of one of the air-tight compartments used for the storage of ammunition. This theory is borne out, it is claimed, by the evidences already developed. It has been found that in the mud and silt surrounding the hull of the Maine there is a great quantity of coal. Human bones have also been picked up outside the hull.

An internal explosion naturally would force outward a large part of the contents of the vessel's hull. This condition has been found. The report was prevalent in Havana and in the United States shortly after the work of raising the hulk was begun that wires had been found close to the hull of the ship which communicated with the shore, but this report was found to be false. The wires were those in use between Hovana and Cosa Blanca.

Pension Claims of Ready-Made Widows

SIXTEEN thousand claims for pensions growing out of the Spanish war are on file in the pension office in Washington. All the pensions incident to this war are being disposed of more promptly than those growing out of the Civil war, because the machinery was in full operation at the time the claims accrued. The events are recent enough that they do away with the difficulty of finding witnesses; the records of the hospital surgeons and the field hospitals have been carefully kept from the start. Indeed, all conditions are favorable to a prompt examination and adjudication of these claims. But when it comes to the Civil war it is different.

Widows' claims have always been a source of interest in the pension office. In fact, the widow business has developed into a highly organized industry in some of the border states, where many negroes who were in the Union army, are buried. Recently from one such community 106 claims for widows' pensions poured into Washington within a few days, all of them being from widows of colored soldiers in that neighborhood. Suspicion was aroused in the minds of the examiners and it was found that a sharp lawyer had worked up the claims for a commission.

Dependent mothers furnish some trouble to the pension department with their claims, though many have remarried since the war. In some cases lawyers have coached them into destroying all records of their marriages and to claim the common law marriage which makes more trouble for the pension office.

See Little Hope for Low Food Prices

THERE is little chance of food prices ever returning to the old low standard, according to Wilbur M. Hayes, acting secretary of agriculture. To substantiate this he cites the fact that only one-third of the total population of the country is now engaged in producing food for the remaining two-thirds. He says this will be shown by statistics soon to be issued by the census bureau.

Only two generations ago, he declared, two-thirds of the population was engaged in production. To this remarkable reversal, he says, is the high cost of living mainly due.

The increased cost of living has no terrors for the American farmer, judging by the conclusions of the department of agriculture. In the last ten years the value of his products has been increasing at such a rate that the lifter of the soil is now able to afford hitherto undreamed of luxuries and the old homestead has been fitted with every modern convenience.

In the Crop Reporter just issued by the department considerable space is devoted to the cost of living problem from the farmer's point of view. The reporter says: "Within the last ten years the purchasing power of the farmer has increased more than fifty per cent. Such conditions are having and will continue to have more forces in keeping the rising generation of farmers' children upon the farm than volumes upon volumes of printed advice to stay there."

With the mass of figures before them from which to draw comparisons, the statisticians set to work and now announce that while the cost of articles purchased has increased, the increase in purchasing power of each farm acre has outstripped it and the farmer is left with a comfortable margin of profit for his work.

OFFICER FORCED FROM NAVY

After a service of 41 years in the navy, Rear Admiral Edward B. Barry, late commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet, has been retired upon his own request, his action being based upon the demand of the officers of his flagship, and West Virginia, that he either resign or stand court martial on charges of grossly immoral conduct. He refused to resign and send a telegram to Washington asking that he be retired—a request which at once was granted. The scandal has created a sensation in naval circles and outside them, for Barry's long service had made him one of the best known officers in the country.

What the grave offense, of which Barry is accused and which is offset is substantiated by his act of retirement, was discovered the officers on his flagship at first determined to send him a loaded revolver, with a request to use it. Upon further consideration they decided on allowing him a court martial and drew up the charges to be forwarded to the navy department at Washington. These charges Barry suppressed and then applied to Washington for retirement.

STARTED AT $4.50 A WEEK

James A. Farrell, the new president of the United States Steel Corporation, who will receive $100,000 a year, was a laborer at 16 years of age, earning $4.50 a week, or $234 a year. He reached his high station by hard and persistent work.

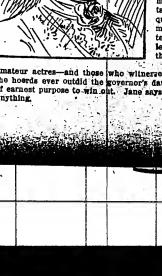
Born in New Haven in 1863, Mr. Farrell is of athlete build, over six feet tall and weighing 220 pounds. He is married and lives in Brooklyn. His family consists of two girls and three boys. When Mr. Farrell was asked for a short sketch of his career, he said:

"Well, I quit school to go to work when I was 16 years old. My father, who had several sailing vessels plying between New York and Liverpool, was getting too for active in years to carry on his business. I began work in a steel rail mill at New Haven and remained there nine years, doing manual labor.

"Seeing a bigger field in Pittsburg, I went there when I was 25 years old and got work in the mills of the Pittsburg Wire company as a laborer. Later I was made superintendent and manager and worked in that capacity for six years.

"Next I became general superintendent of the Oliver Steel Wire company, of Pittsburg, and worked in that city and in Beaver Falls for a long time. Finally in 1903 I was asked to come to New York and organize the United States Steel Product Export company."

INVENTS MULTIPLE 'PHONE



Maj. George O. Squires, of the United States army, has just given an important invention to the world. The patents issued to him cover a system of multiplex telephony and telegraphy. These patents have been dedicated to the public, and anybody is free to make use of them without paying a cent of royalty. They cover devices which can be applied to telephone apparatus now in use, and as many as ten simultaneous conversations may be carried on over one wire without interfering with each other.

The inventor is 45 years old, a Michigan man and a graduate from West Point 24 years ago, and is unmarried. He believes his invention will soon be in general use and that its adoption will reduce the cost of operating telephone exchanges and make telephone service cheaper.

The invention is regarded as especially valuable for long-distance use, as it gives a clear and easily audible tone. It will probably get its first practical test for commercial purposes over long-distance wires.

LONGS FOR THE FOOTLIGHTS

Among the scores of American girls who are gaining fame as disciples of the "unusual" in some form or other may be mentioned Miss Jane Haskell, daughter of ex-Gov. Charles Haskell, of Oklahoma. Naturally, one would think that this pretty western girl had all that was necessary to make her an charming and teasing and a few tears she persuaded her parents to let her study "dramatic art" and that's what she's doing now.

Recently she made her debut as an amateur actress—and those who witnessed the event say that no veteran of the hoards ever outdid the governor's daughter when it came to an evidence of earnest purpose to win out. Jane says she will succeed if work counts for anything.

Blind Man Leads in Tidying Streets

NEW YORK.—Reuben S. Simons, supervisor of 150,000 children in the Juvenile league, is blind, but he is the most valuable man in the street cleaning department, and he is not unhappy over the loss of his sight because he is too fond of work and too busy to be unhappy over anything.

"I never think of my blindness," he says, "except when I hear someone speak of the poor blind man. That cuts like a knife. I do my work as well as though I had my eyes, maybe better. There are no distractions in this world within which I live. I only think of my work. What the eye does not see the heart does not grieve for."

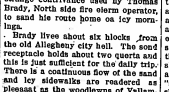
Thirteen years ago Reuben Simons' eyes began to pain him. For this past seven years he has been totally blind. And yet within that time he has organized a movement among the school children of New York by which 150,000 are now enlisted. They pledge themselves to aid the street cleaning department in keeping the thoroughfares free of rubbish. Their duty is not merely the passive one of refraining from throwing trash upon the street.

They help enforce the law. Every householders are warned by the volunteer aids, and if that warning is not obeyed there is prompt recourse to the law. The members of the 72 leagues, in 72 school buildings of the city, make regular reports to the street cleaning department.

And this blind man was the pioneer in the work. He thought of it first, impelled by his longing for children and a certain instinct for sociability that has always been his. "I always liked to organize clubs when I was a boy," he said. "We organized all sorts of purposes. I like excitement, brisk movement, happiness. I like to see things."

The incongruity in that expression does not bother him. "I have cultivated the inner eye," he said. "I have no power of imagination. I can see you and the people passing by just as I can see the children waiting before me when I go into a schoolroom to examine a junior league. It never occurs to me to think that I am blind."

Chicago Chinese to Amputate Queues

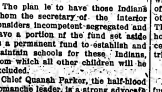


CHICAGO.—Frank Moy, the mayor of Chicago's Chinatown, has passed along a recently issued imperial decree that all celestials are to part with their queues. After wearing a braid for about 250 years, John Chinaman has come to the conclusion that it is a nuisance and a—it would hardly do to say "a relic of a heathen age." China has awakened to the fact that its advancement has been retarded by the way it wears its hair and the whole empire is going to have a haircut. The matter has been agitated for some time by leading Chinese, among them Wu Ting-Fang, former minister to the United States. A telegram received from Moy, who is in the government service in China, announces the date of disposing of superfluous appendages, which date in the Chinese calendar corresponds with the 14th of February in the Gregorian calendar, the Chinese new year falling on January 30.

"It is a good, sensible idea," said Moy. "I had my queue cut off several years ago and I don't know that I ever felt the loss of it. It is no good, anyway, and it makes lots of work for the wearer. It has got to be braided every day and washed once or twice a week and that's no small job.

"It is a common belief among Americans that the reason a Chinaman doesn't cut off his queue is that he thinks he cannot enter heaven without it. That's only a story. Chinamen, the world over, will welcome the decree to cut off their queues. In Chicago there are a few Chinese population of about 2,000, of which one-fourth have no queues. The other three-fourths, with few exceptions, will climb in the herber chair on February 14 and say, 'Give me a heircut.'"

Defies Icy Walks With a Sand Brake



PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—A rubber water bottle filled with sand and strapped around his body, with an attached gas hose leading down through device chemicals that terminate under the instep of his shoes, is the strange contrivance used by Thomas Brady, North side fire alarm operator, to sand his route home on icy morning.

Brady lives about six blocks from the old Allegheny city hall. The sand receptacle holds about two quarts and this is just sufficient for the daily trip. There is a continuous flow of the sand and icy sidewalks are rendered as pleasant as the woodlawns of Vallambrosa.

In the two previous winters Brady slipped on the ice on his way home. One time he was laid up seven weeks with a broken kneecap. The other time he hurt his ankle and was laid up at home for over a month. At the beginning of this winter he began to think of what possible thing he could do to protect himself this winter. For a time he tried "creepers," but these were not satisfactory. Then came the brilliant thought.

He took possession of the family water bottle and hunted up some old gas hose. One difficulty was in getting the sand to foll ot the right spot and also to adjust the flow. Finally he got a little plug. This he could open with a string leading up to one pocket that allowed the sand to flow of regulated speed. But the sand would fall by the wayside and not go under his shoes. Brady is a mechanic and made a little metallic thing he called a "spreader." This caused the sand to slip under the soles of his shoes. Brady thinks he ought to get a patent out on the sand "spreader."

Indian President of a School Board

LAWTON, OKLA.—Firmly convinced that the full-blood Indian can never be induced to attend school with white children long enough to get an education, Congressman Scott Ferris of the Oklahoma delegation is drawing a bill that will perpetuate the exclusive Indian schools.

The plan is to have those Indians whom the secretary of the interior considers incompetent segregated and have a portion of the fund set aside as a permanent fund to establish and maintain schools for these Indians, from which all other children will be excluded.

Chief Quanah Parker, the half-blood Comanche leader, is a strong advocate of "mixed" school, where his children may attend the same institution where their white neighbors are educated.

Last fall Chief Parker was instrumental in having a public school district formed which includes his headsome residence in the foothills of the Wichita mountains. He donated a large tract of land and contributed a fund for maintenance of the district. He was chosen president of the board.

While the government maintains a Comanche Indian school one mile from Lawton, Chief Parker has never taken very kindly to sending his sons and daughters to the tribal school.

For one year his son attended the white school at Cache, 12 miles west of Lawton and near his home, but the other families strenuously objected. Then the chief reluctantly kept his boy out of school. This was his incentive in establishing the new district in western Comanche county.

THE BOY AND THE GUN.

Each season brings its own sport or pastimes, game or fad for the boys. The autumn and winter are the seasons when many boys hunt or shoot a great deal, says the Omaha Bee. This should be the time, then, for the reiteration of that old warning about the "I-didn't-know-it-was-loaded" accident. Boys should be careful with their shooting irons, and never fail to know whether they are loaded or not. Two boys were out shooting a few days ago and one, thinking his gun was empty, aimed it at the other and pulled the trigger. The other dropped dead. "I didn't know it was loaded," wailed the one who killed him, echoing the wail of scores of others who had at sometime been as criminally neglicent as himself. No boy or man has a right to aim a firearm at another person, and when he does it, whether harm comes of it or not, he should be made to feel that he has done something he should not. Parents can well afford to deny guns and pistols to their boys until they have reached such ages as will make them capable of realizing their dangers. If they must have guns, they should be cautioned against careless use of them. It sometimes seems trito to speak of warning boys against such things, but if they were warned often enough such distressing accidents would be fewer.

Pittsburg is growing at a fairly rapid rate, but wants to increase still more swiftly. That smoky town has an ambition to reach the 1,000,000 mark in population, and is heading every effort in that direction. For one thing, Pittsburg is pushing the project for a ship canal from that city to Lake Erie, by which it is hoped to increase still further the already great industrial activity of that district. Other schemes include a big rapid-transit system, with subway attachments, bringing various points into easier reach; educational and other expansion, and numerous improvements designed to increase the attractiveness and convenience of the city and its environs. And Pittsburg seems to have sufficient public spirit to carry out the great work suggested.

The census figures continue to give interesting results. Mention hoe been made of the fact that there are now in the United States 50 cities with a population of 100,000 or more, a notable gain in ten years, as there were but 28 such cities in 1900. Now the census bureau, having completed the returns, announces that there are in the country 19 cities with a population reaching or exceeding 250,000. In 1900 there were 15 towns included in that class. From this it appears that, while there has been marked gain in many cities, large and small, the proportion has been greatest among municipalities of moderate size.

Also they do some things better in Germany. A reckless chauffeur who killed an American woman when he ran into a crowd of theatergoers has been sent to the penitentiary for 15 months.

It is said that one of the prominent female colleges is going to insist on proficiency in spelling and writing in the students. This looks as if the higher education were meditating a return to the simple life.

Some New York undertakers are said to be in league with preachers and sextons. It might be worse, as there is no avidence offered that undertakers are in league with doctors.

It is reported that there has been a revival of poetry in England. If the poets can manage to get through the winter there may be a chance for some of them, after all.

BLAST KILLS SCORE

DYNAMITE EXPLOSION IN JERSEY CITY CAUSES PANIC IN NEW YORK CITY.

MORE THAN 150 INJURED

Ootonation Felt Many Miles Away—Skyscrapers Are Rocked—Men and Women Rush into Streets Fearful of Earth Shocks.

New York.—At least a score of persons were killed, 150 or more injured and property damaged to the extent of $500,000 when an explosion of 25 tons of dynamite occurred Wadnesday at a pier close to the Central railroad of New Jersey's passenger ferry slip at Communipaw, N. J.

At the same time the tarrific force of the blowup reached through the underlying strata of rock not only in Manhattan, Brooklyn, Richmond and the Bronx, but far way points in Long Island and Connecticut, rocking skyscrapers, smashing glass, tearing away window frames and sending panic stricken, tens of thousands of men and women into the streets, fearful that an earthquake or some other vast natural terror was upon them.

As in all upheavals of tremendous force, persons near by escaped death; buildings close at hand were not injured; persons far away were killed; structures at great distances were almost torn apart.

What happened, briefly, was this: Two cars of dynamite, containing 25 tons each, from the Dupont Powder company works in Wilmington, Del., had arrived on the tracks at the end of pier No. 7, almost adjoining the big Central station at Communipaw, the explosives being consigned to Palisades, on the Hudson, for use in blasting out rock.

Two lighters, the Katharine W. and the Whelden, had been towed up to the pier end to receive cargoes of the dangerous stuff. On the former was Captain Lief, his wife and eight men, on the latter four men.

On the pier end itself were twelve Polish laborers, some starting to eat their dinners from their pails; others engaged in transferring the dynamite from the freight cars to the lighters. There were at least 24 men within actual handling distance of the dynamite.

Next there was an awful roar, a great cloud of bona end dust, a tremble of earth and structures above the earth within a radius of 20 miles square, an immense wave from the river that splashed high above everything near by, and then a vision of death, maiming and wreckage.

Dry Farming Meet Opened.

Dickinson, N. D.—With every prospect of being a great success, the North Dakota dry farming congress opened here Tuesday. The sessions are being attended by hundreds of farmers from all parts of the state. The exhibits of agricultural products are quite extensive, and a number of prizes have been provided by the business men of Dickinson. The Dickinson experiment station also has a fine exhibit of grains and forage crops.

PASSES HARBOR BILL

MEASURE CARRYING $36,000,000 ADOPTED BY SENATE.

Numerous Amendments Sends Act to Conference—National Waterways Commission to Be Continued.

Washington.—After three hours of consideration the senate Tuesday passed the river and harbor bill, carrying appropriations aggregating $36,000,000.

Amendments to the bill provide that $125,000 shall be spent to improve the Illinois and Mississippi canal at a point where it crosses East Bureau creek. The life of the national waterways commission shall be continued to 1913, and it shall report upon the feasibility of a canal from Lake Erie, by way of the Maumee river and Fort Wayne, ind., to the southerly end of Lake Michigan.

The original bill having passed the house, consideration of the amendments will be taken up by a conference committee at an early date.

KING'S HONOR IS CLEARED

Editor Myllus, Who Charged British Ruler With Morganatic Marriage, Is Sent to Prison.

London.—After brief proceedings e special jury before Lord Chief Justice Alverstone cleared King Georga of imputations against his personal character by finding Edward F. Tyrlus guilty of circulating a libel. The defendant was sentenced to one year's imprisonment.

Myllus was charged with distributing in England copies of the Liberator, e Paris publication edited by Edward H. James, in which it was alleged that his majesty while prince of Wales contracted a morganatic marriage with the older daughter of Admiral Sir Michael Seymour at Malta in 1890. The crown called the admiral as a witness and he testified that the daughter in question, now his wife, and Captain Napier of the British navy, never had seen his majesty before 1898, when his ship called on the witness at Portsmouth. His only other daughter died in 1895 and for three years preceding her death had been with her father at Malta, where he was commander-in-chief of the Mediterranean squadron. The king had not visited Malta while his daughters were there and the younger daughter never had spoken to him.

FRISCO MAY GET FAIR

House Fixes on Pacific Coast Metropolis as Site for Panama Show.

Washington.—San Francisco won a signal victory in the house of representatives Tuesday in the fight with New Orleans for the Panama exposition in 1915. The resolution declaring in favor of San Francisco was passed by a vote of 259 to 42. The bousa first voted to take up the resolution favoring San Francisco.

While the resolution must be passed by the senate before the struggle is ended, it is generally believad now that the contest was good as settled and that San Francisco will be the final victor.

ADMITS KILLING 40

RUSSIA SHOCKED AT CONFESSION OF WHOLESALE MURDER BY DR. PANTCHENKO.

ROYALTY MAY BE VICTIMS

Cholera Bacilli Used by Slayer and His Operations May Have Caused Epidemic—Declares He Is Under Hypnotic Spell.

St. Petersburg.—By the confession of Doctor Pantchenko, the notorious poisoner, it was developed Thursday that aristocratic Russians had paid as high as $250,000 to rid themselves of creditors and other undesirable persons by the poison route.

Pantchenko was arrested with Count O'Brien De Lassy, upon charges charged with the murder of the count's brother-in-law, Vassilli Boutourlin, heir to estates valued at $2,000,000, in order that the property might be inherited by Countess De Lassy.

Pantchenko confessed his guilt, but set up the defense that he committed the crime while under the hypnotic influence of the count.

The whole empire is interested in the case because of the wholesale confession made by Pantchenko. Every mysterious death of recent years is recalled and there are rumors that the poisoner may have been engaged to cause the death of members of the royal family. He has admitted that he made a business of killing for hire, heirs, rivals in love, insistent creditors and, in fact, any undesirable persons whose enemy was prepared to pay liberally for their sudden taking off.

The poison doctor, according to the police, has admitted causing about forty deaths, his fees running as high as $250,000 for a single assassination. His method was to inoculate the patient with cholera bacilli after he had been called to the bedside in his professional capacity. He is now credited by some with having originated the cholera epidemic of eight years ago.

The doctor is seventy years old and appears to have had some standing in society despite his dual profession. Count De Lassy is a young man of Irish descent. The woman in the case is Mma. Muravieff, with whom Pantchenko lodged and to whom he says he turned over his earnings. Sha figures in the trial as an alleged accomplice.

JUAREZ FEARS REBEL ATTACK

Practically All Citizens of Mexican Town Flee to El Paso, Tex., as Insurrectos Advance.

El Paso, Tex.—Ciudad Juarez, across the river from here, was practically depopulated Thursday night, the residents having fled to this city in fear of an attack from insurrectos.

The Mexican post office and two branch banks in Juarez were closed after all the money and records had been brought here for safety.

Federal troops, under orders, took desperate measures to check the approach of the insurrectos. Trenches were dug within twenty miles of Juarez. The Fourteenth cavalry was sent out to dynamite the tracks of the Mexican Central railway, over which a train was traveling toward Juarez loaded with rebels.

The train bearing the insurrectos ran over a mine of dynamite, which exploded, shattering one of the coaches, but it is not known just how many persons were killed. The cowcatcher on the engine was blown to pieces.

A battle between the Fourteenth cavalry and the insurrectos raged for several hours Thursday. Thirty-two federal cavalrymen are believed to have been killed, the estimate being based upon the number of riderless cavalry horses which strayed into Juarez. Six insurrectos were killed. Many were wounded on both sides.

SHIP SUBSIDY BILL PASSED

Senate Adopts Gallinger Substitute But Vice-President Sherman Casts the Deciding Vote.

Washington.—Vice-President Sherman cast the deciding vote which adopted the Gallinger substitute for the ocean mail subsidy bill in the senate Thursday. The vote was 39 to 39. It provides for a bounty of 2 and 1½ cents respectively to American ships of the second and third class operating between Pacific ports east of the Rockies, China, Japan, Australia and South American ports south of the equator. The limit in one year is $4,000,000, and further, that it shall not exceed the amount of money received on account of foreign mails.

The bill now goes to the house.

FIND BODY IN FIELD

MYSTERY OF KENOSHA GIRL DEEPENED BY DISCOVERY.

Much Wooed Daughter Vanishes After Quarrel With Father Over Love Affairs.

Kenosha, Wis.—C. J. Jacobson, a farmer living three miles north of this city, found the dead and bruised body of Mary Zabon, aged twenty-four years, the daughter of Paul Zabon, a farmer living in Somers township, in an out of the way cobhaga field.

Miss Zabon disappeared from the residence of her parents on the night of January 8, and since that time police officers in all parts of the country have been soaking her.

The body was clad only in a suit of underwear. The girl evidently had been dead for a long time, as the body had been frozen stiff, and its condition indicated that it long bad been exposed to the weather.

The Kenosha police say they have not been able to find ony motiva for the killing of the girl.

The disappearance of the girl has been a mystary with many interesting angles. The young woman was of attractive appearance. She had been employed in a Kenosha factory. She was not without her sweethearts, and on the night of her disappearance she had quarreled with her father, who had urged her to marry one of his friends, much older than herself.

The girl had declined to see this man, had gone to her room in tears, and had told her father that she would not see any one.

Two hours later it was discovered that her room was empty ond, although a search was made, no trace of her was found.

BIG DEAL IN MICHIGAN LAND

Purchase of Vast Tract Almost as Large as the State of Rhode Island.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.—As a result of the purchase of 712,000 acres of land in the upper peninsula of Michigan by H. H. Hamilton of Detroit for the Western Land Securities company of that city, employment will be given to 5,000 men in that district this year. It is the intention of the company to spend $5,000,000 on drainage and other improvements.

Work will be rushed as rapidly as possible and as soon as spring opens laborers will be in demand on the peninsula. Dredging crews will invade the territory and will start work on the weather conditions permit. Manistique river will be the natural outlet for all the water which is to be removed from the land and carried into Lake Michigan. As the ditch diggers build ditches around each section of land, they will at the same time be building a road. The huge degree of these dredging machines as they lift the soil from the earth will cast it on either side of the ditch and deposit it in such a manner that steam rollers and grading machines will find it very little trouble to roll it out and level it into a road. The plan of simultaneous ditch and road building has been successfully followed in the upper portion of Minnesota and in other states, and the old cry of farmers that they could not get their products to market because of the lack of highways will not be heard in the upper peninsula of Michigan because of the fact that the settler will find a good roadway near his land when he comes to fill the soil.

Great interest has been manifested in this district by the announcement of the purchase of the vast tract of land, which covers 1,113 square miles and is only a trifle smaller than the state of Rhode Island. Farmers who have already located in that district are highly pleased by the fact that a company of such wide scope is to work on improvements has become the owner of this small empire and appreciate the fact that the improvements in the way of drainage and clearing will make their land more valuable. The expenditure of such a sum as $5,000,000 in the district will undoubtedly cause a wave of prosperity in Sault Ste. Maris, Rudyard, Manistique, Escanaba, Pickford, Trout Lake, Menominee, Munising, Marquette and Newberry, the like of which has not been felt in many years.

OWES HER HEALTH

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Scottville, Mich.—"I want to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done me. I live on a farm and have worked very hard. I am forty-five years old, and am the mother of thirteen children. Many people think it strange that I am not tired out when I go with hard work and the care of my family, but I tell them it is my good friend, your Vegetable Compound, and that there will be no backache and bearing down pains for them if they will take it as I have. I am scarcely ever without it in the house.

"I will say also that I think there is no better medicine to be found for young girls to build them up and make them strong and well. My eldest daughter has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for painful periods and irregularity, and it has done her much good.

"I am always ready and willing to speak a good word for the Lydia E. Pinkham's Remedies. I tell every one I meet that I owe my health and happiness to these wonderful medicines." —Mrs. J. G. Johnson, Scottville, Mich., R.F.D. 8.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases.

OPINION NOT ALWAYS FINAL

Pretty Safe to Say That Doctor's Diagnosis Was "Away Off" in This Case.

The pretty daughter of a physician is engaged to a college student of whom her father does not altogether approve. His daughter is too young to think of marriage, he asserts; the college student is too young to think of it, likewise. It is out of the question.

She explained all this to her lover the other night.

"Father says," she summed it up; "father says, dear, that I will have to grow up."

The young man sighed. "Then it's all over?" he murmured, with gloomy interrogation. And the girl laughed and blushed.

"Well," she said, "well, you—you know that when the doctor gives you up that's just the time for you to take more hope. Isn't it sometimes that way?"—Rebboth Sunday Herald.

Luckily Expressed.

An old Pennsylvania German living in the mountains had a hard three hours' drive to accomplish one morning and he rose very early to make his start. His bad gone but a little way when he came across a new an automobile, which was probably the first that had passed along that way. The driver pulled up the old man and they were at his destination in about 20 minutes.

"Dodse was awful awfully mit da ride. If I had known myself to be here already two hours in front of a house yet I vod ha it home fast asleep already to start unless I knew you vod not have picked me up since."

THE WOMAN WHO SHAPED A WONDERFUL CAREER

SARAH BUSH LINCOLN ☆ ☆

INTERIOR OF THOMAS LINCOLN'S ILLINOIS HOME

THE LINCOLN HOME IN COLES COUNTY, ILL.

HOUSE IN WHICH LINCOLN WAS BORN ☆ ☆

THE history of every great man, declares a well-known writer, begins at his mother's knee. Behind every great endeavor and unselfish deed, every noble career of every illustrious man will be found a woman—the frail and gentle creature whose name, perhaps, remains obscured behind the glory of her son, but who began to teach him high thoughts and ideals and to lisp the words of "Our Father, which art in heaven."

Abraham Lincoln's career began at the knee of Nancy Hanks Lincoln, his mother. It was she who taught him to read from an old Bible he came to know so well, who told him the stories in Aesop's fables and helped him to study the "Kentucky Perceptor."

It was she who taught him the letters of the alphabet and first trained his hand to accept them. It was she who instilled in him a hatred of slavery and by her own gentle loveliness inspired a regard and esteem for women which lasted throughout his life.

Nancy Hanks Lincoln, one of the great president's historians declares, was "stoop-shouldered, thin-breasted, sad—at times miserable;" a gentle, kind, uncomplaining woman whose life had been one of hard labor, with few enjoyments, and who died before her prime. This was Nancy Hanks Lincoln as she lay on her deathbed, tired and worn, her face wan, her thin, bony hands clasping those of a nine-year-old lad, whose deep-dark eyes were filled with tears, and who, when he later became "a liberator of a race of men," declared:

"All that I am or ever hope to be I owe to my mother. Blessings on her memory."

From his mother Lincoln once told his friend and law partner, William H. Herndon, he believed he inherited his power of analysis, his logic, his mental activity and his ambition. Her memory remained with him, one of the dearest things of his life—"a noble type of good, heroic womanhood."

Nancy Hanks was two years old when her parents sold their farm in Virginia and went pioneering westward toward Kentucky. Nancy was the youngest of a family of eight children. Her father was Joseph Hanks and her mother Nancy Shipley, a daughter of Robert Shipley. Nancy was born February 5, 1784.

The journey westward was a perilous one, and it is said Nancy was stolen by Indians while her parents were on the way. Roads were bad; in fact, there was only a footpath through the wilderness, where passed the long procession of women and children on horseback, men trudging behind driving the caravans.

Picture to yourself the procession, described by Justice Robertson—"through privations incredible and perils thick, thousands of men, women and children came in successive caravans, forming continuous streams of human beings, horses, cattle and other domestic animals, moving onward along a lonely and homeless path to a wild and cheerless land.

"Cast your eyes back," he continues, "on that long procession of missionaries in the cause of civilization! Behold the men on foot with their trusty guns on their shoulders, driving stock and leading pack horses; and the women, some walking with rifles on their heads, others riding with children in their laps and other children swung in baskets on horses, fastened to the tails of others behind; see them encamped at night, expecting to be massacred by Indians; behold them in the month of December, in that memorable season of unprecedented cold called the 'hard winter,' traveling ten or three miles a day."

And imagine little Nancy Hanks, spindly-legged and golden-haired, shivering as she snuggled under blankets, pursuing the road of the pioneers. In the child who was to become the mother of Abraham Lincoln was now developed a courage and perseverance which was to be inherited and which afterward marked one of the greatest of men.

The family settled in Washington county, Ky., in winter. Hard work confronted them, even privation. Trees had to be felled, a log cabin built, and shelter erected for the stock.

Little Nancy, with her sister, Elizabeth and Polly, helped their mother, cooking and sewing and preparing the rude home, while the brothers, Charles, Joshua, William, Thomas and Joseph, went about with the father, clearing the land for cultivation in the spring. They hunted animals and fished in the cold streams. And when spring came they dug the hard, stony ground and planted wheat and corn.

Thus four years passed—four years of hard toil and hard living—and then Joseph Hanks died. Not long afterward the mother, worn with toil, followed; the brothers and daughters married, and Nancy, left alone, was taken in by her Aunt Lucy—a sister of her mother, who had married Richard Berry. This home was a happy one and Nancy grew up, cheerful and pretty.

When Nancy's father died he left a will. It is still on the records of the Bardstown clerk's office, and as will he sees, Nancy was the proud heiress of one heifer, a pet called Peldy. The quaint will, which was probated May 14, 1793, runs:

"In the name of God, Amen. I, Joseph Hanks, of Nelson county, state of Kentucky, being of sound mind and memory, but weak in body and calling to mind the frailty of all human nature, do make and demise this my last will and testament in the manner and form following, to wit:

"Item: I give and bequeath unto my son Thomas one sorrel horse called Major. Item: I give and bequeath unto my son Joshua one sorrel mare Bianby. Item: I give and bequeath unto my son William one gray horse called Gilbert. Item: I give and bequeath unto my son Charles one roan horse called Toha. Item: I gives and bequeath unto my son Joseph one horse called Bald. Also the land whereon I now live containing one hundred and fifty acres.

"Item: I give and bequeath unto my daughter Elizabath one heifer yearling called Gentle. Item: I give and bequeath unto my daughter Polly one heifer yearling called Lady. Item: I give and bequeath unto my daughter Nancy one heifer yearling called Peldy. Item: I give and bequeath unto my wife Nancy all and singular my whole estate during her life, afterward to be equally divided between all my children. It is also my wish and desire that the whole of the property first above bequeathed should be the property of my wife during her life."

Here, too, can be found a record of the seed which budded so nobly in Joseph Hanks' grandson: Joseph Hanks, unlike most of the pioneers, owned no slaves. When Nancy Hanks later married Thomas Lincoln they bought no slaves and never owned any.

Nancy's life while she lived with her Aunt Lucy was happy. She grew into a young miss of unusual beauty and became the belle of the countryside. She learned to read and write, and was considered exceptionally accomplished. When she married Thomas Lincoln she taught him to spell the letters of his name.

There are but few and meager descriptions of Nancy Hanks. One learns that she was slight of figure, that her hair was palo golden, almost flaxen, and her eyes were blue. Her wit was nimble.

Suitors thronged the parlor of Aunt Lucy's farm. But Nancy lost her heart to none; she laughed gaily at their protests, parried their importunate proposals with jest and was so good natured, so mirthful and funny about it that all remained her friends.

Nancy often went to the farm of Joseph Hanks, at Elizabethtown, where she saw her cousin, Thomas Lincoln. Thomas was a carpenter, and if the records are true, the best in the country for many miles.

He not only hacked and hewed and chiseled wood with skill, but he did what none others had succeeded in doing—chiseled his way into the heart of Nancy.

Thomas Lincoln had a varied career. He was strong as an ox, temperate in his habits, an attendant at church and was bitterly opposed to slavery. Both he and Nancy agreed in that. The couple entered into a marriage bond on June 12, 1806. On June 14 the couple were married by a Methodist preacher, the Rev. Jesse Head, who besides being a clergyman, was an editor, country judge and carpenter.

And a wedding it was—with merrymaking and feasting. There were present the Milchelis, Shipleys and Berrys, Nancy's cousins, relatives and friends from the country roundabout. In a pit near the house a great fire was built, over which a sheep was placed and barbecued. During the morning it roasted, covered by great hoops, and after the wedding it was cut and served for dinner. There were venison, too, and wild turkey and ducks. The wedding was remembered for years.

"There was no hint of future glory in the wedding or bringing home of Nancy Lincoln," wrote Nicolay and Hay. "All accounts represent her as a handsome young woman of twenty-three, of appearance and intellect superior to her lowly fortunes. She could read and write—a remarkable accomplishment in her circle—and even taught her husband to form the letters of his name. He had no such valuable wedding gift to bestow upon her; he brought her to a little house in Elizabethtown, where he and she and want dwelt together to fourteen feet square."

For two happy but needy years the couple lived in a log cabin on the banks of what was than known as Mill creek. Picture to yourself that home of the young bride—a single room, with a huge fireplace, where logs burned in winter; an iron pot suspended from a crane, rough chairs hewn by the carpenter husband of logs, a number of crude benches, a bed made of rough trees from which the bark had not been removed, a spinning wheel by which the industrious wife sat and wove the material for clothing; a room lacking in comforts, typical of the pioneer cabins of those days, with an opening above into a loft, reached by a ladder, where things were stored.

There, nine day in 1807, Nancy's first baby was born. It was a little girl, and was called Nancy, after the mother. Later the little girl's name was changed to Sarah. That was when Thomas Lincoln married his second wife, Sarah Bush.

Thomas Lincoln owned a farm near Buffalo, which he had bought in 1803. During the two years he lived at Mill creek he cultivated the farm, improving the ground, and then he removed the spring following the birth of Sarah. In their life of Lincoln Nicolay and Hay write:

"Thomas Lincoln settled down in this dismal solitude to a deeper poverty than any of his name had ever known, and there, in the midst of the most unpromising circumstances that ever witnessed the advent of a hero into this world, Abraham Lincoln was born on February 12, 1809."

The family, however, could not have been extremely destitute, for, we are told, they had a cow and a calf, milk and butter and a feather bed. What wealth! When Abraham was four the family moved again—this time to a cabin, situated on Muldrough's hill. There a third child was born, which died when a few months old.

Of the life of Nancy Lincoln at this time nothing has been written. Of his boyhood Lincoln himself seldom spoke. But one can imagine the patient woman, alone and unassisted, performing the work of her household, tending the bees and milking them, making butter, cleaning the meagerly furnished cabin in which the family lived, cooking and spinning cloth of which she made the garments for her husband, little Sarah and Abe.

Nancy Lincoln's beauty faded; the roses fled from her cheeks, her body became wasted and her shoulders stooped. But her happy spirit never left her; she had a word of cheer for all her neighbors. Stories are told of how she visited the sick and comforted them, and how, when her neighbors were in difficulty, her tender heart was moved and she helped them as best she could.

Her life was hard. But there was cause for joy in Nancy Lincoln's life. Little Abe was her constant delight. At night, when her work was over, she would open the "preceptor" book and teach the two children the letters of the alphabet. With what tenderness and love she must have watched them as they studied—so hard to memorize the A's, B's and C's—and with what doting fondness she must have praised little Abe's tiny hand to trace the letters on a slate!

Dearly Nancy Lincoln loved the Bible, and there were readings from the sacred book; there was told the old, old story. And these stories Lincoln never forgot. When, in after life, he electrified the world by his eloquence, his mastery of pure and perfect English and his tempestuous oratory, he retold the same stories—the stories he learned at his mother's knee.

Life was not prosperous with the father. He left Kentucky and went prospecting in Illinois, where he took up land on Little Pigeon creek, in Spencer county. And again the hard-worked wife was called upon to move her home.

With their furniture packed in a wagon and their cow behind, the family started on their long pilgrimage in 1816. During the winter of 1816 and 1817 the family lived in a camp. The winter was rigorous.

Uncomplainingly the tender, gentle woman bore her lot, but her health slowly gave way. Her face became more wan. A rough cabin was begun in the spring and life opened anew. Land was cleared. Thomas Lincoln plied his trade among the scattered inhabitants of the sanitary region. They began to prosper. But the life had been too hard for the tender, loving wife and she sank under the burden.

One day in October, 1818, as she lay in her bed in the little cabin, she called her two children to her.

"She took the hands of Sarah and the thin, serious-faced boy. "Be good to one another," she said, brokenly, with infinite tenderness. Then she closed her eyes. The wonderful smile deepened. The sunlight faded into evening, and little Abe, leaving Sarah kneeling by the bed, crept away and climbed the pegs in the wall to the garret, where he flung himself on the mattress of leaves.

Night fell, and from the loft came a stifled sound of sobbing—sobbing repressed, checked, restrained, yet so poignant, so keen, so heartforlorn that the father, returning home, paused hearing it, his heart shaking. He knew the outlight of the boy's life had departed.

Many years afterward people wondered at the sorrow moulded indelibly on the face of Lincoln—like agony graven on a figure of stone.

Before the next December Thomas Lincoln married Sarah Johnston, a widow, who, like Nancy, had two children.

In later years, when Lincoln, again shrouded in sorrow, sat by the bedside of his little son, Willie, who was dying, he cried in despair: "This is the hardest trial of my life. Why is it? Why is it?" A nurse who had lost her husband and children told him of her loss, adding, "But I trust in God. I rely upon his will." Lincoln shook his head sadly.

On the day of the funeral he asked the nurse and some friends to pray for him. "I will try to go to God with my sorrows," he said. "I pray as I had that childlike faith you speak of. I trust God will give it to me."

Then his memory traveled back over the years and his first loss by death came to his mind. He told of his mother's confident belief in the wisdom of God. "I remember, her prayers," he said in a low voice, "and they have always followed me. They have followed me all my life."

NO CHANCE.

Puggies—May I offer you my hand and fortune?

Jessie—No, thanks, dear boy. Your fortune's too small and your hand's too large.

As It Appeared in Print.

Senator Newlands of Nevada was soaring in debate one day, soaring so high he "hit the ceiling." He realized he was getting a trifle newsy and to excuse himself said: "Indeed, Mr. President, perfervid oratory may be pardoned, for this subject furnishes all the food eloquence needs."

The next morning's press good to Mr. Newlands, but he was a bit abashed when he read in the Congressional Record that day that he asserted his topic "furnished all the food elephants need."

The Lord's Advertisements.

Willie had been to see his old nurse, and she had shown him her treasures, including some very strikingly colored scripture texts which pleased her.

A few days afterward his aunt gave him a dime to spend at a bazar. Seeing that he seemed undecided what he wanted, she asked him what he was looking for.

"I am looking for one of the Lord's advertisements, like Mary has in her room," said Willie.

RESULTS OF FOOD.

Health and Nation Conditions Come From Right Feeding.

Man, physically, should be like a perfectly regulated machine, each part working easily in its appropriate place. A slight derangement causes undue friction and wear, and frequently ruins the entire system.

A well-known doctor of Edmonton found a way to keep the brain and the body in that harmonious co-operation which makes a joy of living.

"Two years ago," she writes, "being in a condition of nervous exhaustion, I resigned my position as teacher, which I had held for over 40 years. Since then a rest-cure has, of course, been a benefit, but the use of Grape-Nuts has removed one great cause of illness in the past, namely, constipation, and its attendant evils.

"I generally make my entire breakfast on a raw egg beaten into four spoonfuls of Grape-Nuts, with a little hot milk or hot water added. I like it extremely, my food assimilates, and my bowels take care of themselves. I find my brain power and physical endurance much greater and I know that the use of the Grape-Nuts has contributed largely to this result.

BY W. G. HUNT, J

Published every Friday, at Birdsboro, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50.

Entered as Second-class matter August 20 1906, at the post office at Southgate Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

That Canadian Reciprocity is not in the interest of the farmers of northern Minnesota as it will promptly bring the price of our farm products down to the Canada price.

Although the heavy fall of the beautiful snow in northern Minnesota makes bad roads, we are in need of every drop of water there is in it to soak up the land for the spring crops.

Iowa are just beginning to talk about a seed corn harvest day. They might loan Minnesota one day, September 17th, until they get woke up enought to get one of their own Minnie is the up to date girl to make the fashions for the other states to ware.

It is the duty of newspapers to keep their readers posted on how their representatives are voting on some of the important bills before the legislature. The Polk County paper should adver tise, the fact, that John Saugstad voted AGAINST reapportionment, as he might be a candidate for pound master some time, and should not be elected.

Should reapportionment be turned down by this legislature there re will be a movement made to divide the state on a state line just south of Brainerd. Thief River Falls should be put on the lead in the movement they have the division experience. If northern Minnesota continues to deny us a fair representation in that legislature Thief River Falls should divide the state.

Fred D. Warren editor of the Appeal To Reason, has been sentenced to six months in jail at hard labor for printing an envelope an offer of $1,000 reward for the kidnapping of ex governor Taylor and returning him to the state of Kentucky. He may not go to jail, although he will not ask for pardon. The Socialists certainly delivered a body blow to the fairness of our Supreme Court by a comparison of their decision in this case as compared with their decision in the Moyer-Haywood cases, which would lead any fair-minded man to the conclusion that there was one law for the rich and another one for the poor in this country, with our supreame courts to prescribe how to construe and apply them.

At this time much interest will be taken in Minnesota in the action of Governor Marshall, of Indiana, who has just signed a bill repealing county option in that state, and replacing local option as the working control. Indiana was the ideal state in which the prohibitionists worked, and which they expected to point to with pride as a success. The county option law has been working for two years, and the speakers in the legislature urged that the law that resulted in prohibitory features, which had driven the young men of Indiana to the pocket flask, and cheap whiskey to the exclusion of wholesome beer. So general was the demand for the repeal of the county option law, that the vote in favor of its repeal in the house was 60 to 39. The senate, strongly city, urged by the ministry, voted in favor by only 29 to 21.—The Crookston Times.

A Voice From Southern Minnesota.

By a test vote in the state senate Wednesday, it was shown that body was strongly against reapportionment at this session. The vote was taken upon a resolution directing the reapportionment committees to fix the representations 65 for the senate and 130 for the house. The vote was 35 to 30. And the senators voted on this resolution so exposed themselves before electing the majority of them would have been left at home. We do not believe that the vote of these senators from the southern part of the state represents the real sentiment of the people here.—Albert Lea Tribune.

The anti-reapportionment senators do not pretend to be acting under stress of any popular demand from their districts. The people of Southern Minnesota are too broad in their views to want any undue advantage in the state government. That isn't the trouble at all.

Just one thing sits certain senators from that territory. They have been elected to four-year jobs, and purpose to keep them, if the heavens fall. Maybe they will but if their bodies shrink in proportion to their souls, they will not be visible in the senate chairs, two years from now.—Minneapolis Journal.?

And one vote from Northern Minnesota, the one from the Polk county senator, was also against it.—Crookston Times.

That yaup from Polk county did not understand what they was voting on, but thought it was piano contest. If he had been sent down to that senate by the Socialist party he would have got notice to come home and crawl into his hole and hawl the hole in after him.

"Gee whiz," ju t think of a state Senator from northern Minnesota voteing AGAINST reapportionment!

FIGHTING NATURE.

What One Man's Patient Effort Wrung From a Desert in France.

In the southwest of France, between the rivers Adour and Garonne, are long stretches of pine woods, green and cool.

Where these pines now stand was a barren waste in the middle of the last century. Sun and wind vied with each other in making the land drier and dustier. Over the stormy bay of Biscay came winds that set up great sandstorms and sometimes buried whole villages. The whole region was one of hopelessness and despair. Fate was against it.

But finally there came a man who acknowledged fate only as something to be overcome. This man, one Bremontier, was an inspector of roads. He began fencing in the desert. He built a fence and behind it planted broom seeds. Behind the broom seeds he put seeds of the pine. The fence protected the broom seeds, and the broom grew. Then the broom in its turn afforded shelter to the delicate pine shoots.

Soon the pines spread, and their rough roots bound the sandy soil together. The first step was accomplished. Then canals were made to drain the wet parts and carry water to the dry.

Thus did one man by patient effort turn a dreary desert into a home for an industrious and healthy population. It was an instance of triumph over fate.—New York Tribune.

The Business of Life.

Life is a business we are all apt to mismanage, either living recklessly from day to day or suffering ourselves to be gulled out of our moments by the inanities of custom. We should debase a man who gave as little activity and forethought to the conduct of any other business. But in this, which is the one thing of all others, since it contains them all, we cannot see the forest for the trees. One brief impression obliterates another. There is something stupefying in the recurrence of unimportant things, and it is only on rare provocations that we are roused to take an outlook beyond daily concerns and comprehend the narrow limits and great possibilities of our existence.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Those Newspaper Yarns.

A worthy old dame of New England once invited her husband's attention to what seemed to her a curious item in the journal she was looking at. "Listen to this," said she, reading.

"The Mary H. Barker of Gloucester reports that she saw two whales, a cow and a calf, dusting off Cape Cod the day before yesterday."

"Well, what about it?" asked the husband.

"Only this," replied his spouse. "I can understand about the two whales, but what beats me is how the cow and the calf got way out there."—Lippincott's.

A Useful Remedy.

Little four-year-old Billy was visiting his neighbor, Jerry. Billy showed every evidence of a bad cold. Jerry's mother asked with grave solicitude, "Doesn't your mother give you anything for your cold, Billy?" whereupon Billy answered, feeling in all his pockets at once, "Yes, ma'am; she gives me a clean handkerchief."—Lippincott's.

Quite Pretty.

"I am not ashamed of my latest book," said the author.

"Of course not," said the local critic. "I noticed its gilt edges and the beautifully colored frontispiece."—Atlanta Constitution.

Business Versus Sentiment.

"Oh, I don't know. Did you ever send a telegram?"

"I Suffered Intense Pains in My Left Side."

Do you realize it is better to be safe than sorry, that it is the best policy to lock the stable door before the horse is stolen?

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

cured Mrs. C. C. Gokey, of a stubborn case of heart disease, such as thousands are now suffering with. Read what she says:

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had given up work that it was impossible for me to do thirty minutes work in a whole day. I suffered intense pains in my left side and under the left shoulder blade, I could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath that I thought I should never be able to take a full breath again. The least excitement would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half-bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. I began to sleep well, had a good appetite, and improved so rapidly that when I had taken six bottles I was completely cured."

MRS. C. C. GOKEY, Northfield, Vt.

If you have any of the symptoms Mrs. Gokey mentions, it is your duty to protect yourself.

THE FLY ON THE PANE.

It Will Crawl to the Top, but Will Fly Back to the Bottom.

A fly on a window pane will crawl to the top, fly back to the bottom and crawl up again. This order is seldom reversed—why no one knows. It is on record that a fly crawled up a window pane thirty-two times, returning each time a-wing.

Hens scratch for food with the sun behind them, the reason being that the rays reflect on the minute particles. A blind hen will pick grain and not miss a kernel.

Cats seldom lie with their feet to the fire. Usually they lie on the left side. Dogs lie with their feet down to the fire.

A mouse will ignore a food supply sufficient for a meal and will great risks to nibble at a wholesale supply. It will hide at the source of food supply and not depart therefrom until actually disturbed. It isn't true that a mouse runs to its hole at the first alarm.

Find a harmless little snake the length of a lead pencil and provide a box for it in the house; visit it daily and at the end of three months it will crawl to you for food.

Goldfish usually swim around a globe to the right. They can be taught to take a fly out of the hand in six weeks' time. The presence of other fish in the globe is generally ignored by goldfish. Drop a piece of fish on the surface of the water and it will frighten a fish.

Sheep spend more time grazing than do cattle and horses. Sheep will eat for twelve hours out of twenty-four.—New York World.

His Part.

"Who is the responsible person in this firm?" asked the brusque caller of the office boy.

"Can't tell you, sir," replied the pert lad, "but I'm the one who gets all the blame."

A Light Retort.

"How did the trouble in the family start?"

"The wife, it seems, got tired of her husband's heavy wit."

"Why didn't she simply make a light retort?"

"She did. She threw the lamp at him."—Exchange

Uncommercial Liszt.

Artistic folk frequently have somewhat vague notions about business. Some are quite ignorant of it, others utterly indifferent to it, and others yet take the very name of it. One of the most eminent composers was Liszt. He had returned from a successful tour, and Princess Metternich, the wife of the celebrated statesman and diplomatist, was questioning him regarding the concerts he had been giving.

"I hear," she said, "that you did good business in Paris."

To which Liszt gave the tart reply, "I only played some music there. Business—that I leave to bankers and diplomatists."

To another lady the musical cleric gave a still more sarcastic answer. "Ah, Abbe," she sighed, "what a great fortune you would make if only you could be induced to go to America to play!"

"Madame," returned Liszt, "if you stand in need of that fortune, believe me, it would go at once."

The Address of Moses.

Moses of Scriptural fame is called by eight different names in various places in the Bible. Rachia, the daughter of Pharaoh, called him Moses because she drew him out of the water. Jocheded, his mother, called him Jehiehiel, saying, "I had hoped for him." Miriam, his sister, called him Jared because she had descended after him into the water to see what his end would be. Aaron called his brother Abi Zanuch because his father had deserted their mother. Amram, the father of Moses, called the boy Chabar because he was again reunited to the mother of the lad. Kehath, the grandfather of Moses, called him Abigdor because God had repaired the breach in the house of Jacob. The nurse of the grandfather of Moses called him Abi Socho because he was once hidden three months in the Tabernacle. All Israel called him Shemiah because "in his days God heard their cries and rescued them from their oppressors."

LATEST FROM ST. PAUL.

The latest news from our legislature at St. Paul, is that county option was defeated in the house of representatives Wednesday by a vote of 69 to 51. This puts that old cat to sleep for two years.

John Sandstad was out in his contest with Senator Stephens. and the county optionists can have the satisfaction of having one more majority vote for county option and everything else that the northern part of the state should want.

Under the plan for reapportionment Beltrami county will go with Koochiching county, and this district will have the counties of Norman-Mahnomen-Clearwater-Red Lake-Polk, and Pennington in one district, the 61st. The Fleur-de-lis.

The fleur-de-lis, the well known emblem of France, is said to have been brought from heaven by an angel to King Clovis, the having made a vow that if he gained victorious in an impending battle with the Alemanni near Cologne he would embrace Christianity. It was the national emblem until the revolution of 1789, when its tri color (white, red and blue) was adopted. The royalists in 1871 tried to restore the old emblem to the flag, but without success.—New York American.

Dot and Trousseau.

Dealing with the weaknesses of affairs, some noted for meanness, a Paris contemporary relates a good story of Frederick Lemaitre, the celebrated actor, who was shrewdest parsimonious. When his daughter was about to marry, Lemaitre agreed to provide the "dot" and the trousseau. That, it may be observed, is the French equivalent for the English "drawer" or Scottish "tocher."

When the notary came to complete the contract, and was reading the terms Lemaitre said: "The daughter of Frederick Lemaitre has not need of a dot. M. Le Notaire, strike out the dot."

The prospective son-in-law was present, and he had the courage to reply: "The daughter of Frederick Lemaitre can easily clothe herself with the fame of her father. M. Le Notaire, strike out the trousseau."

A Lucky Game of Chess.

A story is told of the Moorish prince Abul Hejex, who was thrown into prison for sedition by his brother Mohammed, king of Granada. There he remained for several years until the king, fearing he might escape, placed himself at the head of a fresh revolt and seized the crown, ordering one of his pashas to see to his immediate execution. Abul Hejex was playing at chess when the pasha came and bade him prepare for death. The prince asked for two hours' respite, which was refused. After earnest entreaty he obtained permission to finish his game. He was in no hurry about the matter, we are told, and well for him he was not, for before an hour had elapsed a messenger brought the news that Mohammed had been struck dead by apoplexy, and Abul was forthwith proclaimed king of Granada. It was indeed a royal favor for the pasha to grant, but it altered the whole current of the king's career.

GOPHERS IN OHIO

GOVERNOR AND PARTY ATTEND THE NATIONAL CORN SHOW.

WANT WANT THE 1912 SHOW

Many Honors Secured by North Star State—Gov. Eberhart Has Busy Time in Gov. Harmon's Capital.

Columbus, Ohio. — Columbus took on the aspect of a suburb of Minnesota when the governor and the other members of the Minnesota delegation, having made their plans for a strenuous campaign, began to carry them into effect.

Some of the governors of other states, though they were scheduled to speak at various meetings, put in an appearance, and Governor Eberhart had it all his own way.

Minnesotans Plan Campaign.

First of all the Minnesota delegation, numbering a score, held an organization meeting. Governor Eberhart was made chairman; C. W. Gleckler, president of the state fair board, vice chairman, and Leroy Boughner of Minneapolis, secretary. C. P. Bull, a director of the National Corn show, who reached Columbus Friday, in charge of the Minnesota exhibit, reported the progress that had been made.

Minnesota had come prepared to bid for the show in 1913 and 1914. It early became apparent, however, that the support of the city folk of Columbus was not as enthusiastic as was expected when the city obtained the show from Omaha in 1910 and it was told that there was a disposition to send it elsewhere for next year.

Immediately Minnesota's delegation resolved to change its tactics and go after the 1912 show, and a formal invitation to the directors was drawn up.

Booster literature, badges and buttons, which had been all made to read "Minnesota, 1913," were discarded and new ones incorporating the 1912 resolution were hastily ordered.

The program was interviewed and plowed in the morning. Early in the afternoon he addressed the Ohio legislature, later he spoke at the dairy show, and he made a speech at the dairymen's banquet.

The Minnesota delegation was also photographed on the capitol steps and in the governor's room and before the Minnesota booth at the show.

The Minnesota booth is crowned with a stand on which are seven exhibits, to which have been awarded the following prizes: That for the best sheaf of wheat in the world, that for the best hard wheat in the world, that for the best flax in the world, that for the best alfalfa seed in the world, that for the best black oats in the northern zone, and reserved grand champion prizes for white oats and reserved barley, which means that they will have to compete another year before the winner is decided.

To J. W. Heckman of Cokato goes the honor of showing the best sheaf of wheat in the world. C. R. Walker of Rochester was the first man to get best flax and C. R. Vansickle of Warren won the prize for best hard wheat and the two reserved championships.

A. B. Lyman of Excelsior grew the best alfalfa seed in the world in 1910.

OFFICER SHOT BY CARETAKER.

Fires When Deputy Sheriff Tries to Handcuff Wife.

Walker, Minn., Jan. 28.—Deputy Sheriff Harry McCabe was perhaps fatally shot by Charles H. Smith, caretaker of Morris Point, a summer resort on Leech Lake. McCabe went to the place to search the premises for stolen goods and Smith and his wife resisted. While endeavoring to handcuff the woman, the husband snatched a sawed-off shotgun from the wall and emptied a charge of buckshot at the officer the shot hitting him in the abdomen.

He was brought to Walker, a distance of three miles and is at the hospital, while Smith was brought in by Ike Mountjoy and a gunsmith and lodged in jail by Sheriff Delury.

PYTHIAN CANDIDATE NAMED.

Mankato Lodge Urges J. B. Richards for Grand Chancellor.

Mankato.—At a meeting of Mankato Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, the candidacy of John B. Richards of Mankato for the office of grand chancellor of Minnesota was indorsed unanimously, and it was decided to send copies of the resolutions adopted to the other lodges of the state, asking it to support the Mankato man. Mr. Richards has been grand master-at-arms and grand vice chancellor. He has for many years been an active Pythian, and has never failed to attend the grand lodge. The grand lodge will meet in May in the Twin City.

KNIGHTS RALLY TO ST. CLOUD.

Five Hundred Attend Initiation—Visiting Teams Confer Degrees.

St. Cloud.—Five hundred Knights of Columbus attended the initiation of a class of forty-seven by the local order; delegates being present from Minneapolis, St. Paul, Little Falls, Brainerd, Crookston and other points. The first degree was exemplified by the St. Cloud team, and the second and third degrees were conferred by a team from the Hennepin council of Minneapolis.

JOHNSON STATUTE SITE FIXED.

Memorial to be Placed on Capitol Ground.

St. Paul. — The Governor John A. Johnson memorial will be located on the triangular grass plot west of the approach to the main entrance of the state capitol and between Wabasha street and the Capitol drive. The sculptor will be Andrew O'Conner of Paris.

Decision covering both of these points was reached by the Johnson Memorial commission. There were eleven of the twenty members of the commission present at the meeting.

Standing above the lawn nearly twenty feet in height, the memorial will be both impesing and attractive. It will be possible to see the monument for a considerable distance and it will furnish an interesting object to people who take the interurban street car line between St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Material to be used in the casting of the statue was specified as bronze. The pedestal will consist of Minnesota granite, which will be taken from the quarries near Ortonville, while the casting of four figures surrounding the base of the memorial will be carved from an elegant and expensive kind of stone to be imported from France.

The amount the sculptor is to receive for his services was not made public, but it was said the $25,000 subscribed by the people of Minnesota would be sufficient to cover all of the costs.

CHAPLAIN COURT MARTIALED.

Rev. Mr. Dallam of Minneapolis Found Guilty of Insubordination.

Washington, D. C. — Orders issued by the war department indicate that Chaplain Dallam, of Minneapolis, has been found guilty of insubordination by a court-martial in the Philippines. The chaplain has been retired from duty with the Twelfth infantry on the recommendation of President Taft, who has commuted his sentence to six months' forfeiture of pay.

Chaplain Dallam has had a stormy career since he entered the army. When he was commissioned he was credited to the Episcopalian faith, but left the Episcopal church some time ago and became a Unitarian. The Episcopal church demanded his resignation, but President Taft, then secretary of war, refused to do this and the war department was justified in removing the chaplain for this cause.

KING CORN TO BE BOOSTED.

Minnesota Will Be Well Represented at Columbus.

St. Paul.—Minnesota will be well represented at the International Corn exposition at Columbus which commences Feb. 8. Many of the prominent men appointed by Governor Eberhart as delegates have signified their intention to attend in a body. A special car will carry the Minnesota delegation over the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad to Columbus.

The object is to land the 1912 exposition for Minneapolis. Governor Eberhart named a list of men known for their interest in the development of the state and the making public of the facts thereon, and a considerable number of those appointed have already ordered their berths reserved on the "Corn Special," which will leave St. Paul at 7:15 o'clock Tuesday evening and Minneapolis at 8 o'clock.

It is with the idea that corn growing may be made one of the most important industries of the state that such an effort is being made to bring the next exposition here.

MURDERED SHERIFF BURIED.

Smith and Wife, Alleged Slayers, Bound Over Without Bonds.

Walker.—The funeral of Deputy Sheriff Harry McCabe, who was killed while serving a search warrant on C. H. Smith, was held at the same place under the auspices of the Order of Elks of Bemidji and the Order of Redmen of this place. The service was read by Rev. Mr. Purshall of the Episcopal church, a brother Elk.

C. H. Smith and his wife were given a preliminary hearing before Justice Bond on Cass county. Attorney Funck charging both husband and wife with murder in his complaint. They both waived examination and were bound over without bonds to await the next term of district court in April.

A petition was filed in probate court Saturday praying for a guardian for the seven-year-old daughter of the Smiths. The listing will be taken up to the state school at Owatonna Wednesday by Sheriff De Lury and Miss Gertrude Jamison, probate clerk.

DULUTH'S OLDEST WOMAN DEAD

Miss Kuschura, 106, Most Aged Spinster in America.

Duluth. — Miss Victoria Kuschura, aged 106, died of old age at the residence of her niece, Mrs. John Marshall. She was born in Poland in 1804. She was the oldest citizen in Duluth and probably the oldest maiden lady in America. She retained her faculties to the last. Miss Kuschura has resided in Duluth for 30 years.

WEALTH IN DULUTH INCIDENT,

Woman Who Gave Up Street Car Seat is Left Fortune.

Everett, Wash.—Mrs. Mary Kings, wife of an Everett carpenter, was advised, that, under the will of J. S. White of Duluth, in which city White recently died, she had been willed property worth several thousand dollars.

The meeting between Mrs. Kings and White which resulted in the legacy being left her was an unusual one. Years ago, in Detroit, Mrs. Kings gave up her seat in a street car to White, who had in his arms one of his children. He obtained her name and address and said that some day she would be well repaid for her kindly action.

NEW HEAD FOR LODGE HOME.

HORTICULTURE

BEAUTY IN DRESSED WOODS

Enlarged Butt and Irregular Growths Produce Most Beautiful Lumber When Dressed.

Beauty in dressed woods is from two causes which can be found by a study of the growth of trees. The inherent cause is the grain, or the silver lines which radiate from the pith to the tree's circumference and separate each season's growth. The foreign cause is the result of irregular growth.

During the growing life of a tree there are many chances of accident that may divert a cylindrical growth or cause a variation in fiber that becomes accentuated as the tree attains its growth. When one side of a tree receives the stress of the weather, and the other is sheltered, it gives the tree a spiral growth, or a twist, as in the accompanying illustration. Each year this growth becomes more pronounced. The breaking of limbs end embrasures causes odd growths. An early warm spell will cause the sap to ascend and a cold snap will set in and check the flow of moisture before it reaches the full length of the trunk. This causes a enlarged butt and irregular fiber. These irregular growths produce the most beautifully dressed lumber.

TO PLANT TREES CORRECTLY

Planting Board is of Great Convenience When Rows Have Been Established.

A good method is to establish base lines at right angles on say the south and east sides of the ground and mensuro accurately the distance and drive a peg exactly where each tree is to stand. A planting board is necessary. Prior to running the lines where a tree is to stand place the board on the ground, letting the central notch inclose the peg. Staken for the purpose are pushed in the ground through the holes at each end of the board. The hole at one end is large enough to permit of lifting that end of the board without withdrawing the stake. This being done, and the board swung around out of the way the opening for the roots is dug. Now the board is swung back in its first position. By inserting the stem of the tree in the notch it occupies the position marked originally by the peg.

Pruning and Tree Surgery.

Systematic pruning and tree surgery are very closely related. Tree surgery includes the intelligent protection of all mechanical injuries and diseases. Pruning requires a practical intimate knowledge of the habits of growth of trees; surgery, on the other hand, requires, in addition, a knowledge of the best methods for making cavities air-tight and preventing decay. The caring for cavities in trees must be urged as the only means of preserving affected specimens, and the preservation of many noble specimens has been at least temporarily assured through efforts of those practicing the kind of work.

Manure for Small Fruits.

Many practical growers find it profitable to use manure rather freely for raspberries and blackberries. This may be applied at any time during the winter, but should not be too coarse or it will interfere with tillage. Ten to fifteen tons per acre should materially increase profits.

Manure on Berry Beds.

A little strawy manure strewn over the berry beds, and over the roots of the berry bushes, will do much to keep them from starting too early in the spring and to preserving their greatest vitality.

Old Apple Trees.

Apple trees live to great age in Maine and all of New England, but never get to any great size. In the latter they are very much like the Pacific coast states.

EXCELLENT GRAIN FIELDS IN WESTERN CANADA

YIELDS OF WHEAT AS HIGH AS 54 BUSHELS PER ACRE.

Now that we have entered upon the making of a new year, it is natural to look back over the past one, for the purpose of ascertaining what has been done. The business man and the farmer have taken stock, and both, if they are keen in business detail and interest, know exactly their financial position. The farmer of Western Canada is generally a business man, and in his stock-taking he will have found that he has had a successful year. On looking over a number of reports sent from various quarters, the writer finds that in spite of the visitation of drouth in a small portion of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, many farmers are able to report splendid crops. And these reports come from different sections, covering an area of about 25,000 square miles. As, for instance, at Leiid, Saskatchewan, the crop returns showed that J. B. Peters had 13,000 bushels from 320 acres, or nearly 40 bushels to the acre. In the Blaine Lake district the fields ranged from 16 to 50 bushels per acre, Ben Craws having 1,150 bushels from 24 acres; Edmond Trotter 1,500 bushels off 30 acres, while fields of 50 bushels were common. On poorly cultivated fields but 15 bushels were reported.

In Foam Lake (Sask.) district 100 bushels of oats to the acre were secured by Angus Robertson, D. McRae and C. H. Hart, while the average was 85. In wheat 30 bushels to the acre were quite common on the newer land, but off 15 acres of land cultivated for the past three years George E. Wood secured 498 bushels. Mr. James Treynor, near Regina (Sask.) is still on the sheaf side of thirty. He had 50,000 bushels of grain last year, half of which was wheat. Its market value was $25,000. He says he is well satisfied.

Arthur Somers of Strathcona threshed 100 acres, averaging 25 bushels to the acre. Thomas Foreman, of Billestem, threshed 11,000 bushels of wheat, and 3,000 bushels of flax off 600 acres of land. W. Weatherstone, of Strathclair, threshed 5,000 bushels of oats from 96 acres. Mr. McGillis, of Gillies, about twenty-five miles west of Southern, Sask., had his bushels from 3 acres of wheat. Mr. Gonella's general average of crop was over 40 bushels to the acre. Mr. Cruiss, a neighbor, averaged 45 bushels to the acre from 53 acres. W. A. Rose, of the Waldeniar district, threshed 6,000 bushels of wheat from 240 acres, an average of 25 bushels, 100 acres was on an average of oats that averaged 33 bushels. He had also an average of 60 bushels of oats to the acre on a 50-acre field. Wm. Lahmin, who has a farm close to Rosthern, had an average of 27 bushels to the acre on 60 acres of summer fallow. Mr. Midsky, of Rapid City (Minn.) threshed 1,000 bushels of oats from 7 acres.

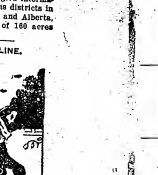
The yield of the different varieties of wheat per acre at the Experimental Farm, Brandon, was: Red Fife, 28 bushels; White Fife, 34 bushels; Prosper, 31 bushels; early Red Fife, 27 bushels.

The crops at the C. P. R. demonstration farms at Strathmore (Alberta) proved up to expectations, the Swedish variety oats yielding 110 bushels to the acre. At the farm two rowed barley went 48½ bushels to the acre. Yields of from 60 bushels to 100 bushels of oats to the acre were quite common in the Sturgeon River Settlement near Edmonton (Alberta). But last year was uncommonly good and the hundred mark was passed. Wm. Craig had a yield of oats from a measured plot, which gave 107 bushels and 20 lbs. per acre.

Stewart Teskey, of Olds (Alberta) threshed a 100-acre field which yielded 101 bushels of oats per acre, and Joseph McCartner had a large field equally good. At Cupar (Sask.) oats threshed 80 bushels to the acre. On the Touquins farm at Cupar, a five-acre plot of Marquis wheat yielded 54 bushels to the acre, while Laurence Barkand had 37 bushels of flax off 5 the acre. At Wordsworth, Reeder Bros.' wheat averaged 33¼ bushels to the acre, and W. McMillan's 35. Hiem Krefft of Ailz (Alberta) threshed 1,042 bushels of winter wheat off 19½ acres, or about 53 bushels to the acre. John Laycroft of Dinton, near High River, Alberta, had over 1,100 bushels of spring wheat from 50 acres.

E. F. Knipe, near Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, had 800 bushels of wheat from 20 acres. W. Metcalf had over 31 bushels to the acre, while S. Henderson, who was hailed badly, had an average return of 32 bushels of wheat to the acre.

McWhirter Bros. and John McInnis, of of Redvers, Saskatchewan, had 25 bushels of wheat to the acre. John Kennedy, east of the Horse Hills district near Edmonton, had an average of spring wheat got 1,767 bushels, or 44 bushels to the acre.



J. E. Vanderburgh, near Daysiow, Alberta, threshed four thousand bushels of wheat from 120 acres. Mr. D'Arcy, near there, threshed one thousand and fifty-eight bushels (machine measure) of wheat from five hundred acres, and out of this only sixty acres was new land.

At Fleming, Sask., A Winter's wheat averaged 39 bushels to the acre, and several others report heavy yields. Mr. Winter's crop was not on summer fallow, but on a piece of land broken in 1882 and said to be the first broken in the Fleming district.

The agent of the Canadian government will be pleased to give information regarding the various districts in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, where free homesteads of 160 acres are available.

Careless and Cappy.

We have undertaken to blend in one the best of the two proverbial conditions—to be careless and happy, heirless and cappy. We are now happy and cappy, and frequently careless as well. A pretty figure may be confured up—a figure in leaf-green satin veiled with rose and silver shot gauze. This shot gauze hir is covered by a sailor's cap, point and all, worn flatly over the whole head, the point falling at the back, instead of being made of scarlet cashmere, it is of the gauze, over silver lisse, and studded with gold and yellow topaz, while it is bordered with great gray pear shaped pearls, these, of course, hanging around the back of the neck and over the soft hair in front.

We have taken to caps!

Had an Eye to the Future.

"It would probably take many generations of adversity to train Americans into the farseeing thriftiness of my people," once observed a Scottish patriot of Scotch birth. "I remember a case of a Scotch woman who had been married to a new bonnet for years. Before she undertook the purchase the lady called and asked the good woman:

"Would you rather have a felt or a straw bonnet, Mrs. Carmichael?"

"'Weel,' responded Mrs. Carmichael thoughtfully, 'I think I'll tak' a straw bonnet, I'll may be no mouthy't out by when I'm done wi' it.'"—Lippincott's Magazine.

PAINFUL FINGER NAILS CURED

"I have suffered from the same trouble (painful finger nails) at different periods of my life. The first time of its occurrence, perhaps twenty-five years ago, after trying home remedies without getting helped, I asked my doctor to prescribe for me, but it was not for a year or more that my nails and fingers were well. The inflammation and suppuration began at the base of the finger nail. Sometimes it was so painful that I had to use a poultice to induce suppuration. After the pus was discharged the swelling would go down until the next period of inflammation, possibly not more than a week or two afterwards. These frequent inflammations resulted in the loss of the nail. I had sometimes as many as three fingers in this state at one time.

"Perhaps ten years later I began again to suffer from the same trouble. Again I tried various remedies, among them a prescription from a doctor of a friend of mine, who had suffered from a like trouble. This seemed to help somewhat for a time, but it was not a permanent cure; next tried a prescription from my own doctor, but this was so irritating to the sensitive, diseased skin that I could not use it. I began to use Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I had used the Cuticura Ointment previously on my children's scalps with good effect. I did not use the Soap exclusively, but I rubbed the Cuticura Ointment into the base of the nail every night thoroughly, and as often beside as I could. I had not used it but a few weeks before my nails were better, and in a short time they were apparently well. There was no more suppuration, nor inflammation, the nails grew out clean again. One box of Cuticura Ointment was all that I used in effecting a cure." (Signed) Mrs. I. J. Horton, Katonah, N. Y., Apr. 13, 1910. On Sept. 23, Mrs. Horton wrote: "I have had no further return of the trouble with my finger nails."

Feminine.

A local ironworker who had been married a couple of years always declared that his first son should be named Mat, after one of his best friends.

Learning that the ironworker and his wife had recently been blessed with a charming baby, the friend smiled all over his face when he greeted the father on the street.

"Well," he beamed, "how is little Mat?"

"Mat, nothing," answered the father; "it's Mottress."—Youngstown Telegram.

Very Tortuous Indeed.

The late Hugh J. Grant of New York once talked at a political banquet, about a noted corporation lawyer.

"Oh, yes, he's a grand mind," he said. "A grand legal mind. He's got the most tortuous mind in America."

Mr. Grant shook his head.

"A tortuous mind indeed," he repented. "Why, if he swallowed a nail, he'd bring up a screw."

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Jan. 31. — A complete change of the Minnesota inheritance tax system is provided for in a bill by Representative Knudsend, of Minneapolis. It would absolutely change the basis of taxation and is in line with the suggestions made by the state tax commission.

Representative Orr introduced a bill in the house allowing juries to determine whether murderers are to be hanged or imprisoned for life. Representative Skartum introduced a bill making it a misdemeanor to use false weights. Representative H. Nelson introduced a bill compelling education of children. A concurrent resolution memorializing congress to oppose the proposed reciprocity agreement with Canada was introduced by Representative S. N. Lee. Andrew Davis presented a bill appropriating $5,000 for the support of n home for the ladies of the G. A. R. at Anoka. The house passed the resolution favoring San Francisco for the Panama exposition in 1916.

St. Paul, Feb. 1.—The house, sitting as a committee of the whole, recommended for passage the Sundeen bill, which increases the amount of recovery for deaths by accident to $7,500. Representative Hopkins offered an amendment removing the limit entirely in fatal accidents. This was voted down on the ground that it would fail to pass both houses and nothing would be accomplished.

A bill making it unlawful to treat in saloons was introduced by Representative Putnam.

Donald Robertson submitted a bill licensing and regulating peddlers.

A bill appropriating $94,597.35 to pay the men who fought the forest fires in upper Minnesota in October, 1910, was introduced by Representatives Orvell and Webb.

Senator Dwinnell presented resolution which was adopted directing the judiciary committee to draw constitutional amendments to give the legislature more power to administer state lands. This was done in the ballot tote the carrying out of Governor Eberhart's recommendation that state departments to administer state lands be established.

Senator Dwinnell introduced a bill lution that the judiciary committee should draw up constitutional amendments that would give the legislature power to create state departments to administer land laws.

Senator Handlan had a bill to increase the personal property exempt from taxation from $100 to $400.

St. Paul, Feb. 2.Spooner's inland waterways bill which covers the Merschon plan of canalization in Minnesota was recommended for passage by the general legislation committee of the house.

Strict regulations for automobile drivers are embodied in a bill presented by Senator Dwinnell.

In the first place it provides that no person under 16 years may operate an automobile under any circumstances, and that persons between 16 and 21 years of age must have written indorsements from parents or guardians when applying for licenses. The bill provides that no person be permitted to operate an auto without a license. On applying for licenses applicants must toll the license inspectors whether or not they have ever been convicted of violating any auto ordinance, and if so, retain the circumstances. On subsequent conviction, the license may be suspended for a period for six months or less.

The house committee on state fair recommended for adoption the concurrent resolution introduced by Senator Dwinnell which calls for a legislative investigation of the management of the state fair under the Underwood-Cosgrove regime. The committee recommended, however, that the committee should ha made up of five instead of nine members.

Senator Dale introduced a bill which provides that on complaint that say school building is unsanitary or unsafe, the state board of health shall investigate and if the building is found so it shall order it closed.

Senator Nelson introduced and had passed under suspended rules a bill directing that $500,000 of state surplus money ba devoted to the redeeming of school certificates.

St. Paul, Feb. 3.—

Reapportionment was turned down in the senate by n vote of 31 to 25. The resolution to limit the number of senators to 63 and the number of representatives to 126 was indefinitely postponed. This is the same resolution that passed the house last week by an overwhelming vote. The vote, following a crimonious debate in which it was freely charged that those voted to indefinately postpone, voted against reapportionment.

Charges of dilatory tactics aid unfair play flew thickly about the east of the senators. Senator Works objected to the passage of the resolution on the ground that ao bill had been presented and it was unfair to tie the senate's hands by a previous limitation.

Hackney defended the resolution, saying the bill could be amended when presented on the floor, J. D. Sullivan explained his vote against the resolution when it came up for passage under suspended rules by saying there was no necessity for hurry at that time, but he would vote for it now. Cheadle asked that the resolution ha passed.

Vots in Detail.

The roll cnll was as follows:

Yeas—Ahman, Boyle, Cheadle, Dengler, Dunn, Dwinnell, Elwell, Fossum, Freshaug, Gundersen, Gunn, Hackney, Hinnson, Johnson, C. D., Johnson V. L., Johnston, Lende, L'Hernault, Marden, Pauly, Pugh, Rustad, Sageng, Saugstad, Sullivan, J. D., Sundberg, Swansea, Wallace, Wilson—29.

Nays—Anderson, Bedford, Benson, Carpenter, Cashman, Clague, Collet, Cook, C.F., Cooke, L.O., Dale, Donaldson, Dues, Duxbury, Glotshaich, Handlan, Haycraft, Klein, McGrath, Moonan, Murray, Nelson, Odell, Olson, Peterson, Putnam, Schallar, Stehlke, Thoe, Van Hoeven, Wels, Works—21.

Absent—Peterson, Reckee, G. H. Sullivan.

On the motion to adopt the report indefinately postponing the bill the senate roll cnll was demanded with the same result 31 to 29.

The R. C. Lunn good roads bills passed the house. The bill providing for an annual appropriation of $150,000 for the supervision of good roads building to 5s placed nt the disposal of the state highway commission passed by a vote of 106 to 5. Representatives Campbell and Lundeen of Minneapolis were the only members who opposed this bill.

On the bill providing or a constitutional amendment allowing an annual tax of one mill for constructing good roads, the vote was 109 to 1. Campbell was the only member to oppose this bill.

The workingman's compensation bill was introduced in the senate. Senators Fosseen, Wilson, Schaller and Moonan were the authors. It was referred to committee without any speeches.

Department of agriculture, manual training and domestic economy in state graded and high schools are provided in a bill introduced by Senator Putnam. Practical subjects, such as questions relating to soils, crops, stock breeding, stock judging, and disease and kindred things are to be taught.

The house committee appointed by Speaker Dunn to investigate the R. C. Dunn bill, which provides for an appropriation of $28,100 to pay 281 state newspapers for printing the proposed constitutional amendments in October, 1910, will make its report next Tuesday. The report will contain charges of Schmahl, secretary of state, for overstepping his authority in selecting newspapers to print the amendments. The bill passed two years ago provided for the publication of the amendments in not more than three papers in any county. The report will say that Mr. Schmahl had the amendments printed in 19 more papers than allowed by law, at n cost of $1,900. Chairman Moriarity, of the investigating committee, does not favor compelling the secretary of state to pay the $1,900 overexpenditure, but suggests that in the futura stata officials stay within the law.

Representative W. F. Kunz introduced his educational bill in the house, providing for a stata board of education and reorganizing the state educational system in every way. It eliminates the state normnl board, the high school board, stata literary board, state public school library commission, board of managers of the state public school at Owatonna and the board of directors of the Minnesota schools for the deaf and blind.

The Moonen primary bill, providing for the direct nomination of state officers, has been reported favorably. Tha is the first big primary bill in the session. It states that voters in the primaries shall state their party affiliations.

Beautifying the capitol grounds by commission is provided for in a bill introduced by Senator Denegra of St. Paul. It provides for the appointment of three commissioners by the governor to buy lands adjoining or near the capitol grounds and beautify them.

Simple way for any family to retain the good health of all its members.

The editors of "Health Hints" and "Questions and Answers" have run across a plan that helps them more often than any others, and which is so unusual in its simplicity that the most difficult to believe. That is "How can I cure my constipation?"

Dr. Caldwell, an eminent specialist in diseases of the stomach, liver and bowels has looked the whole field over, has practically the specialty for forty years and is the originator of the ingredients contained in what is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and the best claim to attention from constipated people.

Its success in the cure of stubborn constipation has done much to displace the use of salts, waters, strong cathartics and such things. Syrup Pepsin is soothing the stomach and bowel muscles to help them move naturally, and with regular use tends to strengthening the nerves, bringing about a normal action. Among its strongest supporters are Mr. John Graveline of 98 Milwaukee Ave., Detroit, Mich., Mr. J. A. Vernon of Ottawa City and thousands of others. It can be obtained of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, or if you like to try it first a free sample bottle can be obtained by writing the doctor.

Danville Judge Orders Prosecutor to Answer All Questions Put by Jury in Sriba Quiz.

Danville, Ill.—Judge Kimbrough in the circuit court handed down a decision that will compel Prosecutor Jones, who declined to answer certain questions concerning vote selling and buying which the grand jury put to him.

The court instructed Jones to answer all questions. The opinion stated that, according to a decision of the Illinois supreme court in the Bates case, a witness before the grand jury is immune from indictment. The court held that by this decision the law is unconstitutional, which means that Jones cannot be questioned about happenings more than eighteen months ago.

This means that this investigation will continue until all the witnesses now summoned are examined. It is said that many indictments have been voted, but whether they are for vote selling is not known.

WHY THEY COME

By MARY GRACE QUACKENBOS

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

SCANT one-third of the immigrants who land on our shores come voluntarily and of an intelligent desire to better their condition by hard work. Of these it is not the purpose of this article to treat. The remainder of the great throng pouring from foreign countries come here because they have been caught up and tern away from their native homes by the superior power of a vast and intricate "machine." In its main outlines this "machine" may be likened to se enormous dredging apparatus stretching forth gigantic claws to every port of Europe, catching up and heaving back loads of emigrants collected from every corner of the eastern hemisphere by the tireless efforts of no less than 50,000 steamship agents and their canvassers. The fuel which energizes this colossal structure is an equally colossal greed for yearly dividends, and the combined intellects controlling our greatest steamship and railroad companies may be said to represent the engineer. The pivot upon which the entire mechanism turns is fraud and evasion of the United States immigration law.

No large city in the United States is without its element of foreign-born parchasable voters, criminal cliques, "black handers," anarchists, paupers, its "cheap labor" supply controlled by foreign-born contractors, its overcrowded tenements breeding disease; furthermore, a careful estimate shows that about 90 per cent. of the unaccompanied immigrant male adults who enter our country are legally ineligible.

Our laws are therefore an ever recurrent subject of controversy. Yet, despite all discussion, no person will dispute but that an immigrant is desirable from every anno standpoint, if he has a reasonable amount of intelligence, is physically sound and of good moral character, is possessed of sufficient money earned by himself to cover the expenso of his journey and comes here of his own lolitative, capable for work, but not under contract to work at a wago which will lower the American standard. But this is plain language is precisely what our present immigration law requires; it is the legal definition of immigrant desirability.

To understand the real evil underlying the present condition of immigration we must take into consideration that while our illustrated theorists are consuming reams of paper with interesting affections upon the "problem," while our country is in its chronic state of optimism over present conditions, whatever they are—and while our legislators are engaged in the passage of new, unnecessary and often impractical laws—thousands of foreigners excludable under the laws already passed are being yearly dumped upon our shores by various interests which work together as one machine. It is well known that the fabulous profits derived from an artificially stimulated immigration are participated in by the allied interests of the transatlantic steamship companies, the Ellis island railroad pool and the Atlantic coast line steamship lines. Co-operating, as they do, they run automatically of their own weight, practically without friction, and thrive by reason of a centrifuging abnormal immigrant supply. They sit combine upon a single instrument—namely, the European steamship agent—to solicit a trade in immigrants that will appreciably increase passenger fares. He it is who, actuated by prospective fees which are dependent upon sales made, gives impulse to the "machine" by selling its "through tickets" in every European town and hamlet.

The several affiliated steamship lines, having created their zones of influence, enjoy what is practically a monopoly upon the sale of steerage tickets, and by spreading their field agents over the entire European territory from which immigrants are drawn they effectively suppress competition.

At the immigrant goleway of America, all these lines converge to hand over their immigrant cargoes to the other participants in the "machine."

From the vantage point at Ellis island the railroad "pool"—known as the "Immigrant Clearing House," which is a combination of thirteen of our largest railroads, together with one of the consolidated steamship companies—takes the immigrants in hand to tax and forward them to every point to the country at special third-class rates.

The railroad "pool" finds it profitable to pay to the United States an annual rental of $4,000 for its headquarters on government ground, where it sells special tickets "for the benefit of ship immigrants only" for rail transportation from New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore to about 7,000 selected places in the interior of the United States. Since these tickets, sold either in Europe or at Ellis island, are cheaper in price than can be obtained by our citizens, the plain intent of congress to close every avenue against railroad rate discrimination, as expressed in the laws relating to interstate commerce, is clearly defied. Further, the "committee" by which this "pool" is managed restricts its private rate book—"Joint Tariff No. 13"—to the use of the European steamship agents and the "pool" "joint agents" here, and it is said that the individual companies of the "pool" share in succession in the lucrative profits.

It is also said that the railroad companies, as well as the coastwise steamship companies, regularly pay commissions for inland transportation to the Atlantic steamship companies, where such transportation is purchased from the European steamship agents of these steamship companies in Europe.

And so the "machine" as an aggregate of these commercial interests—with its employment of not less than 50,000 European agents and sub-agents whose sole purpose is to pack the steerage and load the trains—with its secret operations fortified by enormous resources, backed by the best intelligence in both continents—is practically in control of all the channels of immigration.

Vigorous attempts are being made to successfully combat every law now before congress which will reduce the number of these agents by restricting immigration, while repeated violations of our present laws are regularly practised and may be classed under two main heads.

I.—SOLICITING AN ARTIFICIAL EMIGRATION IN EUROPE FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE STEAMSHIP COMPANIES.

II.—MAKING CERTAIN THE ADMISSION OF IMMIGRANTS INTO THIS COUNTRY TO PREVENT A REDUCTION OF PROFITS.

Under the first heading the specific violations are:

(a) SOLICITING EMIGRANTS.

This is "forbidden on the part of transportation companies, owners of vessels or others engaged in transporting aliens into the United States." For every violation there is a penalty of $1,000.—(Sec. 7, U. S. Immigration Act of February 20, 1907.)

(b) IMPORTING CONTRACT LABORERS.

This includes those who have been "assisted, encouraged or induced to migrate by offers or promises of employment or in consequences of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled, for ever, violation of this law there is a penalty of $1,000.—(Sec. 2, U. S. Immigration Act of February 20, 1907.)

(c) ASSISTING ALIENS TO MISREPRESENT OR REPAYING THEIR PASSAGE.

"One whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come," is an excludable alien.—(Sec. 2, U. S. Immigration Act, February 20, 1907.)

In a single case three of these violations are often found. The following is an illustration.

A well-known American citizen, and a member of the Mississippi bar, is a member of a firm of cotton, "factors" which employs Italian immigrants upon its plantations. An Italian steamship agent, Romeo brother solicited emigrants in Italy, worked in this plantation commissary. It was the agent's practice to extract from immigrants upon the plantation the names and addresses of their kinfolk living in Italy. These he forwarded to his brother, who in turn persuaded them to become cotton workers. Such remunerative commissions resulted that the agent soon left the planter's commissary and, moving to a business center in the Yazoo delta district, built up upon an extensive scale a general business of importing contract laborers, which he termed "Italian products." He published the following notice:

ITALIANS!

If you have not money to send passage fares to your relatives, I have the possibility of making them come here with the understanding that they will place themselves where they are assigned; made the most favorable conditions the best."

He furnished laborers for the surrounding cotton farmers, and among other influential patrons was the planter named above, who ordered a number of Italians for a second plantation which he controlled. Names of persons in Italy were accordingly furnished and the planter sent the agent a check of some $3,950.50, with which to purchase "prepaid tickets," as well as $750 which was to be divided among the sow arrivals in sums of $10 each for display at Ellis island. As a matter of fact the planter's money and gone from his pocket to the "machine" via the Mississippi agent, also via the same agent to the agent of the steamship line, and from thence to the steamship agent in Italy, who delivered "through tickets" to the Italians.

The Italian families promised before they left Italy to work out their transportation here, but it was the planter's policy to take the extra precaution of charging the advance he made against the account of the Italian who furnished him names, which secure him against loss in case his imported laborers were refused a landing. The agent, however, arranged with this Italian to write the expected cotton workers individually and direct them how to violate the United States immigration law by giving them the following instructions:

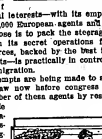
They must pay great attention not to know at all that they have somebody in America who has prepared work for them or that they, the families, have entered into an agreement or contract.

If they say anything the opposite of what I am telling you they will absolutely be sent back to Italy.

Also you will have to inform those families that the necessary money for their landing in New York will be handed them when they arrive to that city.

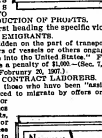
This shows plainly the three violations of law mentioned before —this Italian was were solicited, they were imported as contract laborers and their tickets were prepaid. All but one or two entered the country successfully, making their false statements at Ellis island, insisting, as per instructions given, that they themselves had paid for their tickets, that the money they exhibited was their own and also that they had made no contracts for work.

The unique feature about this transaction is that the planter, being a lawyer, availed himself of the legal quibble of calling his imported laborers "settlers," when as a matter of fact they were clearly contract laborers, whose entrance into this country is prohibited by law.

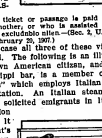


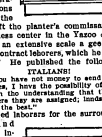
An even more striking law-breaking practice, however—and one which cannot fail to be a serious menace to our nation's welfare because of its so far-reaching—is that in which the immigrant appears as principal and commits perjury in violation of section 24 of the act of February 20, 1907, when he encounters the immigrant inspectors of board of special inquiry at Ellis island. In this case he may be punished severely, if detected, while the steamship agent, as subornor and accessory before the fact, has no cause for trepidation, being beyond the arm of the law if he keeps out of the country. This violation falls under the general head No. II before mentioned, and is explained as follows:

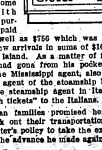
Before the "machine" begins to load its daily steerage hold with emigrants the agent carefully coaches them in the questions and answers which constitute the Ellis island inspection. This is intended to secure a clean bill for the "machine," the agent and his employers seeming dom from detection. These questions and answers the emigrant receives from the agent, together with his steerage ticket; he is told to commit them to memory and not to forget to throw the paper into the sea before the ship reaches America. It is made clear to him that to answer the questions according to the list, regardless of fact, is a prerequisite for entrance into the United States.



The steamship agent and sub-agent have come to be the most unique figures in European life today. By their secrecy, collusion and the







from the agent, together with his steerage ticket; he is told to commit them to memory and not to forget to throw the paper into the sea before the ship reaches America. It is made clear to him that to answer the questions according to the list, regardless of fact, is a prerequisite for entrance into the United States.

The steamship agent and sub-agent have come to be the most unique figures in European life today. By their secrecy, collusion and the alarming. They hold the rest key to the immigration situation.

An idea as to the extent of the returns may be gathered from what was told me by a steamship agent in a small community of the southern Peloponnesus, Greece—a town so far from a railroad that one must ride also hours on mule back to reach the nearest station. This worthy said that in five years he had cleared in drachmas a sum equal to $30,000. He had been in the United States to study the commercial aspect of immigration, and his brother was a Greek consul here. Returning home, all he had to do was to talk and talk again everywhere — on the road, in the coffee houses, on the village green, near the fountain at sunset when men rest their cattle and women draw water. He was "friend" to the illiterate, the despondent and to the poverty-stricken; he proffered sympathy to those who were heavily taxed; he listened to the various events in their lives and awakened the dormant impulse to migrate which is born to every human heart. Thus he created a demand for his steerage tickets by spreading discontent with home surroundings and by arousing hope and enthusiasm for America, always promising that there "everything will be all right."

Hardly any commercial enterprise in Europe is more remunerative than that of encouraging emigration. From the sale of a single ticket several fees accrue which, fully computed, range from five to twenty-five dollars per capita. There is a commission upon the sale of the steerage ticket, another for the railroad ticket and the agent charges a third fee the emigrant if he can; extra fees are added for procuring various official papers which the emigrant had to take necessary fees are taxed for placing loans, mortgages and making loans of money secured by the promise of friends in the community, for which interest runs as high as 60 or 80 per cent.; while the "helper" who escort the emigrants to embarking points and march them to the ship—likewise emigrant-house keepers, money exchangers, ship interpreters—must be paid. On this side of the water at Ellis Island, there are other specialtors, various persons "interested in the welfare of aliens," that insist upon sending telegrams for them, selling them food, changing their money, handling their baggage; and, frequently, on a plea of escorting them to their place of destination, runners will "guide" immigrants into the hands of some labor agent by which they are paid, thus drawing double fees.

One may think the agent conscienceless in his greed for gain, but, on the other hand, he is gleaning profits greater than his own, for men far above him in the business world, "The machine" depends upon him for passenger fares; contractors depend upon him for gangs of "greeners" to dominate and exploit; American employers beckon to the cheap labor which he alone can procure; even his own government may be tempted to withhold interference with all his maneuvers, for he is not an instrument through which wealth and benefit to his nation is accumulated? Bank deposits certainly are augmented through his efforts; economic and industrial conditions are improved; the large head tax dues which he gleaned through his efforts brings a substantial increase to his exchequer revenue; while the relief from supporting too many poor, from educating too many illiterates, perhaps also the temptation to quietly scatter criminals—(who knows)—all are surely brought about through the efforts of the steamship agent. The respect accorded to him by all seems only to increase his zeal.

Mastering the situation from all sides, he systematizes his work and makes it efficient through a painstaking, persistent study of the inner chasms of Europe—their weaknesses and their wants, that with a knowledge of human psychology he trains his son from early manhood in all the intricacies of his subtle trade. In time he becomes all that is astute, and he is never discouraged, and is able to wheedle almost every person within his reach into the belief that America is the great and only goal.

We have seen that our government defends a boot-licker daily by thousands of foreigners, deposited at our ports by those allied interests, carefully coached to say by their agents. Hardly has it starts the immigrant upon his journey; fraud lands him in America. Fraud is begun when the very name "America!" The immigrant does not fully realize he is doing, his trust in his own countrymen and not in the people of a strange land.

Culture at any Cost

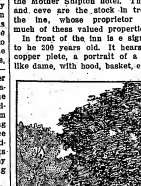
"We came back from Sicily this October," said a literary woman, "on a big emigrant boat. Along with myself 1,500 Hungarians were five Americans, forced, like ourselves, out of their regular route by the cholera in Naples. They had embarked at Piume and we were left with friends with each other and with the officers, so we newcomers decided not to "mix in," but to spend most of our time reading. There was only the officer's wife, Mother Shipton by name, while book in it was open, we could see that she was reading. Henry James, so I'm going to stick to it right straight through the whole voyage!

"And she did."

HOME OF A SEERESS

Where Mother Shipton, the Noted Prophetess, Lived.

Story of Her Birth and Scope of Her Remarkable Prophecies—Foretold the Automobile and the Flying Machine.



London. — This little village of Knaresborough in Yorkshire, is locally celebrated as the native place of Mother Shipton, the seeress, although the guide books do not mention that it is her birthplace.

The house in which was born the remarkable old women who foretold the flying machine, the wireless telegraph, the automobile and such latter-day wendrs nearly four centuries before their introductice, is no longer standing.

There is a reminder of the prophetess in the village, however, in the form of a curious well, known as the Dropping well, near which stood the cottage in which she was born.

Over the well is a cave, known as Mother Shipton's cave, and in the immediate neighborhood is an inn called the Mother Shipton hotel. The well and cave are the stock in trade of the inn, whose proprietor makes much of these valued properties.

In front of the inn is a sign, said to be 200 years old. It bears on a copper plate, a portrait of a witch like dame, with hood, basket, cat and stick, and the legend: "Mother Shipton. Near this petrifying well, I first drew breath as seeress. Time be telling. In the familiar doggerel of the prophecies.

The hotel keeper, gaging properly the widespread interest felt in Mother Shipton, has issued a volume of convenient size containing a sketch of her life, as well as her leading prophecies and their interpretation. This he sells to his visitors at 4 cents a copy. The title of the book is "The Life and Prophecies of Ursula Southeil, better known as Mother Shipton."

According to the text, many and varied accounts have been published of the life of Mother Shipton. She was the child of an orphan girl named Agotha Southeil, who lived near the dropping well. Agatha was born about 1477, or 20 years before the discovery of America. Her child was misshapen. The date of her birth is set at July, 1488. After the child's birth—it was named Ursula—the mother retired to a convent.

Ursula Southeil grew up into an unusually keen girl, though she was far from lovely, being of indifferent size, large bones, crooked limbs, long nose and goggling eyes.

Her mental powers were first noticed by her ability as a careful scholer. She was said also to have had a peculior power over the school fellows, and skilled how to pull their hair, pinch them and throw them to the ground without being near them.

Ursula was neither so ugly a person nor so uncanny in mind that she could not find a husband, and when 24 years old she married one Toby Shipton of Shipton, near York.

Thencefoth she was known as "Mother" Shipton. Her fame as a prophetess was of gradual growth, beginning locally, and extending throughout England. Her first efforts were the neighborhood lassies who wished advice or advice in matters of the heart. After telling them as they came whether lovers would be true or false, Mother Shipton branched out on a seeress in the broader affairs of the nation, and finally of the entire world, and counted among her clients the nobility and high church dignitaries.

Through frequent repetition in the prints of the present time, her prophecies are familiar. Many of them related to things that were unknown in England, and did happen, such os the accession of Queee Elizobeth and her long reign; the death of Mary queen of Scots; the great plague of London, and the great fire; the various wars of three centuries; the destruction of the Spanish armada; the reign of James I; the gunpowder plot; the union in marriage of the royal houses of England with those of German blood and many other things.

The things of greater range foretold by Mother Shipton were Sir Walter Raleigh's discovery and transportation to England of the tobacco plant and the potato, its automobile, the telegraph; iron ships, tunnels under water, the steom engine and many other things that have come into the world as Mother Shipton foretold.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Make Plans to Beautify the Capital

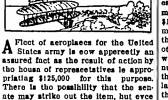
WASHINGTON.—One decided step toward making the national capital the most beautiful city in the world architecturally was taken recently when the designs for three great buildings for the federal government were selected. Fifty-nine architects from all over the country competed. The buildings will cost nearly $5,000,000, and are to be erected on Pennsylvania avenue, facing the White House grounds. They will house the department of state, the department of justice and the department of commerce and labor.

The spaces that these great structures will occupy were selected nearly a century and a quarter ago. Major L'Enfant, a French engineer, laid out the plan of Washington in 1792. It is said he so arranged the streets that it would be impossible, in case of riot or insurrection, for barricades to be built, as they were in Paris in the days of the Terror. On his plan he designated various places where the great public buildings of the future should be put. For nearly half a hundred years Major L'Enfant was regarded as an impractical dreamer, although his street plan was adhered to.

It was only after the civil war that people began to realize in a small way that his vision of the future greatness of the nation's capital was likely to come true some day. But even up to ten years or so ago his plans slumbered in the archives of the government. Then they were taken out and studied in the light of modern development, and it was found they could not be improved upon, and that if they were carried out in every detail Washington would surpass every other city in the world in beauty.

The completion of these ancient plans of this French engineer is still far away, for it will take many years and much money to carry out them in all their details. But the three massive buildings whose location was designated under the new plan are most important step toward their fulfillment that has been taken since the capitol was erected.

Need of Hog Cholera Serum Reported



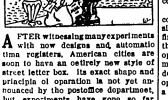
THE bureau of animal industry of the agricultural department expresses the hope that many state legislatures will take up the question of providing for the production of the government hog cholera serum. The federal experts are convinced of the efficacy of this serum. They believe that if the proper effort is put forth by states hog cholera will be practically eaten.

State officials who display interest in the subject are asked to send representatives to the bureau's experiment farm, at Ames, Ia., where the methods of producing the serum are explained. It is also the policy of the bureau to furnish a limited amount of the serum and a few immuno hogs to the states that are just starting in the work. Within the last year practical demonstrations of what may be accomplished through the use of this new serum have been successfully carried out in Maryland, Virginia, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky and Tennessee.

Most of these demonstrations consisted of treating a part of the diseased herd and leaving the remainder untreated. At Kansas City, however, a more thorough test was made, the results of which were very interesting and demonstrated conclusively the efficiency of the serum as a preventive for hog cholera.

The test was made in the stockyards at Kansas City, on the request of the Kansas City Live Stock exchange and of individuals interested in the subject. Thirty-five young shoats were purchased from a farm where hog cholera had not existed. These pigs were carried to the Kansas City stockyards, being in charge of a committee appointed by the exchange, were treated and the experts say that no more convincing truth of the efficacy of this serum could be obtained than is afforded by this experiment.

Uncle Sam to Have Aeroplane Fleet



A FLEET of aeroplanes for the United States army is now apparently assured fact as the result of action by the house of representatives in appropriating $125,000 for this purpose. There is the possibility that the senate may strike out the item, but even thee it would have a splendid chance of considering in the bill in conference, for it was adopted almost unanimously by the house.

This means the signal corps can have the 20 aeroplanes for which Brig. Gen. James Allen, chief signal officer of the army, asked in his annual report, and still have $25,000 left for equipment, stations, etc.

Brigadier General Allan has planned to have about six of these ofetions, equipped with ex eeroplane each, in various places throughout the country, chiefly on the seacoast. He has estimated that each station, with its machine, will cost for the first year $10,000. If it is decided to use the money in this way the machines at these stations could be used with the other 14 that could ho purchased within the appropriation for the annual joint camps of instruction during the summer months, so that the regulars and militia might learn to operate them.

Representative James R. Mann of Illinois declared that this country was the father of the aeroplane, but when we had gone to the most powerful and most economical machine of modern times for warfare we stopped. Today other nations are profiting by our legenuity. We are discussing the aeroplane now just as our forefathers may have discussed the steam engine years ago.

Style of Street Letter Box Changed

AFTER witnessing many experiments with new designs and automatic time registers, American cities are soon to have an ostirely new style of street letter box. Its exact shape and principle of operation is not yet announced by the postoffice department, but experiments have gone so far that an early decision is expected upon the precise type of box that is to be used.

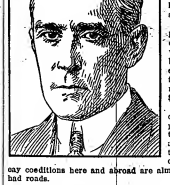
The unsightly green box that graces the top of the iron post at the street corner now has only been an unsatisfactory receptacle for street mail, the authorities say. Compared with the neat boxes of foreign cities, it is wholly leartistic. Considered in the light of an economical device, it is a failure, for it wastes the time of the mail collector in getting the mail out of it, and it often tries the patience of the patron of the mails by effectually concealing the time when the next collection is to be made.

Many things have been taken into consideration in trying to adopt a design for a new street letter box. The first is that of economy of time for the collector. Instead of having to open the box from the side and remove the contents by handfuls, the department wants a box that will open and discharge its contents into a sack with a single operation.

An indestructible time card and an automatic indicator that will show the time at which the next collection is to be made are the two other points that have been given consideration. The first becomes unnecessary if the automatic indicator works satisfactory, but the experiments thus far made by the postoffice department have not developed an automatic device sufficiently trustworthy, to put in to use on the street letter boxes

IN THE LIMELIGHT

FOE OF CHILDHOOD'S ENEMY



In the laboratories of the Rockefeller institute, near New York, Dr. Simon Flexner and his corps of assistants believe they are about to conquer that dread disease of childhood, infantile paralysis, now epidemic in several parts of the United States. Hundreds of monkeys are giving their lives every year to the aid of science in conquering this dread disease, the monkey being the only animals in all the list of those suitable for experimentation that they have succeeded in inoculating with the disease. The microorganism of the disease has been isolated and an early announcement is expected that a preventive, curative and safe serum has been discovered.

Infantile paralysis, or anterior poliomyelitis, as it is known to the medical profession, has long baffled medical science. Ordinarily it attacks children between the ages of 1½ and 3 years, but older children and adults are not immune. Although the death rate is not so high as in cerebrospinal meningitis, the train of permanent deformities which follow infantile paralysis makes the disease fully as much dreaded. Only about four or five per cent of those attacked succumb, but fully 80 per cent of the cases result in permanent paralysis.

Infantile paralysis is a comparatively new disease. Its symptoms have been described in medical literature for about 25 years, but only in the last four years, since the epidemic of 1907, has it been brought strongly to the attention of the profession in America.

ADVOCATES GOOD HIGHWAYS

W. Pege, director of the United States office of public roads and president of the new American Association for Highway Improvement, asserts that the United States suffers a direct loss of $40,000,000 annually on account of incorrect and inadequate methods in the construction, maintenance and administration of public roads.

This enormous loss is nothing compared with the indirect loss, through excessive cost of transportation, which is caused by the burden which bad roads impose upon the farmers and others who use the highways, and this amount, according to Mr. Page's report, reaches the impressive total of $250,000,000 every year.

The American farmer is paying two or three times as much to get his products to market as the man who tills the ground in Europe, and this added cost of diversion of labor is known to an important factor in the high cost of living problem. Road experts say conditions here and abroad are almost exactly reversed, due entirely to bad roads.

DUKE IS TO GOVERN CANADA

It is officially announced that the duke of Connaught will succeed Earl Grey as September as governor general of Canada. He will hold the appointment for two years and that period may be extended.

The announcement that the duke of Connaught will be the next governor general of the Dominion was received in Ottawa with great satisfaction. Aside from his general popularity throughout the empire, it is felt that the presence of so distinguished a member of the royal family at Ottawa will give the capital more political and social importance than it ever has had.

The duke of Connaught is the only surviving brother of the late King Edward. He is sixty years of age, a field marshal in the British army and was a personal aid de camp to the late king, who decided that he receive his present appointment. This is not his first trip to Canada, as he served in the Fenian raid of 1870. He is grand master of the Free Masons of England. Besides the title by which he is commonly known he is the Earl of Sussex, a prince of the United Kingdom and of Saxony. His wife was Princess Louisa Margaret of Prussia.

SUCCEEDS SENATOR BURROWS

Senator Burrows was beaten in the primaries, thereby insuring the election of Mr. Townsend to the Senate. Mr. Townsend is a native of Michigan and is fifty-four years old.

Perhaps because of his own personality as well as because he is the successor of, the old veteran, Julius Caesar Burrows, in the United States senate, Charles E. Townsend is regarded as a figure of considerable importance in national affairs.

When insurgency broke out in the house of representatives against the rule of Speaker Cannon, Townsend, who had been elected to congress in 1902, became one of its promoters and supporters. His name was even mentioned as that of an available candidate against Uncle Joe. Then in the summer of last year he began a statewide campaign in Michigan to strip the senatorial toga from the back of Uncle Julius, who was a veteran in the house of representatives when Townsend was a student and who already wore the toga when Townsend was a plodding lawyer in Jackson county, with never a dream perhaps of future legislative honors.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Firemen Often Fooled by Freak Calls

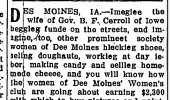
NEW YORK.—In the face of accident the unrecourceful New York fireman has to two courses of safety and relief of the police and the fire departments. He has no confidence in himself. The result of walking in the same groove with his many brothers day in and day out for so many years has left him with no incentive to do the work of rescue. The fire alarm box is so handy and the "cop" is so accessible, "what would be the use?" he asks himself. For this reason no firemen in any section of the country are called upon to do such a variety of things as those in the larger cities.

Perhaps one of the most humorous calls for the fire department in New York came when an epileptic, about to "throw a fit," had held a bottle of cocaine in his mouth, which he was compelled to the court afterward, would have prevented the attack. Some self-appointed guardian, fearing the bottle contained poison, dashed it to the pavement and called for the firemen. Great crowds gathered about the spot where the man lay and the firemen and policemen of the district added to the throng. The firemen were disgusted, the police were disgusted and eventually the epileptic was disgusted because he was arrested for causing a disturbance.

Last year one of the innovations in the rescue work of New York firemen which includes anything from taking cats from trees to rescuing people in 42-story buildings, was the rescue of an aviator whose machine had become entangled in a mass of wires in Brooklyn.

Recently a firemen was injured by a fall from a tree while rescuing a cat that had escaped a canine's fury. There are scores of such happenings every day in great cities and among the heaviest bills fire departments must pay are those caused by responding to false alarms.

Bloodhound's Luxurious Surroundings



BANGOR, ME.—One of the finest packs of bloodhounds in this part of the country is kept at the Maine State prison in Thomaston for the moral effect on prisoners who contemplate escape. The pack is a mixture of all imported English strain and carefully bred southern stock. One of the pack, when but a young puppy, was presented to Marguerite Owen, a Belfast girl, and the two have been inseparable companions for the last three years. The dog's name is Hilda. She is of a most sensitive and sympathetic nature and feels a keen word much more than some dogs would a kick. She romps with the children, and takes diversion in playing hide-and-seek. She knows the children by same, and when she is "it," she always finds the one she is told to seek.

Hilda has a bedroom all to herself, fitted up with a little iron cot with real bedclothes like one of the family. The room is lighted with electricity, and each night her mistress goes upstairs and Hilda crawls into bed, lays her head on the pillow and waits to be covered up and tucked in. When this is done the light is turned off and she is left for the night, rarely stirring until called in the morning.

The chief characteristic of the genuine bloodhound is the marvelous development of their scent-following instinct, especially when trained to foll low human beings. Their ability to keep the trail is the result of intelligence and training and not on account of any animosity against the person being trailed, for, contrary to the general supposition, the real bloodhound rarely if ever attacks the person he has been following.

How Des Moines Club Women Get Money

DES MOINES, IA.—Imagine the wife of Gov. B. F. Carroll of Iowa begging funds on the streets, and imagine, too, other prominent society women of Des Moines blacking shoes, selling doughnuts, working at day labor, making candy and selling home-made cheese, and you will know how the women of Des Moines' Women's club are going about earning $2,500 with which to buy pictures and paintings for the Women's club building in this city.

It all came about when at a meeting of the Women's club the low condition of the treasury was discussed. Something had to be done. Musicales, luncheons, amateur theatricals all had been tried time and time again.

"Why not earn money like working women earn their money? Why not take in washing?" suggested Mrs. J. G. Berryhill, wife of a millionaire lumber dealer, who boasts the fatherhood of the famous Des Moines plan of municipal government. The other women gasped. But Mrs. Berryhill was in dead earnest.

That is the way it all came about. Before the meeting adjourned the women were enthusiastic. The next day the women were at work. Mrs. Ernst Brown, president of the club "earned" her first dollar selling eggs produced from a pen of five chickens for which her husband, her first customer, paid $100.

Mrs. Carroll, wife of the governor of Iowa, became so enthusiastic that she was mistaken for a beggar while soliciting funds on the street. Mrs. Berryhill sold newspapers. Mrs. L. M. Mann, whose husband has made his fortune in real estate, decided to do shoeshining. Mrs. W. F. Mitchell, as president of the club, has been selling home-made aprons. Mrs. George Aulmann began her fund by selling doughnuts. Mrs. Weitz preempted the kitchen and baked dozens of pies. Mrs. Frank McKee now has been selling popcorn. In fact, every woman in the club is doing all kinds of work, even down to shining shoes. When the $2,500 is secured, it is the intention to hold a celebration.

City Finds Jobs for the Unemployed

KANSAS CITY, Kan.—A municipal employment bureau, operated under the direct supervision of the city commissioners, which will furnish free jobs to applicants, has been started here.

The employment bureau is just as much a part of the city's business as the street department, fire department or any other city department, and it has been treated as such.

The city employment bureau has been in existence only a short while, but in that time a hundred men and women have been given jobs and the names of 200 more who want work have been received and filed in the order of their presentation, to be sent to positions among employers who want workers are found. The bureau will furnish positions of any kind to men or women.

James Eads How of St. Louis, national president of the Brotherhood Welfare Association, and general champion of the rights of the unemployed, paraded through the streets of Kansas City, Mo., several days ago with several hundred of his followers and went to the city hall, where they noised the mayor for work. They told that the city should provide employment for all men who wented to work. The mayor of Kansas City, Mo., told the jobless marchers that he had no jobs to give to them and he did not see how the city could help them out. This set the Kansas City (Kan.) commissioners to thinking and they got busy.

It is not only to compel the vagrante to go to work that the municipal employment bureau has been established, and the jobs it furnishes are not restricted to this class.

The best health record of all the world's fighting forces is claimed by the German army.

THE OLD-TIME PARLOR.

There used to be in almost every rural home in the country a sacred room —the "parlor." Every reader is probably familiar with it, for it still exists, though not so universally as it did years ago, when no home in the land, le village, hamlet, or en farm, was considered complete or well-equipped without this dismal apartment—carefully shuttered in against air and sunlight; a jar of waxwork on the center table; a collection of curious odds and ends on the whatnot in the corner; mottoes and chromos on the wall; a vivid imprint or Brussels carpet on the floor. The sound of festivity seldom penetrated the gloom of this parlor, says the Philadelphia Press. At rare intervals distinguished visitors were received in it—witnesses of wedding or funeral. It was never a pleasant room; it smelled damp and dusty; the children stood in awe of it; and yet it was their mother's pride. Happily the day of the genteel, unsavory parlor is fast passing away. The children, going out into the bigger world with observant eyes, have returned to the homestead and insisted upon flinging open the doors and windows and admitting a burst of sunlight and a rush of pure air. They have made a living room of a tomb. In their childhood the kitchen was the most comfortable place in the house; it was scrubbed every day, ventilated in all ways, made light and airy and clean and hospitable while the ghastly forbidden precincts of the parlor were exposed to sanitary search not oftener than twice a year—during the inevitable spring and fall housecleaning.

It is only recently that they have discovered a way of canning decayed eggs, and there are bakers in the large cities who are so devoid of honesty that they would as soon use rotten eggs as fresh ones. Thus a market is created, and but for the fact that the state under its pure food laws can now step in and condemn the product as unfit for consumption, the problem created by cold storage would have been rendered more complex as the year go by, says the Rochester Herald. It is not beyond the bonds of possibility that meat which has been cold-stored to the point of decay is treated in the same manner. No one ever hears of it being thrown away.

And now the London police have discovered that the prisoner convicted by finger prints, and who, it was reported, had established his innocence by indisputable evidence that, being in the army at the time, he could not have been guilty, was, after all a fokir. He stole the army records of another man to bolster up his defense and came very nearly getting away with it. The police are doubly pleased at the discovery, since it proves the guilty man from escaping and re-establishes the finger-print theory as infallible at least so far as suspects have gone. But for a time the fakir had both the London police and the finger-print theory "stoozy."

Secretary Dickinson has just issued a report on the militia of this country that shows how little the minds of Americans are turned even in time of peace and war. He announces that in 1910 the strength of the organized militia forces of the nation is only 119,660 men, with an increase of but 2,113 in seven years, says the Boston Globe. He does not add that there are almost to a thousand as many clergymen, printers, manufacturers, grocers, butchers, stenographers or masons in the nation as there are citizen soldiers. But the fact is true.

A Butte man who is being sued for breach of promise is charged by the plaintiff with having called her "My Dear Yellowstone." He would have wants $10,000, since he was not explicit enough to say whether she was of fine cut, or a mere plug.

Returns from the New York public library indicate that fiction fell off in demand as compared with books of a historical or scientific nature. This should spur the Indiana school of novelists to renewed efforts or something.

A San Francisco man says he will not believe he pays alimony to his divorced wife, but it is believed he will change his mind before decomposition gets a firm hold on him.

It may be theoretically possible to transport 10,000 men across the Alps in aeroplanes, but with the example of Molineux and Hoxley in their minds the chances are that 9,000 of them will refuse to be transported in that way.

China will sacrifice 200,000,000 queues for the artificial hair market this year, and all will be sent to America. The joke on the Chinese is that they don't know that pads have gone out of fashion now.

GHOULS STEAL BODY

TOMB OF FORMER CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM L. SCOTT IS RAIDED AT ERIE, PA.

WOMAN'S BODY IS STOLEN

Coffin of Mrs. Anne M. McCallom, Relative of Family, Found Empty—Police Say They Are Hampered in Efforts to Fathom Mystery.

Erie, Pa.—Ghouls have broke into and violated the mausoleum of the late William L. Scott, who was a congressman from this district, a millionaire coal and railroad magnate and an intimate personal friend of former President Grover Cleveland. Much mystery surrounds the case, which first became known publicly Thursday morning.

The mausoleum in the Erie cemetery (a magnificent affair which cost at least $50,000), was found shattered by some women who chanced to be walking through the burying place. Soon after this discovery it was whispered about the city that the body of Mrs. Anna M. McCollom, a sister of the late Mr. Scott's wife, had been taken away. Mrs. McCollom was the wife of a prominent naval officer and was well known in Philadelphia society. It was also said by some that Mr. Scott's body was removed from its vault. Whether it was stolen or not is a question which has not been satisfactorily answered.

The police admit, officially, that Mrs. McCollom's body was removed from the mausoleum by the vandals. They also declare officially that Mr. Scott's body was not stolen, although probably an attempt was made to steal it.

Unofficially the same police say that the family of Mr. Scott has hampered them in their endeavors to get at the bottom of the mystery and that they really are not fully conversant with all the circumstances of the body stealing.

"There is more behind this than a plain case of corpse snatching from a cemetery," the police declare, "and if we had our way about it a very sensational story will quickly develop."

The people do not know whether Mrs. McCollom's body was the only one taken, or whether that of the late Congressman Scott likewise was carried off. But they say that they know a motive for the stealing of one or both, and that they will reveal it when the proper time comes.

MILLIONS IN BIG LAND GRAB

Illinois Investigating Body Reveals Vast Alleged Steals of Waters—

Fix Loss at $250,000,000.

Chicago.—The state of Illinois has been illegally deprived of thousands of acres of land along the shores of Lake Michigan and other waterways at a value of at least $250,000,000 by large corporations and private interests of the state. Chicago has been the largest sufferer.

The Illinois Central railroad alone has grabbed 400 acres in the city's front yard and the attorney general should seek to recover the value and perhaps revoke the company's charter. The Chicago river has been camped on illegally from end to end by great corporations and business houses.

These are a few of the conclusions reached by the Chipperfield committee, which was appointed by the Forty-fifth general assembly to investigate submerged land in the state. After almost two years of exhaustive labor the committee has compiled its report, which consists of 16 large typewritten volumes and which is accompanied by two massive chests filled with maps, photographs, documents and records dating back to Indian days.

Bald statements and verbose charges are not relied on by the committee to support the truth of their findings. With all the aid of expert lawyers preparing a case for court the legal questions involved have been gone into and hundreds of pages in the report consist of supreme court decisions, legislative enactments and what amounts practically to complete legal briefs.

And with no beating around the bush or technical equivocation, the committee makes the unqualified statement that the reclaimed empire stolen from the people can be recovered. Strong recommendation is made that proceedings be started immediately.

So comprehensive is the report in the belief of lawyers who have seen it that any ordinary members of the bar could walk into court with it under his arm and turn the state of Illinois upside down.

Sissy Kills Two; Hurts 20.

Elgin, Ill.—In a gas explosion at the Wilburn house at Carpenterville Monday Howard Mann and Adam Oberst were killed and twenty others injured, four fatally.

Gas from a leaky main is supposed to have caused the explosion, a score of guests fled in panic from the hotel and there were many narrow escapes.

Mother of Steele Mackaye Dies.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Within four months of her centenary, Mrs. Rebecca Spring, mother of Steele Mackaye, the dramatist and friend of most of the literary celebrities of mid-Victorian days, passed away at her home here Thursday.

Vote Favors Larger Membership.

Washington.—A test standing vote taken in the house Thursday resulted in a victory for the advocates for a membership of 433 under the new census, by 158 to 126.

KNOX SAYS CAN AMEND

SECRETARY CONSTRUES PROVISIONS OF AGREEMENT.

Wood Pulp and Paper Sections of Reciprocity Pact May Be Amended Before Ratification.

Washington. — That the wood pulp and paper sections of the Canadian trade agreement can be amended without causing unnecessary delay in its ratification is the construction placed upon that pact by Secretary of State Knox in a letter to Serono Payne, chairman of the house ways and means committee.

This fact was brought out at a hearing given by the committee to opponents of the paper and wood pulp provisions.

The statement last week of Chairman Payne that the agreement must stand or fall as a whole, and that amendments could not be made, was interpreted by Mr. Fordney as indicating that no change could be made in the paper or pulp wood schedules. Mr. McCall, speaking for Chairman Payne, who was absent, said that the prohibition against amendments would not extend to the sections indicated.

Secretary Knox explained in his letter to the committee that the United States and Canadian commissioners had reached no unalterable agreement on the paper and pulp wood sections, and that the final construction of that schedule is left to the committee which has the bill.

TESTING COUNTRY'S COINS.

Assay Commission Begins Its Annual Task of Examining the Work of the Four Mints.

Philadelphia. — Following the custom inaugurated in 1793, the assay commission, which tests and examines coins of the United States, met in Philadelphia Tuesday to perform its annual task. The commissioners are required to see that the coins made by the four mints of the nation are in conformity with the standards of fineness and weight. The coins are selected from the various mints and sent to Philadelphia.

The members of the commission are appointed for one year, but in reality perform about one week's work. The commission consists of the judge of the United States district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the comptroller of the currency, the assayer of the New York assay office and such other persons as are appointed by the president.

TEN ARE BLOWN TO ATOMS

M. K. & T. Engine Explodes and Shopmen Are Killed—Roundhouse Partly Demolished.

Smithville, Tex. — Ten shop employes of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad were torn to fragments and seven others were injured when an engine under repair exploded in the Smithville yards. Besides the loss of life, railroad property valued at $20,000 was destroyed.

The engine was blown to atoms, two other locomotive standing on nearby tracks were wrecked and the roundhouse was partially demolished.

With the bursting of the boiler a rain of fragments of the engine and portions of human bodies fell for several hundred yards.

What remained of the roundhouse was improvised as a temporary morgue and portions of the bodies were mated. In several instances identification was not possible.

GOVERNOR NEAR FIST FIGHT

Wilson of New Jersey Threatens to Whip Chairman of State Democratic Committee.

Trenton, N. J. — Governor Wilson threatened to thrash James R. Nugent, chairman of the state Democratic committee, and counsel for former United States Senator James Smith, Jr.

Nugent was called into the governor's private office and in a warm debate which lasted ten minutes the governor declared that he would use his fists on the committeeman if the letter attempted to block the governor's special bills.

Governor Wilson is about five feet six inches in height, while Nugent is a trifle over six feet tall.

RAIL SAFETY BILL PASSED

House Acts Favorably on the Senate Measure to Regulate Boiler Inspection.

Washington. — The house passed the senate bill providing for the inspection of locomotive boilers on interstate railroads, under rules approved by the interstate commerce commission. The bill was approved by the railway labor organizations and the railroads.

Mrs. Schenk in Divorce Suit.

Wheeling, W. Va.—According to Attorney Frank O'Brien, representing Mrs. Laura Schenk, counsel have agreed on alimony of $100 a month for Mrs. Schenk. The bill of particulars in the divorce suit of Schenk against his wife was filed Wednesday, but the contents not disclosed.

Senate Vote for Frisco.

THREE DIE IN RIVER

STREET-CAR PLUNGES INTO ICY STREAM AT SHEBOYGAN, WIS.

HAD NO CHANCE FOR ESCAPE

Women Are Trapped Inside Coach With No Hope of Life—Slippery Rails and Failure of Brake Given as Cause.

Sheboygan, Wis.—Imprisoned helplessly in a speeding trolley car, three women were drowned when the car plunged into the Sheboygan river through the open draw of the Eighth street bridge here.

The dead: Miss Anna Mather, aged fifty-three, Sheboygan Falls, a music teacher; Miss Tamnie VanOuwekerk, aged sixteen, a kindergarten teacher; Miss Olga Willimite, Sheboygan, a clerk.

Motorman George Thiens and Conductor Frank Weber were saved, as were two other passengers, one of whom was Paul O. Etzold, a traveling salesman from Milwaukee. They escaped death by jumping just before the car plunged into the river.

The death of the three women is probably due to a stumble by Etzold. As he rushed out of the car he fell and the three women fell over him. He regained his feet and leaped from the car, but the women behind him were trapped.

The rails were slippery and the motorman was unable to set the brakes. He made an attempt to escape as the car plunged from the bridge into the river.

HOUSE CHANGES ITS NUMBER

Lower Branch of Congress Will Have Total of 433 After March 5, 1913.

Washington.—The number of representatives Thursday received the necessary reapportionment bill, fixing the membership at 433 after March 5, 1913.

This bill, which is a substitute for the original one, gives Illinois two additional members in the house.

The following states gain by the new bill as follows: Arizona, 1; Alabama, 1; California, 2; Colorado, 1; Florida, 1; Georgia, 1; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 2; Louisiana, 1; Massachusetts, 1; Michigan, 2; Minnesota, 1; Montana, 1; New Jersey, 2; New Mexico 1; New York, 6; North Dakota, 1; Ohio, 1; Oklahoma, 3; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 4; Rhode Island, 1; South Dakota, 1; Texas, 2; Utah, 1; Washington, 2; West Virginia, 1.

The Democrats, aided by a few Republicans, who declined to be bound by the party caucus, won the fight for the increased representation.

KNOCKOUT BROWN HAS SHADE

Champion Welgast Meets Defeat at the Hands of New York Lightweight.

Philadelphia.—Ad Wolgast, conqueror of Battling Nelson, received probably the most inertistic walloping of his career in a six-round bout with "Knockout" Brown of New York in Jack O'Brien's new arena Wednesday night.

Brown battered the Michigan chap pretty much as he pleased for the entire six rounds. He hit Wolgast as he pleased and when he pleased, suffering only in the clinches, where he was made to appear the novice he really is.

Favors Tariff Board Bill.

Washington.—By a strictly party vote, all of the Democrats in opposition, the senate committee on finance Thursday voted to report favorably the bill passed by the house to create a permanent tariff board.

DEFEATED BY WOMEN

MAYOR OF SEATTLE DUSTED BY THEIR BALLOTS.

Hiram C. Gill Loses in First Recall Election—Was Charged With Misuse of Power.

Seattle, Wash. — Women had for the first time the privilege of casting their ballots at the initial recall election ever held in Seattle and they ruled the day.

The recall election was brought about in an attempt to oust Mayor Hiram C. Gill and to elect George W. Dilling. Returns from one-third of the city had gone Gill has been ousted and Dilling elected by a majority of 4,000 votes.

The leaders of the suffragists in this city have refused to interrupt in the mayoralty fight because of the fact that the agitation arose because Mayor Gill and his chief of police, C. W. Wappenstein, refused to yield to those who sought the establishment of a district for confining vice.

Many picturesque scenes were enacted in the day's voting. Women, richly dressed and riding in their own automobiles, drove to the polling places to vote, and stood in line, while others with shawls over their heads, who had been to market and brought eggs and meat and garden truck in their arms, took their turns in the booths and marked their choice for mayor. Contrary to expectations, the women did not make many mistakes in balloting.

The election was the first test of the recall in Washington politics and a deep interest was taken in the campaign. The civic question was that of the so-called vice segregation. It was charged against Mayor Gill that his segregation policy was in reality one of vice aggregation and that the gambling and red light district was the source of police graft.

TAFT GIVES AN ULTIMATUM

There Must Be a Vote on Canadian Agreement or an Extra Session.

Washington.—President Taft has served notice on congress through Senators Crane and Cartter that there must be a vote secured the reciprocity agreement with Canada or he would call congress back in extra session almost immediately after March 4.

Mr. Taft summoned Senator Crane of Massachusetts and Carter of Montana to the White House to urge upon them the necessity of expediting legislation in the senate, so there would be no necessity for an extra session of congress. Vice-President Sherman and Senator Smoot also were in conference with the president.

Senators Crane and Carter conferred with other senators who are especially friendly to the administration and sought to enlist their services in a movement to obviate the necessity of an extra session.

Takes Compassion on Man Who Pleads for Mercy—Live Stock Is Freezing.

Washington. — Taking compassion upon Guy Livingston, a farmer of Dunkirk, Mont., whose plea for mercy that while he was in jail He live stock was freezing to death and his home being pillaged, President Taft within an hour after the case had reached him from the department of justice telegraphed his pardon. Livingston was convicted on a technicol charge of having taken whisky on the Blackfoot Indien reservation.

CANADA GETS $1,500 TROPHY.

NATIONAL CORN EXPOSITION, AT COLUMBUS, OHIO, AWARDS TROPHY FOR PECK OF OATS GROWN IN SASKATCHEWAN.

Again Canada is to the fore, and has secured at the National Corn Exposition just closed at Columbus, Ohio, the magnificent Colorado silver trophy valued at $1,500, for the best peck of oats. These oats were grown by Messrs. Hill & Son, of Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, and, as may readily be understood, were of splendid quality to have been so successful in a contest open to the world, and in which competition was keen. At the some Exposition there were exhibits of wheat and barley, and in all these competitions, the grain shown by Canada secured a wonderful amount of attention, and also a number of awards. During recent exhibitions at which grain from Western Canada was given the chance for entry, it always took first place. At the Spokane Interstate Fair, last fall, where the entries were very large, and the competition keen, the Province of Alberta carried off the silver cup, given by Governor Hay for the best state or province display, and a score of prizes was awarded Canadian exhibitors for different exhibits of wheat, oats and barley threshed and in the sheaf. Vegetables also received high awards. A pleasing feature of these exhibits was they were mostly made by farmers who had at one time been American Citizens and were now farmers in Canada. The Department of the Interior is just in receipt of a magnificent diploma given by the Tri-State Board of Examiners at the Fair held in Cincinnati last fall for agricultural display by Canada.

The Surveyor-General of Canada has just completed a map showing that a large area of land was surveyed last year in the northern portion of Saskatchewan and Alberta which will be ready for the rush of homesteaders to that district during the coming spring and summer. The total area of the surveys covering several hundreds of thousands of acres will be made in addition to those during the coming summer.

A return just issued by the Dominion Lands Branch shows that 48,287 homestead entries were made last year as compared with 37,061 in 1909; 27,356 in 1908; 14,553 in 1907; 14,563 in 1906. In Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, Dakota comes first on the list with 4,310, Minnesota given 2,858, South Dakota 1,132, Wisconsin 745, Washington 730, Michigan 705, Iowa 646, while other states show less, but with the exception of Delaware, District of Columbia and the Indian Territory, every state and territory contributed.

The prospects for an abundant crop in all parts of Western Canada for 1911 are said to be excellent. In the districts that required it there was an ample rainfall last autumn, and the season opened during the present winter in greater than in many previous years. Both are essential factors to the farmers, who look upon the moisture that these will produce as being highly beneficial.

A large immigration from the United States is expected, and the demand for literature and information from the various Goverement Agencies located at different points in the States is the greatest it has ever been.

Since the above was written word hoe been received that in addition to honors won at Columbus, Ohio, Coeder won first and second on wheet and first and second on oets, ee well as diplomas.

Normen Cherry of Devia, Saskatchewae, who wee in the reecre of the Ohio eee, secured the eeeond award, with G. H. Hutton of Lacombe, Alberta, second. J. C. Hill & Sons got first on oats beddes the silver trophy. G. H. Hutton took second in oats.

SAVED FROM DANGEROUS OPERATION—NEIGHBOR ADVISED WHAT TO DO FOR BLADDER TROUBLE

I too wish to add my testimonial to the thousands you no doubt have, and will tell you what your great medicine did for me.

Several months ago I was taken very sick with bladder trouble, had intense pains and suffered greatly, at times I could not stand on my feet or sit in a chair and often was forced to cry out with pain.

I consulted two doctors who gave me different kinds of medicine, which did me no good. It seemed as though the more of their medicine I took, the worse I became. The doctors seemed to be greatly puzzled over my case and after holding a consultation, I was told that I had a severe case of inflammation of the bladder and no operation would help, but I was able to resume work.

I have used several bottles of Swamp-Root and know that if I had not taken it, I would have been operated on, and perhaps never recovered. I never fail to tell my friends about Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root as I know it will save many people from suffering and perhaps, as in my case, a dangerous operation.

Yours gratefully,

Has an Old Relic of Washington.

One of the most interesting relics of George Washington is owned by the city of Salem. It is a medallion in wood, carved after a sketch from life.

The same artist executed both sketch and carving, which gives the relic added value. He was named Meinire, native genius with a gift for portraiture. He studied Washington when the father of his country visited Salem on his tour of the east, and made the medallion shortly afterward, to adorn, for over the years, the entrance of Washington square, Salem. Here the effigy remained from 1907 until 1856, when the arch was taken down to give place to an iron fence, still in use.

This Washington relic is kept in the fireproof room at the Essex institute, Salem's museum. It is frequently studied by artists and others as an odd and striking likeness of the great American who done no two artists pictured alike.—Boston Globe.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Feb. 8.—County option is a dead issue in the present session of the Minnesota legislature. By a vote of 66 to 61 the house of the present state law making body defeated the bill prepared by Representative Rines of Mora and the Anti-Saloon league.

The vote was taken after n three hours discussion which was marked by a flood of oratory favoring and opposing the hill and the plaudits of several hundred people who crowded the galleries and corridors of the house chamber.

By a vote of 33 to 28 A. D. Stephens of Crookston lost in his contest to unseat John Saugstad, senator from Polk county.

St. Paul, Feb. 9.—The senate will adjourn April 1, 20 days prior to the constitutional date set for adjournment, unless a resolution which passed 53 to 8 is rescinded later. Senator Mossman of Wessca, introduced the resolution.

Representative C. A. Congdon of Duluth introduced a bill in the house repealing the anti-cigaret law passed by the legislature two years ago. Representative Congdon is opposed to dead letter laws on principle and for this reason favors the repeal.

Representative A. R. Anderson's state-wide prohibition bill, introduced in the house, is the first of a probable avalanche of liquor regulatory measures.

Representative Robinson introduced a bill to investigate the state central committees of both major parties.

Representative Spooner and Harding presented a bill providing for the teaching of agriculture and domestic economy in the schools of the state and also providing for the consolidation of rural schools.

The Mattson-Nelson bill amending the compulsory education law was recommended for passage. The proposed bill changes the ages of children coming under this law from 8 to 17, to 8 to 16 years. It allows pupils to remain out of school because of poverty or because they are needed to work at home. This section is to allow farmer's children to remain out of school during the harvest season. The bill also proposes to allow children to remain out of schools on church days.

New Bills Proposed.

Representative Spooner of Morris has prepared a mortgage registry tax bill, which he will submit to the subcommittee on taxes and tax laws Tuesday. It provides for e tax of 15 cents per $100 on every mortgage expiring within five years, and 25 cents for mortgages continuing for o longer period. Many of the legislators favor a nominal tax of 10 cents.

A bill licensing branch offices of breweries was introduced by Representative Henry A. Hoffman of Rochester. The bill proposes a license of $150 a year. There are said to be 400 branch offices in Minnesota, which would mean an annual revenue of $60,000. The bill includes foreign breweries doing business in this state.

Railroads Make Argument.

Attorneys for the Great Northern and Chicago Railways companies argued against the passage of the Spooner bill increasing the gross earnings tax from 4 to 5 per cent, at the meeting of the house committee on taxes and tax laws. Attorney Lenda of the Great Northern declared that railroads were already paying a larger rate of tax than other property and that this bill should certainly not be passed until the rate legislation, which is now in the courts, is decided.

St. Paul, Feb. 10.—A bill is to be introduced into the state legislature raising the salaries of several state officers. The salary of the governor is not affected by the bill. The salaries that would be raised are those of the state auditor, state treasurer and secretary of state. The movement first started through an effort to raise the salary of Treasurer Smith, who now draws only $3600 a year. After consultation it was decided to put in a general bill which equalizes the salaries of all the state officers. For example, the state insurance commissioner draws $4,500 a year, while the state auditor, one of the most important state officers, draws a similar amount. The secretary of state, an elective officer, draws only $2,500.

A bill giving city councils absolute control over saloons is to be introduced in the lower house. It is a substitute for the proposed 12 o'clock closing bill. Representatives who favor the extension of saloon hours for the bill of this kind will vote. It proposes that city council shall fix the hour of closing, providing it is not later then midnight. The argument is that this bill will place the authority over saloons where it belongs and that the principle of county option will be carried out. It is asserted that if the saloons are not gotten they can be closed at 8 p. m.

Aims at Express Companies.

Senator Lende of Lyon county is author of e bill to put express companies in Minnesota under the control of the railroad and warehouse commission, exactly as railroads are now. The bill probably will be made a committee bill backed by the railroad committee.

Marriage of Cousins Attacked.

First cousins cannot marry in Minnesota if a bill by Senator Anderson is passed. The bill had been introduced at many previous legislative sessions, but always has failed to pass. Senator Anderson says he expects favorable action in this legislature.

Aid Bought for Bibley House.

Bibley house will receive $2,500 for repairs and improvements, and after a month for repairs, if e bill introduced by Senators Denegre and Scheller is passed. The Bibley House association and the Daughters of the American Revolution shall have charge of the money.

Seizure of Autos Provided.

A new and novel way to discourage reckless automobile driving on country roads was suggested in e bill by Senator Nelson. His plan is to have the county confiscate any automobile by which o person on the public highway is injured and to sell it at public auction and put the proceeds in the county treasury. Senator Van Hoven introduced a bill forbidding anyone from driving on auto without a state license, and that no license should be issued to anyone under 18 years of age.

The long-expected tuberculosis bill was introduced in the lower house of the Minnesota legislature by Representatives Freeman, Moriarity and J. N. Johnson. It provides for a tax of 2 cents a ton on ore testing less than 49 per cent, 3 cents on ore testing from 49 to 54 per cent, 4 cents on ore testing from 54 to 59 per cent and 5 cents a ton on ore testing more than 59 per cent.

St. Paul, Feb. 11.—

A bill extending the terms of members of the railroad and warehouse commission from four to six years and increasing salaries to $4,500 was introduced by Representative Dunn.

Representative Hillmen introduced a bill changing the method of amending the constitution by allowing a majority of the votes cast for the amendment sufficient to carry. The present law provides that a majority of the votes cast at the election is necessary to pass e constitutional amendment.

The house passed a concurrent resolution inviting George E. Vincent, president-elect of the state university, to speak before the legislature on Feb. 12.

Boosters Slam Fair Aid.

A petition from the Olivia Commercial club against making any more appropriations for the state fair was read. It read: "Millions of dollars has already been appropriated to make the state fair self-supporting and the only people benefited were certain classes in the Twin Cities."

The house committee on judiciary and the senate committee on general legislation will hold an open session on Feb. 15 to discuss the proposed workingmen's compensation bill.

Miss Josephine Schein, secretary of the committee on billboards of the Minneapolis Woman's Club appeared before the delegation and asked for the passage of an enabling act giving city councils authority to regulate billboards. She deplored the present appearance of the billboards and declared that many of the places were immoral.

A bill to provide $25,000 for grass seed for the burned regions of upper Minnesota, introduced by Senator Clapp, was passed.

Action on the McNeil bill allowing counties to issue bonds for good roads to the extent of one-half per cent of their total valuation was deferred. This bill is intended to provide for the million dollars bond issue for Hennepin county, which was declared unconstitutional two years ago on the theory that it was local legislation. The proposed bill includes every county in the state, to remove the unconstitutional feature.

FIRE DOES $500,000 DAMAGES.

Standard Oil Sulphuric Acid Plant Destroyed.

Point Richmond, California.—Fire, caused by blazing soot from a chimney falling on the roof of the Sulphuric acid plant of the Standard Oil company, destroyed that plant, a tank containing 500,000 gallons of crude oil and damaged the $1,000,000 acid plant. One man was terribly burned. Three men were injured. The damage is estimated at $500,000.

Huge Building For Seattle.

Seattle, Wash. — The last obstacle in the way of the erection of a forty-one story building in this city by the estate of the late L. C. Smith of Syracuse, N. Y., was removed when the council committee that has been going over the plans voted to grant the permit. The local agent for the Smith estate informed the committee that the skyscraper, which will be the highest office-building in the world outside of New York, will be begun within the next six weeks.

Proctor's Peculiarities

By NED K. MORGAN

Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press

"But, Nan, you love me!"

Nen Hartwick shook her head obstinately. "I have a right to my career, Jimmie. Can't you wait?"

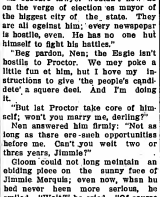
"Wait!" He looked at her yearningly. "I don't want to wait. I want to marry you and take care of you. And what career is there open to you?"

"Mr. Proctor will surely be elected mayor," she answered. "And I will go to the city hall with him. See the opportunities I will have to do good! There will be poor families to help, and hungry men to set to work, and wrongs that I can set right. This is a big city, Jimmie. I will be in a position to make life brighter for many people."

"I don't like this men Proctor," said Jimmie Merquis, frowning.

"Mr. Proctor is e gentleman," returned the girl quietly, but with flushing eyes.

"Oh, he's all right—that way," Jimmie hastened to concede; "but sometimes I think the fellow's crazy. His father and two of his brothers, you know, were confined in asylums at different periods of their lives. He certainly looks queer, himself, when he gets to yelling about the 'rights of the people' and waving his arms, that long hair in his eyes—"



"If the professional politicians had given more attention to the rights of the people," returned Nan, tartly, "an obscure lawyer wouldn't now be on the verge of election as mayor of the biggest city of the state. They are all against him; every newspaper is hostile, even. He has no one but himself to fight his battles."

"Beg pardon, Nen; the Eagle isn't hostile to Proctor. We may pose a little fun at him, but I have no instructions to give 'the people's candidate' a square deal. And I'm doing it.

"But let Proctor take core of himself, and you marry me, darling!"

Nen answered him firmly: "Not as long as there are such opportunities before me. Can't you wait two or three years, Jimmie?"

Gloom could not long maintain an abiding place on the sunny face of Jimmie Merquis; even now, when his best lover been more serious, he smiled. "Wait?" he cried. "Of course I'll wait, sweetheart! And I may not have to; there will be no career for you unless Proctor becomes mayor. And he hasn't been elected yet."

Jimmie, political reporter on the Morning Eagle, went to Rudolph Proctor's next afternoon to ask his views on the municipal ownership of certain utilities. Incidentally, he expected to pick up and embellish in his own clever fashion some of the man's peculiarities. These little aidelights were always read, for the "people's candidate" was sweeping everything before him, and there was keen interest in his personality, hitherto unknown. And then, of course, he would see Nan, who was secretary and stenographer to the candidate.

The candidate had been working at his desk since early in the forenoon, and against strong opposition. It was beginning to tell in his manner and appearance. Jimmie found the tall, angular young lawyer, with his wide, thin, orator's mouth, pacing back and forth across his private office. He was gesticulating freely and holding forth on his favorite topic, politics, to Nan. His pallid face was pulsating with excitement; his hair tumbled about his forehead in confusion.

He received Merquis with a stiff dignity, but thawed when the reporter had explained his errand. With a weighty clearing of his throat, he began to expound his views, which were original, to say the least.

"I didn't you better dictate that, Mr. Proctor?" interrupted Nan.

Jimmie started in astonishment. In the first place, such a suggestion was almost an aspersion on his good faith and ability as a reporter; and in the second place she spoke very differently from the assured, cheerful Nan he was accustomed to see.

Jimmie looked at her curiously. Her face was almost as white as her shirtwaist, and her hands were trembling violently. There was something in her eyes that brought Jimmie half out of his chair with a question on his lips.

But the question was not asked. She shot him a look of warning and entreaty that sealed his lips. He sank back again, silent, but watchful and unsatisfied.

All this byplay had taken but a second or two. While it was being enacted Proctor glanced keenly, almost suspiciously, from one to the other. Then, apparently satisfied with his scrutiny, he agreed.

"A very good idea, Miss Hartwick; no possibility of mistakes, then. And good many mistakes have been made, this campaign."

The interview was soon given and transcribed. While Jimmie was still marveling at Nan's peculiar actions, Proctor read the typewritten sheets, nodding his head with satisfaction. But when he held them out to Jimmie, it was Nan who took them from his hand.

"Let me write on here what it is," she said, with a pitiful ghost of a smile.

She inserted the first sheet in the machine and duly made a few words.

Jimmie, more mystified then ever, took the manuscript and bowed himself out; but in the general office, where three clerks were busy with campaign literature, he stopped. The last appealing look which Nen had given him impelled the reading of that sentence. And the is what it was: "P. S.—Don't write this down. Put it in your pocket; says he is going to kill all of us. Please help me."

Jimmie, summoning a whistle to his stiff lips, turned back to the private office again. He longed to run, but did not dare to act precipitately. Action might result in a tragedy. He twisted carelessly back, and thrust open the door without knocking. Proctor was striding up and down, talking about "the rights of the people," and those who would "crucify the people's leader." Nan, huddled in her chair, watched him fearfully.

The candidate swung on his heel sharply when Jimmie entered; but he had given no time for protest. "Oh, Mr. Proctor," he said, easily, "I forgot the most important part of my errand. The Eagle has decided to come out for you—strong. They went to 'play up' this interview, first page, and all that, and need three or four photographs of you in characteristic poses, to illustrate it. So put on your hat; there's a photograph gallery across the street."

Jimmie could see the outline of the heavy revolver in Proctor's coat pocket as he spoke. The gentleman made a half-motion toward the weapon; his hand dropped unconsciously. Jimmie's muscles contracted; he rose on his toes, ready to launch himself onto the table if the pistol were completely drawn.

But there was no necessity for a struggle, after all. The ruse won. Proctor smiled e smile of gratified vanity.

"Very well," he acquiesced, pompously. "I was glad that you had sent to eligh itself feasiesly on the side of right. We can give them some very striking pictures."

He caught up his hat; Jimmie locked his arm within the medium's, steered him gently through the door and across the outer office and down the stairs. Proctor began a loud-voiced speech to his audience of one. Without releasing his chance, the reporter deftly removed the revolver from the madman's pocket.

When the patrol wegon had galloped away with its frothing, strug gling prisoner, Jimmie shrewdly hurried back to the office, and ran rudely through the crowd that had collected, darted into the hallway and bounded upstairs, three steps at a time. He rushed through Proctor's outer office like a football player with the ball in his sight and threw open the in ner door.

Nen had slipped to the floor in a faint, but when he knelt beside her and gathered her in his arms, her eyes opened and she smiled. "He's gone?" she whispered, and reading confirmation in Jimmie's eyes, "I knew you could do it, Jimmie. I prayed for you to help me." All the afternoon he watched me. He wouldn't let me go near the door or the telephone. We were to be the human sacrifice to insure his election, he said." She shuddered at the thought of the danger that had stopped so close.

Her glance wandered to the three clerks who clustered, big-eyed with astonishment, in the doorway. "Oh, Jimmie," she said, and clung to him, "take me away from here! I don't want a career. I want a home—with you!"

A Critical Period.

And it finally came to pass that the women got the suffrage.

"What are you going to do with it?" asked an innocent bystander.

"Well," explained the women, "nothing of importance can be done without disturbing business, and of course we don't went to do that."

And thus was another crisis in the history of the world successfully averted.—Life.

Story That Contains a Moral It Might Be Well to Keep in Memory.

A little King Charles dog, a pet in e family where he had been the playmate of n little boy, slipped through en open door some time ago and disappeared. Servants and the children of the house searched everywhere, asked questions at all places where it was thought possible the dog might be in hiding, but to no avail, and the animal was finally given up for lost and there was deep mourning in the nursery. One day recently the woman who owned the dog met a neighbor nt a florist's shop, who had on a leash o dog strangely like the lost pet, and asked where he came from. "Why, he ran into our house a few days ago and we don't know where he belongs." The dog knew his old mistress and was quickly surrendered. "You might have had him sooner, had you advertised," said one woman. "And you could have found the owner sooner had you advertised," said the other —and the newspaper man who heard the story added the moral.

Granite in the South.

When one speaks of granite the mind naturally reverts to Vermont. It is difficult to associate granite with any section of North Carolina outside New England, yet it must now be acknowledged to the credit of the south that Virginia and North Carolina stand out Virginia are producing large quantities of stone of good quality which insures that such a place in the market at any rate.

The annuel output is now worth about $3,500,000 and the industry is growing. It may be of comparative interest to know that New England's output is about $9,000,000 worth of stone annually.

HEREDITY
Can Be Overcome in Cases.

The influence of heredity cannot, of course, be successfully disputed, but it can be minimized or entirely overcome in some cases by correct food and drink. A Conn. lady says:

"For years while I was a coffee drinker I suffered from billous attacks of great severity, from which I used to emerge as white as a ghost and very weak. One day I read a physician gave me various prescriptions for improving the digestion and stimulating the liver, which I tried faithfully but without perceptible result.

"He was acquainted with my family history for several generations back, and once when I visited him he said: 'If you have inherited one of those torpid livers you may always suffer more or less from its inaction. We can't dodge our inheritence, you know.'

"I was not so strong a believer in heredity as he was, however, and began to think for myself, I concluded to stop drinking coffee, and see what effect that would have. I feared it would be a severe trial to give it up, but when I took Postum and had it well made, I completely lost the need for a hot beverage and I grew very fond of it.

"I have used Postum for three years, using no medicine. During all that time I have had absolutely none of the billous attacks that I used to suffer from, and I have been entirely free from the pain and debilitating effects that used to result from them.

"The change is surely very great, and I am compelled to give Postum the exclusive credit for it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Bathbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as second-class matter August 30 '05, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn., under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

A bill is before the legislature providing for the state to loan the surplus school funds to farmers at four percent taking improved farms as security. The bill is being opposed by the city representatives, although this surplus money is being loand to other states at three per cent.

It is stated that some of the leading men of Northern Minnesota will favor state division if no reapportionment bill is passed this winter. Why not have North and South Minnesota? Thief River Falls will divide it for you, if you want division as they have the songs all learned and all they would have to do is to sing them.

A number of the saloon keepers of Thief River Falls have just found out that they voted for county option last fall. Same over here. We opposed it all we could, and they we will be darnd if we didn't go to election and vote for it. Surely some of our politicians are smooth enough to make the lion and the lamb sleep in the same bed-once, but not twice.

When that post office appropriation bill was up before congress January 19, our Congressman Steenerson made a speech that will make them subside people sit up and take notice that there was such a place as Northern Minnesota, and that the people had sent a man to represent them in congress that has got the ability to advise them of the fact. We sometimes regret having supported a man for office, after witnessing some of his acts in a legislative body, but we never could say that of Szeener son, as he certainly delivers the goods at every turn of the road.

Congressman Steenerson has secured the passage of a bill to authorize homestead enteries of undisposed lands in the eleven towns. It will also permit filings by new entrymen to land which present holders do not make final proof on before their seven years are out. We are looking for a choice piece of land of this kind, for there is likely to be a lot of it, if the hazel brush lawyers do not get out of wind, who are running around the country telling people that they do not have to make proof. When your seven years are out you are out, and the next man can step in and homestead your land. Is this plain enough.

Friends of reapportionment from the Northern part of the state are talking recessity, if a bill is not passed at this session It is proposed to draw a line east and west just south of Brainerd, and form a new state. Taxation without representation has caused stronger things to be done. —Thief River Falls News.

This comes from Thief River Falls, and you fellows down in the souther part of Minnesota had better get a move on you and fix this thing up, or they will divide the state sure, and locate the capital of the Northern part at Thief River Falls. This may be only considerd a joke, but the southern part of the state will find that Northern Minnesota will be a unite for state division, if they fail to get reapportionment, and they will get it.

KNEW HIS BUSINESS.

This Parisian Beggar Realized the Value of New Shoes.

Begging has long been a great art in Europe. By using subtle touches of misery and calculated effects of disease and dismemberment the beggar became a master of pathetic appeal. A delightful story of Empire, the sculptor, is quoted by Hamilton W. Mable in the Outlook.

Looking out of his window in a hotel one bleak wintry morning in the good old times, Dupre saw an old beggar sitting barefooted on the stone steps below. His heart was moved with compassion, and he began to search for a pair of shoes. He found two pairs, one of them new.

"Did not give the new pair away; you will wear them yourself," urged his prudent wife.

"No," said the sculptor. "I shall find the old pair more comfortable. Moreover, if I am to give anything away I am going to give the best I have."

So he hurried downstairs and put the new shoes in the hands of the barefooted old man. The next morning the beggar sat on the steps as usual, and, behold, the feet were here. Dupre hurried down to him. "Where are the shoes I gave you? You are not wearing them," he said.

"No," replied the old man, "I could not wear them, excellency. If I did nobody would give me anything. I have pawned them."

Lakes of Blood.

The name Lake of Blood or its equivalent has been given to places as far apart as England and South America.

"Sanguelac"—i. e., the Lake of Blood—was the name given by the victorious Normans to the battlefield at Hastings, where the Saxons were overthrown and slain with terrible carnage.

For a similar reason Lake Trasimene has borne the name "Sanghetto" because its waters were reddened during the second Punic war by the blood of some 15,000 Romans who fell before the troops of Hannibal.

Yet another Lake of Blood, called also "Yanar Cocha," is situated in the state of Ecuador. It be one of a series of volcanoes on the towering heights of the Andes range of mountains.

The Donkey's Head.

Among the most extraordinary pieces of symbolism known to have been used by the early Asiatics was a figure of a donkey's head used as a representative of deity. There is no doubt whatever that the same emblem was once used among the Hittites, the Egyptians and one or two other nations as a symbol of their red god, Set. The superstition of the yellow donkey of India, the story of the swift ass of eastern Asia and the ass of Dionysius and many other marvelous ass stories are all survivals of that curious form of religious worship the adoration of the ass' head.

They Both Knew.

The food sold one day in the kings presence. "I am the king!" And the king finished, for he knew that his food was wrong.

A week later the king was angry because of an error he had committed and exclaimed, "I am a fool!" And the food laughed, for he knew that his view was right.

CURING BAD HABITS.

Try a Little Self Hypnotism on Your Pet Weaknesses.

In a large eastern city is a professional hypnotist who has a wide reputation for curing the habit of intemperance. His method is dirt simple.

"There is no real hypnotism about it —unless it be a matter of self hypnotism," this professor once said. "I simply observe the mind process of the man that drinks and advise him how to reverse it. The subconscious soliloquy in the mind of the man that drinks runs something like this: 'When did I have my last ball? Where? Long as that! I don't see how I stood it so long. Wouldn't have thought it possible.' And so on the victim reports to himself on the principle that he needs this periodical stimulant just as it is necessary to keep coal on a fire to keep it from burning out. In a word, that man self hypnotizes himself into the belief that he needs a drink.

"My advice to cure this craving is not to fight the appetite, but to fight down the sense that leads to the appetite. Let a man repeat to himself over and over again: 'I really don't need this drink. If I take it, it is simply a matter of pouring so much down my throat without doing me or anybody else any good.' Before long he will be surprised how lost out of hypnotism he has into drink. he will hypnotize himself out of it."

Simple, isn't it? But if this self hypnotism or whatever you choose to call it is a cure for liquor, cranked why is it not equally a recipe for curing other bad habits?—Chicago Tribune.

Elephant Humor.

The courage of a lion at bay, great as it is, is no greater than that of the elephant, and he must yield his scepter to the elephant, declares H. L. Tongye in his book, "In the Torrid Sudan," as to courage, size, strength and intelligence. It is a temptation to declare that the elephant possesses a sense of humor. A herd of elephants once fell in with a train of donkeys. Their attention concentrated on the load the donkeys carried. With all the mischief of monkeys, the loads were torn asunder and their contents distributed over half the province. At Bor, on the Mountain Nile, the elephants were at one time full of practical jokes. Passing at night time through the village, they would knock the sleepers up by demolishing their huts about their heads, then contentedly march away.

The Cry of the Loon.

The cry of the loon is one of the strangest, weirdest sounds in nature. Those who have heard it can scarcely wonder that it has so often been woven into song and legend.

A blood red ring hung round the moon,
Hung round the moon. Ah, me! Ah, me!
I heard the piping of the loon,
A wounded loon. Ah, me!
And yet the eagle feathers rare
I, trembling, wove in my brave's hair.

Almost all writers who have attempted to describe the cry of this bird have likened it to unintelligible laughter. Thus Mr. Vernon Bellley, speaking of the sound, describes it as follows: "Only on the lonely lake in the heart of the vast woods do you get the startling thrill of the loon's wild cry—one clear, piercing note or a long, quavering, delionlient laugh that to the timid suggests a herd of screaming panthers."

Four Kinds of Liars.

The late Sir Frederick Bramwell was famous both as a witness and arbitrator in engineering disputes. It is recalled that his brother, the late Lord Justice Bramwell, on giving advice to a young barrister told him to be careful of four kinds of witnesses—first, of the liar; second, of the liar who could only be adequately described by the aid of a powerful adjective; third, of the expert witness, and, dually, of "my brother Fred."

Dry Farming.

That the year 1910 was a year of scanty and insufficient rainfall in Minnesota is a fact which gives no assurance that there will be more rain in 1911, but chances for 1911 are no better and no worse than for the previous year. It is well, then, that farmers should plan in advance to get the largest possible benefit from whatever moisture shall be available. This can everywhere be done by a resort to "dry farming" methods. These involve more work, but they practically insure a crop, and probably a better crop than would be secured by ordinary methods aided by an average rainfall. Irrigation, another method of crop insurance, a study of the possibilities of which, in the presence of Minnesota's thousands of brimming lakes and streams and of an exhaustless underground water supply, may well engage the leisure hours of our farmers. With so much water everywhere else, is it absolutely necessary that we should suffer again, as we did last season, for want of a little on the surface of our fields?—University Farm Press News.

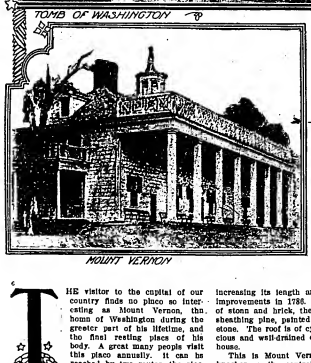
THE MT. VERNON OF TODAY



By ELLIOTT RANDALL

WASHINGTON AT MT. VERNON

TOMB OF WASHINGTON

MOUNT VERNON

THE visitor to the capital of our country finds no place so interesting as Mount Vernon, the home of Washington during the greater part of his lifetime, and the final resting place of his body. A great many people visit this place annually. It can be reached by two routes, the electric cars, which run from Washington, or by boat. This last is a favorite way, as it gives one a delightful trip on the Potomac.

It is well to go one route and return the other, for in both instances historic ground is traveled to the very gates of Mount Vernon—that spot filled with sacred memories.

Mount Vernon at first view presents a noble appearance. It stands on a hill 150 feet in height and the first glimpse reveals the house which one recognizes instantly. As the steamer nears the landing place and passes the tomb of Washington flags are lowered at half-mast and the bell is tolled, a custom said to have originated when a commodore of the British navy, as a mark of respect, ordered his ship's bell tolled when he passed Mount Vernon.

A world of history lies in this spot. Mount Vernon as it stands today embraces but 227 acres, a small part of the original estate which, by grant of Lord Culpeper in 1674, became the property of John Washington. From John Washington half of the estate descended to Lawrence Washington and it was he who built the house and named it Mount Vernon in honor of Lord Vernon, the British admiral under whom he had served. Later the property fell to George Washington, who purchased adjoining land.

In 1799, when George Washington died, the property passed as a life interest to his wife and later Bushrod Washington, John Augustine Washington and John A. Washington, Jr., followed in succession as owners of Mount Vernon. In 1855 the owner, though possessed of a large estate hallowed by sacred memories and associations, felt he was unable to maintain it, as it was not productive of material benefits. Both the national government and the state of Virginia were approached in regard to purchasing it. Finally through an agitation started by Ann Pamela Cunningham the Mount Vernon Ladies' association of the Union was organized and 200 acres of the Mount Vernon estate, including the tomb, mansion, attendant buildings and wharf, were purchased for $200,000.

The approach is through a gateway to an attractive green, which extends to the mansion. To the left and right are flower and kitchen gardens and many old trees, which were planted by Washington and his guests. One in particular is a large magnolia, which was set out by Washington in 1799, the year in which he died. George Washington enlarged the original villa, built by Lawrence Washington, by increasing its length and height, completing its improvements in 1785. Its foundation walls are of stone and brick, the framswork oak and the sheathing pine, painted and stained to resemble stone. The roof is of cypress shingles and a spacious and well-drained cellar underlies the whole house.

This is Mount Vernon and the large brass knocker on the central door of the west front indicates that this was the usual point of approach to the mansion. Nearby is the sun dial in the center of a spacious court, flanked by several frame buildings consisting of kitchen and offices, which are joined to the main buildings by colonnades.

When the threshold is crossed what mingled feelings of awe and respect fill the heart! How the thoughts fly as the relics displayed in the different rooms are viewed!

Several of the states have restored the various rooms at their own expense and many objects of the past greet the visitor. Here is the key to the Bastile, the prison so famous during the French revolution. Lafayette presented this to Washington in 1789 as a "trophy of the spoils of despotism." There is the music room with the harpsichord which George Washington presented to Nellie Custis as a wedding present. In the room is the original Chippendale sideboard and the iron fireback brought to this country by Lord Fairfax, friend of Washington.

Every room in the old mansion contains something of historical interest, but visitors are naturally drawn to the room in which Washington died. Here is the big four-posted bed upon which he lay when death overtook him. The quaint canopy and fixings of the bed have been restored and some of Washington's personal effects add much to the impressiveness of the spot. Among these are his military chest and camp equipment.

The family kitchen, with its quaint colored dishes, iron kettles and swinging cranes, is a point of interest, while the smoke house nearby, larder and spring house show that many guests were fed and much material prepared to clothe the slaves and provide for the general use of the family. Each is fitted up in the style of the time in which Washington lived. Among all the charms of the home of Washington not one can eclipse the ideal flower garden, with its box hedges indelibly marking the walks and flower beds as in the past.

Guests of distinction were invited to plant trees, shrubs and flowers, mementoes of their visits. Lafayette and Jefferson have lofty monuments here, and the roses named by Washington for his mother and others named for him and Nellie Custis still flourish. At the end of the long walk in the garden is the little schoolhouse in which the Custis children were taught.

The oldest building in the barn, erected in 1732 by George Washington's father. The English brick are laid in strong mortar made of oyster shell lime, and here were kept the coach and saddle horses. The white chariot, as the traveling coach was called, was kept in a carriage house nearby. South of the mansion on a bronze of the hill overlooking the Potomac is the summer house. It contains a beautiful view of the river and its deep cellar was once used as an ice house. Nearby is the deer paddock, which has been stocked with Virginia deer.

Though a tour of inspection develops historical attractions at every turn, the chief point of interest on the grounds is the new tomb of Washington, which stands several yards distant from the old mausoleum that once held the ashes of the Washington family. It is beautifully located in a clump of trees and flowering plants and vines surround it on all sides.

The simple yet eloquent statement marks its importance. It was planned by George Washington and built by his executors. Within the iron portals one may see the catafalque that contains the remains of Washington and the sarcophagus that holds the body of his wife. In the rear of the tomb is an iron door that opens into the receptacle that contains the remains of others of the Washington family. The iron grating that closes the outside entrance has been heightened, for at one time a vandal attempted to climb over it. The gate is locked and the key is said to have been buried in the Potomac. To the memory of Bushrod Washington and John Augustine Washington, successors to the general, marble shafts were erected in front of the tomb.

An old negro stands near at hand and for many years has discoursed to visitors on the spot and its surroundings.

The simplicity of the tomb is characteristic of the man and those that gaze upon the resting place of the great hero instinctively speak in whispers and are awed by the memories associated with the place. One is bewitched and enthralled with the place and lingers long on this spot, where reposes that which is mortal of him who was as brave a warrior, as staunch a patriot and as able a statesman as ever lived.

Clung to His Queue

Speaking of Wu Ting-Fang's published announcement that he would part with his queue in the near future, a former resident of a New England manufacturing town said: "Times have certainly changed. Twenty years ago a Chinese youth who had learned to speak English fairly well and who was sick of the laundry applied for work in my factory. He was the first of his race to do so in our town, and after talking the matter over I consented to give him a trial. Fearing that the queue might be a source of danger near machinery, I suggested that he have it cut off. After two weeks' deliberation he came to me and said, 'Stay in laundry.' A few weeks later he left town and I never saw him again, but I heard that his having considered my proposition made him so unpopular that he had to leave the place."

CURED HER BABY OF ECZEMA

"I can't tell in words how happy the word 'Cuticura' sounds to me, for it cured my baby of itching, torturing eczema. It first came when she was between three and four weeks old, appearing on her head. I used everything imaginable and had one doctor's bill after another, but nothing cured it. Then the eczema broke out so badly behind her ear that I really thought her ear would come off. For months I doctored it but to no avail. Then it began at her nose and her eyes were nothing but sores. I had to keep her in a dark room for two weeks. The doctor did no good, so I stopped him coming.

"One about two weeks I had used Cuticura Soap for her every day, then I got a box of Cuticura Ointment and began to use that. In a week there was a marked improvement. In all I used two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and my baby was cured of the soreness. This was last November; now her hair is growing out nicely and she has not a scar on her. I can not praise Cuticura enough, I can take my child anywhere and people are amazed to see her without a sore. From the time she was four weeks old until she was three years she was never without the terrible eruption, but now, thanks to Cuticura, I have a well child." (Signed) Mrs. H. E. Householder, 2107 Walnut St., Baltimore, Md., May 10, 1910.

Some Joy.

In Brooklyn a few weeks ago a Sunday school teacher asked his class of hopefuls this rather debatable question:

"Who will tell me what is the chief end of man?"

From the most attentive pupil came forthwith this answer: "To glorify God and annoy him forever."

Runs on the Bank of England.

Even the Bank of England has not been entirely free from runs nor from the necessity of saving itself by strategy. In 1745, for instance, it was forced to employ agents to present notes, which were paid as slowly as possible in sixpences, the cash being immediately brought in by another door and paid in again, while anxious holders of notes vainly tried to secure attention. In 1825, too, only the accidental discovery of £700,000 £1 notes saved the bank from stopping payment.—London Chronicle.

Kow-Kure

is not a "food"—it is a medicine, and the only medicine in the world for cow only. Made for the cow and, as literature indicates, a cow cure. Barrenness, retained afterbirth, abortion, scours, caked bag, and all similar affections positively and quickly cured. No one who keeps cows, whether many or few, can afford to be without Kow-Kure. Its mail regularity is to prove healthy, full milk pails, especially in winter months. Avoid "just as good." Send for free booklet. Ask your town's dealer for Kow-Kure, or send to the manufacturers,

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system.

THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.

THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by edicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of KNOWN COMPOSITION. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.

MANY ARE DIVORCED

RECORDS FOR 1910 SHOW A TOTAL OF 1,367 DECREES OF SEPARATION GRANTED.

MINNESOTA HAS A BAD RECORD

Hubbard County Has the High Ratio for Unions That End in Courts—Kandiyohi Heads the List for Happily Married.

St. Paul.—The truth of the divorce evil in Minnesota is not a pretty story from the standpoint of one who frowns on divorce. Out of every 13 marriages performed in this state, one of them ends in the divorce courts.

Last year 18,117 marriages were performed in the state and 1,367 divorces granted. But this does not tell the story. The divorce laws of Minnesota are not so easy or so broad that men and women flock here from other states to have their marriage bonds severed. On the contrary, scores or even hundreds go from here to Nevada, South Dakota and other states where divorce is a routine affair and given as rapidly as the court calendar will permit. Just how great this number of seekers for divorce is may never be known. It cannot be figured in a compilation of divorce statistics.

Divorce Heavier in Country.

The county that holds the record, Hubbard, where one marriage out of every 3.9 ends in the divorce courts, is overwhelmingly a farming community and has no cities of over 2,000 inhabitants; moreover, it is one of the smallest counties and most sparsely populated in the state.

The county with the best record, Kandiyohi, where there is one divorce in 154 marriages, is in the southern part of the state and is also overwhelmingly a farming community. It is also largely settled by Americans, with a very large number of Scandinavians. The single divorce to the 154 marriages is unique. Few counties in the United States can equal the record.

Cass county, with one divorce in every 4.4, and Crow Wing count with a record of one in 4.9 follow close on the heels of Hubbard county. They are very close to Hubbard, in the north central part of the state, and are similar in point of population, nationality and occupation of its inhabitants.

Kandiyohi's Record Unique.

The single case of divorce in Kandiyohi county was that of a farmer who had left his home several years ago and had not been heard of since. The divorce was secured on the grounds of desertion. The clerk of the county court gives as his belief that the citizens of Kandiyohi county are a self-respecting, hard-working class of men and women who mind their own business and devote their time to being good citizens. He can think of no other reason for the absence of divorces.

The counties of Hennepin and Ramsey show a rather normal state of divorce in relation to the country at large, although Ramsey county with St. Paul as its chief city has about half as many divorces compared to the numbers of marriages as Minneapolis.

Ramsey county has a ratio of one divorce to every 14.4 marriages, while in Minneapolis there is a divorce in every seven marriages.

The following list shows by counties the divorce ratio for 1910 in Minnesota:

IN CHARTER DISPUTE

Faribault Citizens Present Strange Lineup in Commission Plan.

Faribault.—The proposed new charter for Faribault to be voted on at a special election has brought to light some strange bed-fellows. The Good Citizenship league and the saloon men seem to be working hand in hand for the adoption of the new commission form of government. Every saloon man in town is boosting for the new charter, while the league is making every effort along the same line.

The opposition to the new form of government is not saying much. The principal point of contention is that not enough time, only seventeen days, has been given the voters to consider the matter, although it took the commission two years to frame the charter; also that the ones who are supporting the new form are not familiar with the old charter.

Under the present charter the city bonded indebtedness has been decreased $65,000 in the last ten years, while many claim that the city has run in debt that much in the same time. Records show however, that the bonded indebtedness has been decreased substantially in the last few administrations. In addition to this, extensive improvements have been made.

The question of the legality of the new charter in case it should be adopted at the coming election has also been brought up. In drafting the charter and also in the published form, one section of the boundaries of the town was left out, while another section was included that never was included in the original boundaries. At a public meeting several men from Mankato, Des Moines and other cities, who are familiar with the commission form of government, will speak.

FAVOR THE CASHMAN BILL.

Sauk Center Business Men May Send Delegation to Aid its Passage.

Sauk Center.—The business men and the officers of the Sauk Center Commercial Club are in favor of the Cashman bill, and a petition is being circulated in its favor to be sent to Cashman and the representatives and senators from Stearns county.

It is said that Sauk Center lost the Keller factory chiefly because it was cheaper to do business in Minneapolis, and that discrimination is made against the small towns and cities, which the Cashman act would obviate. Sauk Center suffered with the loss of that factory, and finds that it is difficult to induce factories to begin operations here, because in freight rates the cities have the advantage.

It is also said that the same thing applies to shipments, especially of wheat and other grains. It costs 1 cent more a bushel to ship wheat from this city to the Twin Cities than it does from other nearby towns, and it is said that goods can be shipped almost as cheaply to Fargo, N. D., as to Sauk Center, a difference of many miles, the difference being only a few cents.

The petition is being signed and will be forwarded today and there is some talk of sending a delegation to St. Paul to help fight for the bill.

HEARING FOR SALOON MAN.

Wisconsin Liquor Dealer in Court on Charge of Murder.

Winona.—The preliminary hearing of Al. Childs, the Buffalo county, Wisconsin, saloon man who shot and killed Henry Dingdeider in his saloon two weeks ago, began at Alma, Wis.

The defendant is in a weakened condition physically, the effects of two operations during the last year and the beating he received after the recent shooting. Bail will undoubtedly be fixed at the hearing today, and it is understood Childs will be in a position to secure any necessary amount. Physicians do not believe the man will live to serve more than a few months in prison, should he be convicted.

M. L. Fuglee, attorney at Fountain City, is representing Childs in the present hearing.

STATE'S FIRE LOSS RUNS HIGH.

Annual Report Declares About $6,000,000 Is Lost Yearly.

St. Paul.—The fourth annual report of the state fire marshal was submitted to the governor. It shows that the annual fire loss to Minnesota is about $6,000,000 and to combat this immense loss the state spent last year but $6,522.43 or about ¾ of 1 per cent. Ohio, with an area of a little more than half of Minnesota's, spends annually $60,000 for the prevention of fire and has a working force ranging from 25 to 30 people. Wisconsin, by means of a ⅜ per cent tax on insurance premiums raises an annual fund of $28,000 to combat fires. The per capita loss through fires in the United States is $2.51, while the per capita loss of the six leading countries of Europe is but 33 cents.

In Minnesota in the last year there were 1,800 fires divided among 177 towns and cities. Of this number of fires Minneapolis had 506, St. Paul 366, and Duluth 159, making a total of 1,031 or more than half for the three largest cities of the state. Carelessness with matches, defective flues and sparks from chimneys and locomotives each caused more than 100 fires, while gasoline and kerosene in stoves and lamps caused 179 of the blazes.

SEVEN HELD FOR BURGLARY

Young Man of Waverly, Minn., Accused of Series of Petty Crimes.

Waverly.—With the arrest here of seven local young men, the authorities believe they have put an end to a series of petty burglaries which have for several weeks practically terrorized the community. The prisoners are William Martin, Joseph Leffler, Edward Leffler, George Gardner, Joseph Reardon, Joseph Kohoac and John Kohoac, all between the ages of 17 and 20.

Last week the Great Northern depot here was entered and $13 taken. Six weeks ago a hardware and a confectionery store were entered and considerable merchandise taken. A detective of the Great Northern road, Sheriff Grant and County Attorney Wolly have been working on these cases with the seven arrests as a result. The county attorney says that all the prisoners have confessed to being implicated in one or other of the last burglaries and that they will plead guilty before Judge Giddings of Anoka who will come here to hear the arraignments. All of the accused young men are well known here and members of respectable families.

MANY AUTOS ON EXHIBITION.

Annual Demonstration of Benzine Buggies at Minneapolis.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis automobile dealers in arranging for the coming auto show which opens Saturday, Feb. 18, in the armory, are planning on welcoming hundreds of agents and individual buyers from the country. No pains is being spared to produce a show which, from an artistic as well as a business viewpoint, will appeal particularly to country people.

There will be a million and a half dollars' worth of cars and accessories and the two hundred and fifty odd cars and commercial vehicles shown, will comprise all that is new and novel in motor circles. Farmers will find plenty of interest in them, as there will be shown many new types of convertible automobiles specially designed and adapted to the needs of those in the rural districts. Thousands of dollars are being spent in decorations, bands, soloists and other forms of entertainment, and the 1911 auto show in Minneapolis will, it is thought, break all former records, both for attendance and business done.

UNDERTAKERS ELECT OFFICERS.

Fred Gee, of Monticello, Heads State Funeral Directors.

Minneapolis.—The Minnesota Funeral Directors' Association elected officers as follows: President, Fred Gee, Monticello; first vice-president, George Hillyer, Winona; second vice-president, E. P. Gelly, Cottonwood; third vice-president, Mrs. M. B. Rader, Delano; secretary, V. M. Grady, Duluth, acting secretary; treasurer, J. F. McCarthy, Faribault (re-elected); members of the executive, E. C. Schroeder, St. Paul, W. P. Washburn, Minneapolis, and all the former presidents; delegates to the national convention, Lawrence Willwerscheid, of St. Paul, Mrs. M. B. Believes Free Seeds Not Best.

Sauk Centre.—Because Congressman C. A. Lindbergh of the Sixth district thinks that the seeds sent out free by the government is not equal to what the farmers can purchase he has decided not to send out any seeds to his constituents unless they are asked for by mail. In the past seeds have been sent out to farmers and others, whether they needed them or not, but Mr. Lindbergh has decided that only those who apply in writing will get any seeds.

GAMBLING CHARGE MADE.

Alleged Loser at Bemidji Fails to Recover Money; Gets Warrant.

Bemidji.—In the municipal court before Judge Pendergast, George Anderson asked the court for the return of $300 which he alleged he lost while gambling recently in the saloon of E. E. Geralds. The judge decided in favor of the defendant. A warrant was sworn out against Geralds by Anderson, charging the running of a gambling house.

Mrs. MacLachlan was kind to her American boarder, but she did not propose to allow her to overstep the limits of a boarder's privileges, and she made it very clear.

One Sunday the boarder, returning from a walk, found the windows of her roof, which she had left wide open, tightly closed.

"Oh, Mrs. MacLachlan, I don't like my room to get stuffy," she said, when she went downstairs again. "I like plenty of fresh air."

"Your room will na' get stuffy in one day," said her landlady firmly. "'Twas never our custom, miss, to hae fresh air rooshin' about the hoose on the Sawbath."—Youth's Companion.

The Farmer's Son's Great Opportunity

Why wait for the old farm to become your inheritance? Begin now to prepare for your future prosperity and independence. A great opportunity awaits you in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, where you can secure a Free Homestead or buy land at reasonable prices.

Now's the Time—not a year from now, when land will be higher. The profits secured from the abundant crops of Wheat, Oats and Barley, as well as cattle raising, are causing a steady advance in price. Government returns show that the number of settlers in Western Canada from the U. S. was 50 per cent larger in 1910 than the previous year.

Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop. Free Homesteads of 160 acres and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Fine climate, good schools, excellent railway facilities, low freight rates; wood, water and lumber easily obtained.

For pamphlet "Last Best West," particulars as to suitable location and low settlers' rate, apply to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Canadian Gov't Agent.

Restoring George Washington's Will

THE last will and testament of George Washington — perhaps the most precious and the most interesting of all the relics of the Father of His Country—has recently been saved to the nation. Moreover this rescue of the most significant document penned by our first president took place just in the nick of time. A few years more and the country might have had to mourn the loss of this priceless souvenir just as it has been mourning these many years past the disappearance of the original penned drafts of some of the famous speeches delivered by some of our most famous men on historic occasions.

It was not, in the present case, that fire or theft threatened the Washington relic—although it must be admitted that there is a possibility of loss by either of these means so long as it remains in its present depository. However, the destructive agent that recently aroused some of the nation's most prominent officials to the peril of the Washington will is nothing less than the ravages of time. Until within the past few months the public at large did not know of the whereabouts of the Washington will, if indeed it even knew of the existence of the paper. However, the officials of the state department and the library of congress have its resting place in as obscure county courthouse in Virginia, and whereas they realized the futility of their ambition to ever get permission to transfer it to Washington, where it ought to repose as a great national relic, they still had sufficient interest in it to keep a watchful eye on it so to speak.

Some months ago it suddenly came to the ears of these interested parties that the will—long known to be in a poor state of preservation—was in imminent danger of going utterly to ruin. Obviously quick action and heroic measures were necessary and thereupon there was inaugurated that project which has lately witnessed the complete restoration of the will by means of a miracle of manuscript surgery and document restoration carried on by the greatest experts in the country in this highly specialized line of work.

Persons who are at all cognizant with the care with which Uncle Sam fosters and safeguards all the important state and private papers of historical value that are in his keeping—for instance, the Declaration of Independence which is ever axon exposed to light—may naturally marval that so priceless a trophy as the will of Washington should have been allowed to fall into decay. The explanation is found in the fact, above noted, that the will is eot and never has been in the possession of the federal government. It was filed for probate in the year 1800 at the county seat of the county in Virginia where Washington resided and is that state it has remained ever since. A century of wear and tear might be expected to play havoc with almost any document red at times during this cyclo the Washington relic saw some rather rough handling for so fragile an object. During the

NEW OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE COURT AT FAIRFAX WHERE THE WILL IS NOW PRESERVED

Civil war, for oxample, it was carried to Richmond for safe keeping and came near being lost entirely in the confusion that attended the fall of tha Confederacy.

However, the worst experience of all came only a few years ago and resulted from an error of judgment on the part of the custodians of the will, who supposed that they were doing for the best. It had come about that as a result of the handling of the will the pinling together of the 23 pages and the waar along the lines of the creases in which it had been folded almost avary one of the sheats was completely severed through the middle. The persons in charge of the will realized in a vague sort of way that something ought to be done and they finally hit upon the plan of sewing together the severed sections of each sheet. When the government officials and othar prominent men interested in all existing mementos of George Washington heard whut had been dona they were all but ready to weep. As though it were not bad enough to

Temples of Babylon

The Deutsche Orient-Gesellschaft gives an interesting occount of the past year's excavatios work in three differcnt parts of Babylon.

In the wa quarter Assur-es-Sa-Alur were laid boro several hucdred meters of a wall about 25 feet thick, broken by numerous door openings which were originally flanked by towers. The most interesting find here was a coffin of burned clay, on the lid of which was a relief a bcorded head.

Near the sorth wall of the quarter known as Sachn was discovered o system of drains, built of brick, laid in asphalt. Here were also found several fragments of tablets with cuniform inscriptiuns from the time of Nebuchadnezzar. This discovery enabled the excavators to complete fragmontary tablets discovered some time bafore.

The legeod proved to refer to the building of the Zigurrat, the temple tower of Babylon. The beginning reads as follows: "Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, reverer of the great gods, establisher of Esagila and Ezida, son of Nebopolassar, of the King of Bebylon, am I. When Marduk, the grent lord, elevated my head I planned myself reverently bofora Marduk, tha god who created me."

After this Nebuchadnezzar gons on to boast that he made the temple "brilliant as the day with bitumen and blue glittering bricks" and that for the same ond he has bed mighty cedars prepared. The inscription ends with Nebuchadnezzar's prayar that Marduk will reward his pious deeds by granting him "eternal days."

Wruk was alan carried on at the town wall built by Nabonid, the last king of Babylon, who reigned 555-538 B. C. Ahmut 400 meters of this wall were uncovered. The wall is about 25 feet thick and has a tower every 60 feet.

The main gate lies in the line of the great Babylonian processaiun street. The pavament of the processional street at this point is perfectly preserved. It is constructed of two or three layers of bricks set in asphalt and covered with a thick coating of asphalt.

Klez Naboeid, it is proved, built his fortifications out of blocks of work constructed by his predacessors, as the excavators found brick with a four lined inscription of Nebglasar, in which this ruler, whoss inscriptions have hitharto been missing, describes himself as "the accomplisher of good deeds."

The excavations made in Assur by Dr. W. Andrae in tha season April to October yialdad still more important results. The complete ground plan of tha Temple of Assur was laid bare, and the history of tha great building pushed back in the third millennium. B. C. This makes it the oldest Mesopotamian temple so far discovered.

The temple was renawad by the King Samsi-Adad about 1800 B. C., and it was burned down 600 years later undar Salmanasear I., who however, reconstructed it on exactly the old lines.

Many important finds were made by Dr. Andrae. Near the door in the southeast front were found remains of a railaf of a bull three times largar than life aiza. Another find was an inscription of Sennacherib to the effect that he had "builded a house in the God Ninib." This presumably refers to an extension of the temple at the east corner, of which little remains, but the temple well built by Sennacherib is intact.

The Temple of Assur is shown in have been of vast extent. The excavations reveal a court yard surrounded by rooms and two immense halls. The excavators found here fragments of enamaled brick dating from modern Assyrian times and showing markedly the influence of Egypt. These bricks depict bottles, princes and soldiers on march and the destructio of fortresses.

attempt to sow delicate sheets of paper, it transpired that subsequent handlings of the sewed sheets had caused the threads to wear and cut their way through the paper and ultimately the pages were literally in shreds. All the while the relic was on display in an ordinary wooden box with a glass cover which permitted the will to be constantly exposed to the light while on exhibition at the county seat of Fairfax county and which would probably have faded out the handwriting entirely had not the document been penned with an exceptional quality of ink.

It was at this juncture that the government officials who volunteered their services were allowed to take a hand to save the wreck. The work of restoration was placed in the hands of a federal expert who has made a life work of the saving of damaged papers and manuscripts. Ha devoted weeks to the work and what he has wrought is little short of a miracle. In so far as the casual observer can detact the will is in practically the same condition as it was when it left the hands of its distinguished author. It is only when a pega is held to the light that one realizes that, technically, the document is but a ghost of its former self.

All sorts of obstacles were encountered in connection with the restoration of the will. It was ot first planned to hnve the odd salvage work undertaken by the department of state, tha manuscript surgeons of which branch of the government had already worked wonders with the Constitution of the United States, the Declaration of Independence and other documents. However, in order to get the benefit of the skill of the state department's experts it would ne necessary to remove the will to Washington for the interim while the work of restoration was in progress, and the county officials at Fairfax who had the say in the matter refused flatfooted to allow the document to leave Virginia.

It looked for a time as though this might block the whole plan, but finally the officials of the library of congress, who hevs on their staff a manuscript surgeon almost as skillful as the one at the state department, offered to send this wizard to Fairfax Courthouse and have him carry on the work thera. This was done and the outcome has been as satisfactory as though the work of rejuvenation had been conducted in the well-equipped plant at the nstional capital. However, there were many handicaps and not the least of these was found in the necessity for transporting to Fairfax o heavy press and other paraphernalie needed for the intricate picking of the torn and ragged pages and mounting tham on the cardboard mounts, one of which has been provided for each page of the will.

Unquestichebly tha gratifying success which has attended this attampt to restore the Washington will to the appearance it bors one hundred years ago has been due in no small measure to the aid offerded by o number of blank sheets of paper made especially for George Washington and watermarked with his name. When the government officials first isspected the torn and tattered will with a view to applying their ingonious "first aid" traotmant they at once realized that an inordinate amount of piecing and patching would be necessary and they were in a quandory where to obtain material that would match the original, for, of course, the will was written on very distinctive paper, and to patch it with ordinary paper of present-day manufacture would have resulted in only partially concealing the wounds made by time and careless hands.

There was e long search for paper that could be used with confidence that no person examining the restored document without the aid of a magnifying glass could tell where the original left off and e patch began. Finally the officials discovered in a second-hand bookstore in Washington a number of sheets of the writing paper which General Washington bad manufactured especially for his personal use and this paper was used wherever naw tissue hod to be grafted on the original document, with the result that the appearance of the original has been simulated so as to defy detection. Each sheet of the will has been so backed or mounted upon "grapelle" that it will stand any reasonable amount of handling and the ink of the will has been "set" so that there is little danger of further fading.

However, for all that the precious document has been put in condition to stand another century of strenuous existence as it used to be, is not likely that it will ever again be called upon to suffer such neglect or abuse as in the past. The county officials who are the custodiees of the will appear to be aroused to the necessity of giving it more intelligent care than it enjoyed in years gone by. To that end the pages of the will have been bound in the form of a book with handsome red levant cover and a special fireproof, burgler-proof steal safe, made specially for the purpose under the supervision of the government officials will henceforth be the repository of this relic.

The attention which this restoration of the will is receiving is expected to result in the visits in futura of considerbla numbers of tourists and sightseers to Fairfax Courthouse, the Virginia hamlet where the will has its home—far more so since this historic spot can now be reached by trolley from the national capital. The county seot of the county where Washington lived and died has many picturasqua landmarks not the least interesting of which is the old courthouse in which Washington's will was probated and which presents today the same appearance that it did on that historic day more than a century ago. The will is not kept in the courthouse but in the office of the clerk of the court, which occupies a separate building. The work of restoring tha Washington will, had it been entrusted to any manuscript surgeon outside the government service—and there are only a few such in the country—would have cost $100 to $250 at least and it is probable that several times that sum might have been demanded for the service for which the government made no charge.

WONDERFUL NATURAL BRIDGE

Perhaps the Largest in the Whole World is Located in Southwestern Utah.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—The largest natural bridge in America, if not, indeed, in the whole world, is that on the George Natural Bridge in southwestern Utah, not far from the stata boundary line. Its total length between the bugo natural abutments is about 200 feet; the width of the "roadway" is some 25 feet, and the span in the clear is about 99 feet. From the bed up tha span is 160 feet. At the bottom flows a small water course.

Just what produced this work of nature bes for some time puzzled the leeding scientists of the country. It could scarcely have been created by the wear of the water, unless there was a very large and swifc current flowing where the little brook is now. The general opinion is that the volconic action at some distent period of the world's history, was the octive agency. This existence of the bridge is of compeetively recent knowledge to the public, though the Indians often spoke of it to the early settlers of that part of Utah. Little credence, however, was given to their stories until about 10 or 12 years ago it was discovered by some mining prospectors. It is located in the heart of a vary rugged region that is difficult of eccess.

The span is composed of dark brown sandstono of an unusually hard quality, and is 20 feet nr more in thickness. Engineers who have made a careful examination of this bridge pronounce it perfectly safe.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Have Hopes for Lakes-to-Gulf Canal

WASHINGTON.—The fact that congress continues to nurse various projects for artificial waterways may probably be taken to indicate that sooner or later some of these canals will be constructed. The rivers and harbors bill, as amended by the senate, and as it will probably stand when finally passed, directs the national waterways commission to make a careful study of the advisability and feasibility of the proposed canal from Lake Erie, by way of Fort Wayne, or by some other direct and feasible route, to the southern end of Lake Michigan, and of a canal from the Ohio river, at a point near Pittsburg, to Lake Erie. The commission is also directed to look into the feasibility and practicability of a canal to connect the Atlantic coasts river, here at the national capital, with Chesapeake bay, or some tributary of that bay.

In the case of the proposed canal from the Ohio river to Lake Erie, the bill provides that the expense of investigating as to its feasibility and practicability shall be borne by the local interests affected. No such provision is put in with respect to the investigation of the proposed canal connecting Lake Erie with Lake Michigan. By the terms of the new rivers and harbors bill, the waterways commission is to have two years from the 4th of March in which to investigate these projects. In making the investigations the commission is authorized to call upon the engineer corps of the army to furnish data.

Nearly every observer with a large range of vision is convinced that sooner or later, a canal connecting Lake Erie with the lower end of Lake Michigan will be built, and that a canal will eventually connect Lake Erie or Lake Michigan with the Ohio river. Persons who have devoted some study to this subject of artificial waterways are disposed to believe that when the country is ready for a canal connecting the Ohio river with one of the great lakes the demand will be for a canal extending from Lake Michigan, through Indiana to the Ohio river.

There are many reasons for believing that when such a waterway is completed, the building of artificial waterways here at home will be undertaken on a large scale. It is generally assumed that the lakes-to-the-gulf waterway will be the first of the projects put through.

Uncle Sam Would Have Us Eat Venison

UNCLE JIM WILSON, of the department of agriculture, hopes to put venison, that luxury of the rich, on the table of every citizen in our country, and at a less cost than that of beef. He aims to accomplish this by convincing farmers that they can raise small herds of deer or elk or antelope on land that is at present absolutely valueless and with practically no attention after the start is once made.

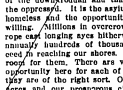
In many parts of the country there are tracts of land which can be more profitably used for raising venison than any other purpose.

The propagation of game is as legitimate a business as the growing of beef or mutton, and, according to the department, the producer should be permitted under reasonable regulation, to dispose of his product at any time, either for breeding purposes or for food. This some of the state laws now prohibit.

The flesh of young antelope is said to be much superior to ordinary venison. That of mature animals, particularly the males, has a strong flavor; but this may be greatly improved by domestication. A full grown prong horn weighs from 100 to 125 pounds, and will dress from 65 to 80 pounds.

The deer family stands next to the cattle and sheep family in general utility. The flesh is a valuable food. Venison was more common than beef on the tables of medieval Europe and was the most commonly eaten by early settlers and frontiersmen in North America. Its dietetic value is enhanced by the fact that it is especially adapted to invalids who require a nourishing, yet easily digested food.

Men Hold Trump Card in Social Game



THERE is a story abroad in Washington, whether true or not, that the pampered men of the capital are about accepting invitations and then at the last moment turn a flipflop if they get a card from a hostess whom there is not to be more fun going on. Anyway, it is the men of Washington who hold all the trump cards in the social game, as one may infer from this declaration of a dashing young American baroness who left here not a great while ago:

"Sorry to go to Turkey? Sorry to set up housekeeping in Constantinople? Not a bit of it! Why, my dear, things will be changed completely. Over there I will not have the delirium-tingles wondering whether I'll have men enough to go around if I give a dance or a dinner—for, indeed, it will be just the other way about. I'll be picking and choosing, and each dear man will be fighting properly as to whether I'll choose him or his brother. Turkey for me! The men here are spoiled foolish. To be sure, you have enough of them and to spare; the only trouble is if they are so generally willing to consult their own convenience without regard to the anxiety they cause the women who entertain."

This baroness enjoyed the reputation of scaring the wits out of the other dames who were contemplating dinners or dances.

Wherefore, putting two and two together, the baroness' departure was accompanied with more grief than one could weep for—even though she did do things up so beautifully.

Increase in Our Foreign Criminals

THIS is the land of the free and the home of the brave. It is the haven of the down-trodden and the hope of the oppressed. It is the asylum of the homeless and the opportunity of the willing. Millions in overcrowded Europe cast longing eyes bitterward and annually hundreds of thousands succeed in reaching our shores. We have room for them. There are work and opportunity here for each of them—if they are of the right sort. Our brothers and our prosperous cities can care for another hundred millions as easily as they support those who are here. All we ask is that they be earnest in the desire to be good Americans capable of self-support, healthy of mind and body.

But, unfortunately, in our generous hospitality we are imposed upon. This great country of ours in fairness to ourselves should not be made the dumping ground of the mentally incompetent, the physically incapable, the morally perverted, and against these outnumbles the barriers should be made higher and more nearly impenetrable.

We fry at Ellis Island to maintain some sort of supervision of immigration and we do turn back many whose presence among us would be a danger and a burden. But we should go further than this.

What stronger object lesson of the necessity for careful espionage on immigration do we need than the report of the New York state superintendent of prisons, Cornelius V. Collins? He tells us that, notwithstanding the growth of the parole system, our prison population is increasing rapidly; that our state prisons are shockingly overcrowded, and that—here's the point—more than 51 per cent. of this prison increase is directly traceable to the trend of foreign criminals to the United States.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

POLICE JUDGE A SOLOMON

The author of the famous Pollard Pledge is William J. Pollard. He was magistrate of the Dayton Street police court in St. Louis, when one day a man was brought before him on the charge of having beaten his wife. The case against him was clear and he was sentenced to six months in the workhouse. Then the wife began to cry and to plead for the man she had brought before the court.

"He is the sole support of my six children and myself," she said. "If you send him to jail, Judge, we will starve. I would rather take his beatings and have food for my little ones. Please, judge, let him go."

Judge Pollard was in a quandary. He looked at the brutal face of the prisoner, and he gazed at the tearful wife. He picked up pen and ink and wrote a few lines on a sheet of paper.

"I have written here a pledge by which you promise to abstain completely from the use of intoxicating liquors for one year from date," said the Judge to the prisoner, "and you will report each week, that I may judge whether or not you are keeping the pledge. If you sign this pledge I will withhold sentence upon you, but if you ever violate this pledge within the year, I will send a policeman after you and send you to the workhouse for six months."

The prisoner signed the pledge and left the court room with his wife. So was born the famous "Pollard Pledge" that has swept around the world. The man who had beaten his wife nine years ago when the pledge was created became a model citizen.

"JIM" MARTINE OF JERSEY

One of the picturesque figures in the next United States senate will be James E. Martine of New Jersey. "Jim" Martine is new Jersey's first Democratic senator in 16 years. He is a man of many mannerisms that have caused some persons to call him eccentric, but it is claimed that Mr. Martine is not an eccentric person by any means. The fact is, in his home town would take him to be a southerner of the old days. On the streets of Carlstadt he will see him stroll ing along, wearing his fedora hat (Kentucky colonel style) shading his eyes, and calling to first one man and then another.

Like all men who enjoy mingling with the public, Mr. Martine has his hobbies, and his pet ones are politics, farming and cows. The latter named came to him as a birthright. As for politics, Mr. Martine is a politician for the love of it. Of his 61 years 43 have actually been engaged in politics. As a political sticker, Mr. Martine has an unusual record. Defeat after defeat has followed his battles, but nothing daunted him, and he at least had the satisfaction of running ahead of his ticket.

NEW FEDERAL JUDGE NAMED

The recent appointment by President Taft of Representative Walter Ingiswood Smith of Iowa to be a judge of the eighth circuit of the federal courts to succeed Judge Van Devanter, promoted to the supreme court bench, has created considerable stir in political circles.

One of the principal reasons for political interest in the appointment of Judge Smith is connected with the fact that a candidate presented by progressives for the same position was Representative George W. Norris of Nebraska, insurgent leader, who directed the revolution last March which resulted in the ousting of Speaker Cannon from the rules committee. Judge Smith has been in congress since 1900.

Judge Smith was born in Council Bluffs, July 10, 1862. He received a common school education, studied law, was admitted to the bar in December, 1882, and was elected judge of the Fifteenth judicial district of Iowa in 1890, and re-elected in 1894 and 1898. He was elected to congress in November, 1900. He has been in the house of representatives continuously since that time and was re-elected last November.

TOGA FOR TENNESSEE EDITOR

Luke Lea, practical owner of the Nashville Tennessean-American, and younger leading politician in Tennessee, has been named by the general assembly to succeed to the seat in the United States senate held by James B. Frazier. His election is the last echo of the tragedy in which ex-United States Senator Carmack was killed.

At the time Carmack was shot he was editor-in-chief of the Tennessean. Lea is generally spoken of as "the man who made Governor Patterson" in the first place, and the one who contributed more subsequently than any other in defeating him, after he had pardoned Colonel Cooper, imprisoned for the Carmack killing.

Lea is 32 years of age, a graduate of the University of the South at Sewanee, and is the second Luke Lea to attain prominence in the politics of Tennessee. He is the son of Overton Lea, a descendant of Andrew Jackson. He came into prominence locally in Home Telephone company's fight against the Cumberland Telephone company for a franchise in Nashville. In 1907, when the county unit primary plan was adopted, Lea supported Senator Carmack.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Country Aghast at Opium Consumption

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The recent raids on opium smugglers made in New York and other cities by federal officers are preliminary to a nation-wide crusade by the authorities in Washington to check the ravages of the opium habit.

Government statistics reveal that more opium is consumed in this country per capita than in China. Four hundred thousand pounds of crude opium are imported annually and the raids show that vast quantities are smuggled. The population of the United States is 91,000,000. The annual consumption of opium in China in all forms is 1,500,000 pounds. China's population is more than four hundred million.

One of the largest importers of opium in the United States called the attention of the National Civic Federation to the frightful growth of the evil. "The figures speak for themselves," he said in an address on the subject at a banquet of druggists in Philadelphia. "Unless an effective check is put on the opium evil it will sap the physical as well as the moral strength of the nation.

"Germany, with a population of about 60,000,000, consumes only 16,000 pounds, as against the 400,000 pounds actually accounted for in this country; in Italy, with a population of 33,000,000, the consumption is about 6,000 pounds; in Australia-Hungary, whose combined population is nearly 50,000,000, the annual consumption does not exceed 4,000 pounds; Holland, with a population of 6,000,000, consumes 3,000 pounds annually.

"In Europe there are 146,000,000 people who consume annually only about 30,000 pounds of the drug, while our population of 100,000,000, by import figures, consumes more then ten times that amount, to say nothing of the vast quantity that is clandestinely brought into the country."

President Taft urges immediate action to check the growth of the evil. There is now pending in both branches of congress a measure, known as the Cullom-Foster bill, to control the traffic by subjecting it to heavy internal-revenue taxes. This bill also provides for a practically prohibitive tax—$200 a pound—on smoking opium. The control of other forms, principally morphine, will be more difficult, it is conceded, although it is said that in that form the drug is most widely used.

Burials Cheap in This Arizona Town

PHOENIX, Ariz.—Come to Arizona to die and get buried cheaply. The Maricopa county board of supervisors has just closed a contract with a local undertaking firm whereby those who die in such circumstance as to necessitate burial by the county will be laid away decently at the expense of one mill per person. This includes an upholstered redwood coffin and full funeral service.

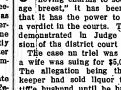
Four firms bid for the county business, and none may be said to have sought to exact an exorbitant stipend. The highest price asked per corpse was $4.25, while one firm offered to do the work for 10 cents each and another for one cent. The firm bidding one-tenth of a cent was the "lowest responsible" bidder and got the business.

The county burial bill, even at one mill, will in the twelve months for which the contract is made, run up into several dollars. This is due to the fact that Phoenix, the seat of Maricopa county, is a famed resort for tuberculosis victims.

Behind the bid lies the reason. It is worth something for the undertaking firm to get its name in the local papers every time a corpse dies. At the same time, one can never tell by the appearances a living man presents what his estate will divulge. It has been demonstrated that not only do the undertakers who have the county contract not lose money, but actually make a good profit in addition to the advertising.

It frequently happens that one case makes up for the losses an a whole year's contract and hence many other cases of supposed indigents to create a handsome profit for the business.

Gotham May Have Reached Its Growth



NEW YORK.—That New York City has nearly reached its maximum of growth and will find its supremacy as the biggest city and the most important commercial center in the western world threatened by competitors during the next thirty years is the belief of Walter Laidlaw, secretary of the New York Federation of Charities and Organizations and a census expert of note. Dr. Laidlaw frankly sets aside as preposterous the commonly accepted estimates of the tremendous growth of the city in the next three decades and prophesies that in 1940 the population will not exceed 9,000,000.

In a long report on "New York's Future," Dr. Laidlaw notes that the two greatest causes of the city's rapid rise to pre-eminence were the building of the Erie canal and the immense immigration, and he declares that there are now certain factors working against a continued increase.

In the first place, Dr. Laidlaw sees a continuation in the decline in the share of New York in the foreign commerce of the nation. In the last thirty years it has fallen from 54.8 to 47.7. Canada is becoming an important competitor and other American ports are doing their best to overbeat the metropolis. Providence, Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia and other ports are formidable rivals. The proposed intercoastal canal, the development of the Mississippi, the commonly accepted estimates of the tremendous growth of the city in the next three decades and prophesies that in 1940 the population will not exceed 9,000,000.

Threat to Sing Duet Wins Judgment

OMAHA, Neb.—In addition to music "having charms to soothe the savage breast," it has been discovered that it has the power to bring about a verdict in the courts. This has been demonstrated in Judge Sears' division of the district court in this city.

The case on trial was one wherein a wife was suing for $5,000 damages. The allegation being that a saloon keeper had sold liquor to the plaintiff's husband until he had become a drunkard. H. C. Murphy represented the plaintiff and A. H. Murdock and A. C. Pancoast were attorneys for the defendant. The testimony had been introduced, when Murphy announced that, instead of arguing the case, he would read the "Drunkard's Lament," after which he would recite excerpts from "Ten Nights in a Barroom," thereafter asking the jury decide without further argument.

Murdock and Pancoast stated their willingness to submit the case without argument, but before doing so they wanted permission to sing a duet. A settlement was reached by conference and a substantial judgment agreed upon in favor of the plaintiff.

Murphy one year ago won an important suit by singing to the jury after he had completed his argument. He sang a few stanzas of a familiar old song. Without leaving the box the jury returned a verdict for his client. Opposing attorneys appealed, alleging that Murphy in singing went outside the record, that his conduct was improper and that having a fine and well-trained voice, he took undue advantage of counsel on the other side. The Supreme court held with Murphy, deciding that an attorney could talk or sing his arguments to the jury and that there was no statute against such proceedings.

HUNTING AND FOOTBALL.

Thirteen men were killed while on hunting excursions in this state in the brief open season. That is the number of young men killed in football in the whole country this year, or as many Pennsylvanians as have died from this cause in a century. These figures are offered not to prove that football is without a certain amount of risk, but to show that all human occupations are accompanied by some dangers, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. The law of averages is a remarkable one. It indicates that about a certain number of persons die each year from fortuitous causes and if one cites in looking the other supplies the deficiency. Parents who are afraid their boys will be injured or killed playing football may be encouraged by the fact that it is proved to be one of the most innocuous of sports. The danger from death or severe injury in our college sport is not anything like so great as that of being run down by an automobile or trolley car. Human life is precious and must be conserved. Science has done much for those who err in certain directions, but it has nothing to offer those who suffer from pure accident. All of which means that what is needed by young and old is simply a modicum of common sense. It is not to be forgotten that the mother who kept her boy home from school because he dreamed he had died was an actual mourner a few hours later because he fell off the roof. Let us all act sensibly, with courage, faith and proper caution. Those who take the most pains to escape accidents are apt to be the worst sufferers, but it is certain that boyish sports are not dangerous compared with the most ordinary avocations of adults.

A New York chauffeur, 17 years old, convicted of manslaughter in the second degree while on a joy ride, has been sentenced to spend 15 years in the Elmira reformatory. The judge remarked that the next joy rider brought before him would be sentenced to Sing Sing, adding: "You are only 17 years old, and it seems to me that the state of New York is guilty in fault in permitting such a youth as you to drive an automobile on our public thoroughfares." The judge was right both in inflicting the penalty and in his comment on the recklessness that permits children to handle these powerful machines, says the Indianapolis Star. It is not until adequate punishment is measured out to careless automobile drivers that their disregard for public rights will be checked. At the same time it is worth while to remember that not all the many accidents by any means occur when young drivers are in charge. There is the Anderson cass for example, reported the other day, where a business man of mature years turned to look back while driving his machine, and at that moment ran down and killed a child.

Canada has custom house troubles also. It seems some of the fair damsels and matrons of the Dominion have the habit of coming over to "the States," getting new gowns and sending them back across the border, without going though the form of paying duty, says the Troy Times. And it is more than hinted that the ladies not infrequently indulge in smuggling in other ways. So the Canadian collectors have taken a leaf from the hook of Collector Loeb of New York and at the more important lines of travel to and from the Dominion have established extra vigilant guards, assisted by women searchers. The result has been some clever captures and a considerable addition to the Canadian revenue. From all of which it will be seen that trying to cheat the government is a practice confined to no one clime or country.

Proportionately, it is said, the number of insane people in this country is increasing faster than the population is growing, taking asylum statistics for it. Even at that, there is scarcely a fellow but will declare that the asylums don't get them all, either.

A feminine scientist wants a mothers' course established in colleges. Still, the old-fashioned mother apparently understood her business very well, and probably present-day scientific infants are not so happy as her cuddled and petted babies.

A prisoner who stole 16 cents was discharged by the judge. That is a great disappointment to the authors of weepy poetry, who naturally expected the offender to be sentenced to imprisonment for life.

French aviators fell 600 feet in an aeroplane and were not hurt. Fate favors the bold, but then fate is also notoriously capricious, so experiments need not go on, depending on fate's favors.

ANDREW CARNEGIE'S PEACE DOVE

WAR IS THREATENED

RUSSIA TELLS POWERS IT WILL MAKE MILITARY DEMONSTRATION AGAINST CHINA.

CHARGES TREATY VIOLATION

Czar Orders Troops Rushed to Ill District Across Border to Enforce Free Trade Demand—Washington to Ask for Peace.

St. Petersburg.—Because of China's persisting violation of the St. Petersburg trade treaty of 1881, Russia Thursday notified the governments of Germany, France and Great Britain that she intended to make a military demonstration on the Russo-Chinese frontier. War seems certain between the two powers unless Chine backs down from her present attitude.

Russian troops will be sent forth with to the district of Ili. The extent of the demonstration, it is added in the diplomatic note, will depend entirely upon the attitude assumed by China.

The questions involved are free trade in Mongolia, the extraterritorial rights of Russia in China and the establishment of a Russian consulate at Keobdo, Mongolia.

There have been rumors recently of an intention of Russia to bring pressure to bear upon China because of alleged violations of the Russo-Chinese treaty. That the situation was acute, however, has been denied, both by the Chinese foreign board and the Russian legation at Peking. It has been admitted that there were differences in the interpretations of the international agreement as made at St. Petersburg and at Peking. The treaty adopted in 1881 expires this month and it has been reported that China was not willing to renew it—at least not until certain modifications had been made.

The treaty of 1881 provided for the re-establishment of the Chinese government in the province of Ili, which had been occupied by the Russian armies since 1871. Interest in the Russo-Chinese situation will have to do chiefly with the attitude of the other powers, though Russia's understanding with Japan and the other powers would appear to have paved the way for any coercive measures contemplated against China.

Washington.—The Russian government has ordered several regiments of troops to the Russo-Chinese frontier, according to intelligence sent to the state department here by the Russian government.

The United States state department will immediately ask both countries to submit their grievances to The Hague tribunal and hold in abeyance any hostile demonstrations until that body can act. This step will be taken with a knowledge that Czar Nicholas has always been o staunch supporter of The Hague court.

UNDER MARTIAL LAW

GEN. NAVARRO CLAMPS LID ON JUAREZ COMPLETELY.

Federal Troops Take Charge of Border City—New Battle Is Fought Near Mexicali.

El Paso, Tex.—Juarez is under martial law. General Navarro has taken possession of the Mexico-Northwestern railway, closed every business house, saloon and gambling places and is in full control of the city.

Four express wagons, loaded with arms and ammunitions, were captured by United States troops while they were attempting to cross the river near Palsens, east of this city. Eight Mexicans and two American accompanying the wagons were arrested.

A battle between Mexican troops and the insurgents took place when about thirty Mexican soldiers advanced from the desert and took up a position immediately opposite Mexicali. The soldiers fired 80 shots before the insurgents replied. The insurgents were scattered along the river bank on the Mexicali side, using the ravines for breastworks.

The United States troops are mobilized at the boundery line, while artillerymen are thrown along the line in front of the custom house. Hundreds watched the battle from house tops.

It is learned positively that Francisco I. Medero, insurrecto provisional president of Mexico, is at Guadalupe with Abrem Gonzales and members of the insurrecto board of strategy. This is admitted by members of the Mexican insurrecto junta in El Paso.

WILL SUE LUMBER BARONS

Department of Justice Is Preparing Its Case—Report of Commissioner Sent to Congress.

Washington.—Two sharp blows at the so-called lumber trust were struck by the administration Tuesday.

One was a statement from the department of justice that suit is to be filed against the combine based on complaints of discrimination, blacklisting, price raising and apportionment of territory.

The other was a report by Herbert Knox Smith, commissioner of corporations, showing the enormous extent of the holdings of the timber interests, giving warning of monopoly at no distant date, relating the steady increase in prices and predicting still greater advances by those who are engaged in cornering the forest resources of the country for speculative purposes. This report was sent to congress by President Taft.

GOMPERS APPEALS FOR AID

Seeks to Raise $500,000 to Ba Used in Los Angeles Labor Fight.

Washington. — Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has sent to all labor organizations throughout the country a circular asking aid in raising a fund of half a million dollars to be used in fighting opponents of organized labor at Los Angeles.

"We are issuing this appeal," said Mr. Gompers, "for the purpose of aiding our fellow workingmen in Los Angeles to maintain their rights and liberties as men of organized labor."

SENATOR TELLS PAN-AMERICAN CONFERENCE HE OEPLORES OPERATIONS OF LAW.

INDUSTRIAL EFFICIENCY HIT

Declares Government Is Busy Breaking Up Organization—Points to German Policy—Hanry White Tells of Value of Reciprocity.

Washington.—Senator Elihu Root of New York, in an address Friday at the closing session of the Pan-American commercial conference, praised the principle of organization in business and made a plea for the organization and combination of American business men for the promotion of trade with Latin America.

He deplored the fact that the operations of the law against the great industrial organizations "reduced the industrial efficiency of the country."

"It is important to break up organizations," said Mr. Root, "when they are monopolizing the means of subsistence, but there is one way to counteract this influence, and that is by substituting organizations on a sound basis, not violating any law, but securing the concerted action of great numbers of Americans who have a common purpose.

"The great principle of organization which is revolutionizing the business of the world applies to the extension of trade. Germany to a considerable extent requires a combination of her manufacturers, producers and commercial concerns; Japan also practically does this. But in the United States it cannot be done under government leadership because the people do not conceive it to be the government's function. It seems to be rather that the government is taken up largely with breaking up organizations and that retards the industrial efficiency of the country."

Senator Root aroused enthusiasm by his closing remarks that nowhere on earth were there "a more noble and admirable people among man than the Latin-Americas." He added that only when the people of the United States realized this and entered into real friendship with these countries would they reach o basis where American trade could he extended.

Henry White, formerly United Stetes ambassador to France, spoke of the value of reciprocity with all nations.

PUT QUIETUS ON ANNEXATION

House Finance Committee Report Adversely on Bennet Resolution—Taft Influence Succeeds.

Washington.—To offset the Canadian annexation talk which the administration feared might effect the reciprocity agreement, the house committee on foreign affairs by a vote of 9 to 1, reported adversely Friday on the resolutions introduced hy Representative Bennet of New York for the closing relations with Great Britain looking to the annexation of Canada.

Mr. Bennet was the only member of the committee who voted for the resolution and the action followed a conference of Chairman Foster and Acting Chairman McCall of the ways and means body with President Taft. One of the Bennet resolutions asked the president to report to the house for its information the facts concerning any negotiations pending with the Canadien or British government looking to annexation and any pending looking to Canadian annexation. The other resolution, a concurrent one, requested the president "to enter upon end to prosecute from time to time such negotiations with the British government as he may deem expedient for the annexation of the Dominion of Canada to the United States."

SEES A PROSPEROUS YEAR

Charles M. Schwab Returns From Europa in Optimistic Mood Over Business Outlook.

New York.—Charles M. Schwab returned on the Mauretania Friday from his midwinter vacation in Europe a more optimistic optimist as to the world-wide business outlook for the year than he was when he left New York three months ago.

"Every sign points to an unusually prosperous year, not only in the United States, but throughout the world," said Mr. Schwab. "The depression like a phantom or less extent extended around the world following our big panic of 1907, appears to have been replaced by a vigor of confidence and activity that augurs well. Business in all lines is booming, and is nothing more than in steel and iron. We could have no better sign than this."

BORAH SCORES NORTH

SAYS RACE PREJUDICE AS STRONG AS IN SOUTH.

Asserts Hypocrisy Is Shown Toward Negro—Taks Direct Vote Bill Up Today.

Washington. — Senator Borah assertes on the floor of the senate that the prejudice against the negro was no more pronounced in the south than it was in the north and added that the northern states played the parts of a hypocrite in contending to the contrary.

His declarations regarding the negro were made at the close of a prolonged speech in opposition to the Sutherland amendment to the senate resolution providing for the election of senators by popular vote. That amendment would have the effect of giving congress control of senatorial elections.

The Idaho senator contended that congress would have the right to protect the individual voter in senatorial elections even with the constitutional provisions giving specific authority that direction eliminated, and in so doing aroused sharp antagonism from Senators Nelson, Carter and Sutherland.

Mr. Borah treated the Sutherland amendment as a device to kill the resolution, declaring it to he a hulwark from behind which the measure might be shot to death.

The Idaho senetor's pronouncement on the race question was in response to the recent assertion of Senator Root that without the Sutherland provision the resolution would deprive the southern negroes of federal protection in the exercise of the franchise.

Mr. Borah dissented from the New York senator's view, and in doing so used language which elicited congratulations from many senators.

CONFESSES INSURANCE PLOT

William Robertsan Admits Body Found in Burned House Was Taken From Grave.

Ola, Ark. — William Robertson, brother of Henry Robertson, who was supposed to have been burned to death recently when his farm house was destroyed by fire near the village of Birta, has confessed that the charred bones found were those of a corpse whose body was secured by building a grave. The brother supposed to beve been cremoted held a policy of life insurance in a fraternal society and on investigation started when a claim was presented for payment called in the arrest of William Robertson. A reward has been offered for the capture of Henry Robertson.

VOTE MILLIONS FOR FORESTS

Senate Passes Measure to Buy Land on the White and Appalachian Mountains.

Washington. — After many years of delay the bill looking to the creation of national forest reserves in the White mountains and the southern Appalachians passed the senate, the vote standing 57 to 6.

The bill appropriates $2,000,000 a year until 1915 for the purchase of land for forest reserves in eastern states, and especially in the White mountains and southern Appalachians.

The bill passed the house of representatives last session and it lacks only the signature of the president to become a law.

SOCIETY SEES PRIZE FIGHT

Anthony J. Drexel, Jr., and Hon. Robert Beresford Have Knockout Battle in Gould Gymnasium.

New York.—The family of George J. Gould and a score of guests, including some of the most prominent society men and women of New York and Long Island, saw Anthony J. Drexel, Jr., and Hon. Robert Beresford fight to a knockout in the Gould's private gymnasium at Lakewood, N. J.

Drexel, although he put up a plucky and clever fight, was floored repeatedly by the English amateur champion, and was so helpless at the end of the third round that his seconds dragged him from the ring and admitted a knockout.

His Head Was Hard.

It is a common belief that the negro's head is capable of withstanding almost any blow.

The following story told by a prominent negro dentist of Danville, Ill., would seem to indicate something of the kind anyhow. Two negro men were employed on tearing down a three-story brick building. One negro was on top of the building taking off the bricks and sliding them down o narrow wooden chute to the ground, some thirty feet below, where the other was picking them up and piling them.

When this latter negro was stooping over to pick up o brick the former accidentally let one fall, striking him directly on the head.

Instead of its killing him, he merely looked up, without saying, and said, "What you doin' that, nigger, you make me late my tongue."—The Circle.

An Obituary Poem

By LAWRENCE ALFRED CLAY

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

In the village where Major Lee, retired on half pay, had taken up his residence, it was generally agreed by the villagers that he was dictatorial and without sentiment. Moreover, he was blunt-spoken and a kicker. He had run a regiment, and he felt it his duty to run the town. His wife and his daughter Nellie were well liked, but the people kept clear of the major. He didn't carry a loaded gun with him, but he had a very sarcastic tongue.

And yet underneath his bluff, as his own family knew, Major Lee had a heart, and that heart was filled with sentiment. He had revealed it on several occasions, and now the family parrot had died he was almost in tears. That the major should have endured the presence of a squawking parrot for a single hour was a matter of astonishment outside the family, but he had endured her for three years. That her death should bring a look of melancholy to his face caused certain people to think they had done him injustice.

Poll was dead. She had been found on her back beneath her perch, with all the squawk and chatter gone out of her. It was a case of old age and being too good. The major was the one to discover her lifeless remains, and for the first time in 15 years he was so choked up that he could not eat his breakfast.

"God, but it's tough—it's tough!" he said to wife and daughter. "We had a mutual affection for each other. She would swear when I told her to, and shut up when I raised my finger. Each of us had come to understand the moods of the other. She knew when I wanted to take my nap, and I knew when she wanted to take hers. I believe she thought of me when drawing her last breath."

"But, papa, she was a good deal of a nuisance, after all," replied Miss Nellie.

"Not a bit of it—not a bit. Nothing of the kind. This—"

"But she swore at the minister and called him names."

"That was just one of her little ways to keep things moving along. She didn't know she was swearing.

The Poem Was Read With Indignation

She thought she was getting off a joke of some kind, and the minister should have understood it so."

"I don't think people liked to hear her squawking."

"Then, as I told three or four of them, let them lump it. There's something wrong about people who don't like to hear the notes of an innocent bird. I can't bury her with the honors of war, but she shall have a grave under the apple tree, and then, daughter, I want you to write an obituary on her. I want it in verse, and I'll send it to the village paper to be published."

"But, papa, I can't write poetry," protested the daughter.

"Then teach yourself. You've got brains enough to grind out something."

The poor old bird was carried out and buried, and an hour later Miss Nellie sat down to the obituary. Her father gave her 15 minutes and then asked if it was finished. As often as every half-hour he appeared at the sessions and words that rhymed, and when the day had passed without the poem being finished he more than hinted that the struggling poetess hadn't her heart in her work. Even when the five-verse poem was handed in his hands, a day later, he insisted on such alterations that it could not be looked upon as a finished product for two days more.

That obituary was inclosed with tender hand to the village paper. A note from Major Lee accompanied it. He requested that it be published in the next issue, and in a conspicuous place. He didn't exactly assert that it was a gem of a poem, but left the editor to find out for himself.

About the time poor Polly was dying the dying act the editor and owner of the paper was 20 miles away and saying to a friend and chum in the city:

"I hate to break into your vacation, Clarence, old man, but I'm in a fix. Get to go west to settle up an estate and come home with a full pocket. He gone a month. You must come down and run the 'Eagle' for me."

"But I'm booked for the Catskills."

"They be hanged! Nicest town—nicest people—best fishing—finest girls. Why, you'll own the whole show in a week. All you've got to do is to steal an editorial or two on our relations with Japan, and the boys will do the rest."

There was further protesting and arguing, but in the end the "Eagle" man carried his point, and that was how Mr. Clarence Thorpe, author and journalist, came to be occupying the editorial chair of the village paper when Miss Nellie Lee's poem appeared.

The poem was first read with surprise, then with ridicule, then with indignation. It was an insult to send a correct obituary to the "Eagle." Mr. Thorpe was about to return it to the major with some caustic observations when Fate stayed his hand. Although Miss Nellie's name did not appear as the author, her father had given her credit in his letter. She might be one of the nice girls the editor had mentioned. The poem would not bear publishing, even as a burlesque, but why hurt a nice girl's feelings?

Mr. Thorpe laid aside the manuscript and took a walk. A boy told him in which direction to walk to pass Major Lee's residence. He didn't know exactly why he wanted to pass it, but he walked on. The major was sitting on the veranda with his cigar, and Providence ordained that a summer shower should begin to fall at that moment.

"Come in, sir—come under shelter till it's over!" called the old major, and the invitation was taken advantage of.

The two discussed politics and other things and exchanged names. The major received the impression that Mr. Thorpe had selected the village in which to pass a month or so, and perhaps gather material for another book. This gave him an opening to relate the death of the parrot and the construction of the poem, end to end in his sharp way.

"Yes; mailed the poem to our paper last night. I've been told that the editor is an ass, but perhaps he'll see the beauties in these verses. If he doesn't I'll call at his office and make it my business to find out why he isn't using a sawmill."

The "Eagle" was to be issued in three days. If the poem did not go in the major would keep his word. But Mr. Thorpe was determined that it shouldn't go in. He would shoot the major. He would even bribe the office boy to lie.

On the day the paper was to be issued, he encountered the man of war on the street and was taken home with him for another talk on the veranda. On this occasion he was introduced to Mrs. Lee and daughter, and two hours had passed very pleasantly when a boy brought a copy of the "Eagle." It was hurriedly opened by the major. No poem!

"Nellie, my bat and cane!" he shouted. "I'm going down there and call that editor a fool!"

Away he went in spite of protestations, and after he was outside the gate, Miss Nellie said:

"Oh, I do so hope he won't fire the editor in! It was an awful foolish thing to send such a poem as that. Mr. Thorpe, can't you help me to get it back? I want to get it without father knowing it."

Mr. Thorpe promised to see what could be done. The major found the editor out, and that his brought the office boy 50 cents. The next day it was 50 cents more, and the next and the next. Then the major gave up the quest. His emotions over the death of Poll had begun to wane.

Every two or three days Mr. Thorpa occupied a seat on the veranda for a time, and then he began to be invited to dinner. The editor returned from California, but still Mr. Thorpe lingered. That was at the end of three months, with a trip now and then to the city, that he major said to him:

"Yes, go to Europe—and if you can. Hang you, you rascal, I found out that you suppressed that poem on me, but I haven't laid it up against you."

French for Grandmothers.

One of society's latest fads is the conversational French class for mothers and grandmothers. The first one was begun so that the debutante would not feel their superiority too keenly because of their ability to speak French and German while the elders confined their linguistic efforts to English. Although an ambitious mother before this has often made use of the French nurse and thus gained a smattering of the foreign tongue, she has doubts today of her accent and the quality of her vocabulary, so she becomes a member of a class as speedily as possible, using the nurse only for practice between times. Once fired with linguistic fervor, the members of a class endeavor to make each meeting an occasion for conversing in French.

Effective Threat.

"I hear that old Grabit has agreed to give his son an allowance of $5,000 a year."

"Yes. The boy swore that if his father didn't give him more than $50 a month for spending money he would become a chorus man."

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Feb. 15.—The legislative sub-committee on the state fair has completed a tentative bill governing the fair, which will be put in final form this week. The bill is based upon Iowa's state fair law, changed to suit Minnesota conditions.

The principal feature of the proposed bill is the basis of representation in the state agricultural society, which elects the members of the state fair board. The bill allows each county which maintains a county fair three representatives and those not maintaining county fairs one representative each, to be appointed by the board of county commissioners. The membership of independent organizations, such as the cattle breeders and wool growers' associations, is reduced from 40 to 15. All subsidiary organizations of the leading independent societies are denied representation.

It was the understanding of the committee that there were only twenty honorary members. An investigation of the books, however, showed there are fifty-nine honorary members entitled to vote. The bill provides that only one new honorary member shall be appointed each year and he shall be the retiring president. The committee believes the number of the honorary members will be automatically reduced by death during the next fifteen years and that the number will finally be reduced to not more than twenty-five.

The bill provides that all state fair moneys shall be deposited with the state treasury. Owing to the objection that it takes too much time to secure money from the state treasury to pay the bills, a revolving fund is allowed the board to carry on its business. A report of the condition of this revolving fund must be made every month.

The committee also favors a provision taking away from members of the state fair board the power to fix their own salaries and giving it to the legislature.

The bill gives the supervision of the state fair buildings to the state board of control. This board would have charge of these buildings, as it has over all other state buildings. It would provide for repairs and supervise the letting of contracts and the construction of all new buildings.

The legislature joint committee on state fair recommended an appropriation of $350,000 for the construction of an agricultural building at the state fair grounds. The proposition met with opposition on the part of the senator and members of the committee.

St. Paul, Feb. 16.—Declaring that ballots in five election districts in Swift and Big Stone counties show evidence of fraud the majority of the senate elections committee reported in favor of S. F. Frosbaug, elitist member from that district, although Ray G. Farrington has a plurality of twenty-two votes on the recount taken by court order.

Losses for Frosbaug were found in all of these precincts, and in each one they were due to a number of ballots having two crosses under the head of senator, thereby invalidating the vote. The committee finde that in some ballots in every precinct the second cross was made by a person other than the voter and that the notes were not properly guarded between the original canvass and the recount, so that opportunity existed for fraud.

Senator C. F. Cook, democrat, of Austin, filed a minority report in favor of Farrington, who is a democrat and anti-county optionist, while Senator Frosbaug is a prohibitionist.

The house committee on railroads recommends the passage of a bill prohibiting railroad companies from employing persons as engineers or conductors unless they have had sufficient experience. According to the proposed bill an engineer must have three years' experience as fireman, and a conductor two years' experience as a trainman.

Senator B. N. Anderson has introduced a bill in the senate fixing the salary of the state dairy and food commissioner at $3,000 a year; assistant, $1,500; secretary, $2,000; chief chemist, $2,400, as many inspectors as are required, $125 a month. The senator introduced a bill appropriating $25,000 for the work of the state live stock sanitary board.

Senator H. W. Cheadle introduced a bill providing for the location of a branch school of agriculture near Duluth.

The prevent vessel tax of 3 cents a net ton of registered tonnage is increased to 20 cents a ton in a bill by F. L. Klemmer, of Faribault. The increase is recommended by the state tax commission. The low tax rate originally was adopted to encourage vessel owners to register their boats at Duluth.

St. Paul, Feb. 17.—The Wisconsin system of organization in the lower branch of the legislature is provided for in a bill introduced in the house by Representatives Andrew Devis, Carlson and W. A. Nolen. It does away with woman stenographers, clerk room sergeants and committee clerks. The chief is given supervision over all the assistant clerks, postmasters, doorkeepers and sergeants at arms. All of the employes are appointed by the speaker with the exception of the chief clerk and the sergeant at arms. The bill provides for 12 general clerks who must also be competent stenographers, able to pass a competitive examination. The chief clerk and sergeant at arms are to be elected from the list of legislative party and file on inventory with the custodian at the end of the session.

The bill gives the chief clerk a straight salary of $1,500 for regular sessions and $10 a day for special sessions. The other employes received from $3 to $5 a day. Under this bill the number of house employes would be reduced from 73 to 35.

Bill Bans Pistol Displays.

Fines or imprisonment for all dealers displaying dangerous weapons so they can be seen from the streets are provided for in a bill introduced by Senator Fosseen. Six months in the county jail is the maximum penalty fixed.

A companion bill providing a penitentiary sentence for any one carrying a dangerous weapon without a permit also will be presented.

Representative C. R. Fowler has introduced a bill to make closing arguments before juries brief, confining them to arguments advanced by the defense and introducing no new facts.

Examination of their own volition, without petition, into the reasonableness of any railroad rate by the state railroad and warehouse commission is provided for in a bill introduced by Senator Dunkley. It also provides that the commission shall have full power to fix rates.

Cigaret Bill Recommended.

C. A. Congdon's mill repealing the anti-cigaret law was recommended for passage by a unanimous vote of the house committee on public health and pure food. The bill was reported out with practically no discussion. Its passage was favored on the grounds that the anti-cigaret law of two years ago is a dead letter.

St. Paul, Feb. 18.—Roy G. Farrington of Ortonville was defeated in his contest for the seat in the Minnesota senate held by S. J. Frosbaug of Benson by the vote of 31 to 30. The 30 votes for Farrington were made up of 18 Democrats and 12 repled anti-county option Republicans. The 31 votes for Frosbaug came from two Democrats, 28 Republicans and one Republican, some county option, some anti.

By a vote of 33 to 31 the house rejected the minority report of the house committee on public acounts recommending the passages of R. C. Dunn's bill appropriating $28,100 to 274 overpayers for publishing last fall the proposed constitutional amendments, and reported the majority report, deducting $3,180 from the appropriation.

Senator J. E. Haycraft introduced a bill authorizing all village officers hold office two yenre instead of one, as at present.

As the result of criticism of the expenditures of the state board of health and particularly its allowance for the expense of Dr. H. L. Hall's recent trip to Europe as secretary of the board, the house committee on public accounts authorized the appointment of a subcommittee to make an investigation. Representative Albert Pfaender named Dr. W. T. Stone, R. J. Clarke and N. S. Hillman.

The senate committee on finance recommended for passage S. F. 247, by Senator F. E. Putnam, authorizing different state high schools for the teaching of agriculture, bandicraft and home economics. Thers are now three normal schools in the state that they have proved so popular among young people in their vicinity thet edditional ones are needed, it is said their usability and worth. Tha bill carries an appropriation of $87,000 for the maintenance of twenty-five schools for the biennial period, 1912-13.

The farmers of the house were represented by Representative Herman Nelson and his bill compelling threshermen to clean their engines and remove all noxious seeds and weeds before moving to the next locality. The committee on agriculture recommended for indefinite postponement on the theory that it imposed too much of a burden upon the threshermen. Nelson, as substitute, moved that the bill be printed and placed on general orders.

FIRE DOES $500,000 DAMAGES.

Standard Oil Sulphuric Acid Plant Destroyed.

Point Richmond, California.—Fire, caused by blazing soot from a chimney falling on the roof of the sulphuric acid plant of the Standard Oil company, destroyed that plant, a tank containing 500,000 gallons of crude oil and damaged the $1,000,000 acid plant. One man was terribly burned. Three men were injured. The damage is estimated at $500,000.

Huge Building For Seattle.

Seattle, Wash. — The last obstacle in the way of the erection of a forty-one story building in this city by the estate of the late L. C. Smith of Syracuse, N. Y., was removed when the council committee that has been going over the plans voted to grant the permit. The local agent for the Smith estate informed the committee that the skyscraper, which will be the highest office building in the world outside of New York, will be begun within the next six weeks.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, THE GREATEST WHEAT MARKET ON THE CONTINENT

REMARKABLE YIELDS OF WHEAT, OATS, BARLEY AND FLAX IN WESTERN CANADA LAST YEAR.

Figures recently issued show that the wheat receipts at Winnipeg last year were $8,269,339 bushels, as compared with the Minneapolis receipts of $1,111,410 bushels, this placing Winnipeg at the head of the wheat receiving markets of the continent. Following up this information it is found that the yields throughout the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchawan and Alberta, as given the writer by agents of the Canadian Government stationed in different parts of the States, have been splendid. A few of the instances are given:

Neor Redvers, Sask., Jens Hortness threshed about 50 acres of wheat, averaging 29 bushels to the acre. Near Elphinstone, Sask., many of the crops of oats would run to nearly 100 bushels to the acre. A Mr. Muir had about 200 acres of this grain and he estimated the yield at about 90 bushels per acre. Wheat went 35 bushels to the acre on the farm of Mr. A. Loucks, near Wynyard, Sask., in the fall of 1910. K. Erickson had 27 and P. Solvason 17. In the Dempster (Man.) district last year, wheat went from 25 to 30 bushels per acre. Fifteen acres on the Mackenzie & Mann farm went twenty-two-three bushels to the acre; in the Wainwright and Battleriver districts yields of wheat averaged for the district 35 bushels to the acre. M. B. Ness, of the Tofield, Alberta, district, got 98 bushels and 24 lbs. of oats to the acre, while near Montrose, over 94 bushels of oats to the acre was threshed by J. Leonie, notwithstanding the dry weather of June. Further reports from the Edmonton district give Frank McLay of the Horse Falls 100 bushels of oats to the acre. They weighed 45 lbs. to the bushel. A 22 acre field of spring wheat, on Johnson Bros.' farm near Agricola yielded 40½ bushels to the acre. Manitoba's record crop for 1910 was known as Marshall's wheat. From a near Westbourne, who have a total crop of 70,000 bushels, netting $40,000 or $200 an acre. G. W. Bowman of Pincher Creek, Alberta, had 25½ bushels of No. 1 spring wheat to the acre. Mr. A. Hatton of Macleod district bed wheat which averaged 21 bushels to the acre. B. F. Holden, near Indian Head, Sask., threshed 850 bushels of wheat from 20 acres.

On the Experimental Farm at Indian Head, wheat has gone below 40 bushels, while several, such as the Marquis and the Preeton, have gone as high as 54 bushels to the acre. At Elstow, Sask., the quantity of wheat to the acre ran, on the average, from 26 right up to 40 bushels per acre, while oats in some cases yielded a return of 70 to 80 bushels per acre, with flax giving 13 to 14 bushels per acre.

W. C. Carnall had a yield of 42 bushels per acre from an acre of breaking. Neil Callahan, two miles northwest of Strome, had a yield of 42 bushels of wheat per acre. Wm. Lindsay, two miles east of Strome, had 1,104 bushels of Regenerated Abundance oats from ten acres. Joseph Scheelar, 11 miles south of Strome, had 15,000 bushels of wheat and 5,000 bushels of oats from 180 acres. Part of the oats yielded 85 bushels to the acre, and the wheat averaged about 40 bushels. Stoba Brau, four miles southwest of Strome, had a splendid grain yield of excellent quality wheat, grading No. 2. A. S. McCulloch, one mile northwest of Strome, had some wheat that went 40 bushels to the acre. H. J. Blaser, a few miles southwest of Strome, threshed 353 bushels of wheat from 7 acres. Among the good grain yields at Macklin, Alberta, reported are: D. N. Tweedie, 22 bushels to the acre; John Currie, 24 bushels wheat to the acre; Sam Fletcher, 20 bushels to the acre.

At Craven, Sask., Albert Clark, threshed from 80 acres of stubble 1,899 bushels; from 20 acres of fallow 900 bushels of red fife wheat that graded No. 1 hard, 2 pounde to the bushel. Chorlee Keith threshed 40 bushels to the acre from 40 acres. Albert Young, of Indian Beach, secured from James Gaden, threshed 52 bushels per acre from summer fallow, and George Wyngard, Sask., from 130 acres of stubble and fallow, or an average of 38 1-2 bushels to the acre. Arch Morrison threshed 1,000 bushels of red fife from 150 acres. James Russell got 5,700 bushels from stubble and late breaking an average of 28½ bushels.

At Rosthern Jacob Friesen had 27 bushels per acre from 80 acres on breaking, and an average over his whole farm of 21½ bushels of wheat. John Schultz threshed 4,400 bushels from 200 acres, or 44 bushels to the acre. John Lopp had 37 bushels per acre from 200 acres. A. D. Dirk had 42 bushels per acre from 25 acres. Robert Roe of Grand Coulee threshed 45 bushels to the acre from 420 acres.

Sedley, Sask., is still another district that has cause to be proud of the yields of both wheat and flax. J. Cleveland got 30 bushels of wheat per acre on 100 acres and 18 bushels of flax on 140 acres. T. Dundas, southeast of Sedley, 40 bushels per acre on 30 acres; M. E. Miller, 34 bushels per acre on 170 acres of stubble, and 35 bushels per acre on 250 acres fallow; W. A. Dey had 32 bushels per acre on 200 acres of stubble, and 25 bushels on 250 acres of fallow; J. O. Scott had 30 bushels of wheat per acre on 200 acres, and 18 bushels of flax per acre on 300 acres; James Bullick averaged 23 bushels of wheat; A. Allan 30 bushels; Jas. Runlens, 40; Alex Ferguson, 38; W. R. Thompson, 35, all on large acreages. The flax crop of J. Cleveland is rather a wonder, as his land has yielded him $50 per acre in two years with one ploughing. Russell, Man., farmers threshed 30 bushels of wheat and 60 to 80 bushels of oats. A. D. Stenhouse, neer Melford, Sask., had an average yield on 13½ acres of new land, 63½ bushels of Preston wheat to the acre. Hector W. Swanston, a former neer Welwyn, Sask., had 5,150 bushels of wheat from one quartar section of land. John McLean, who owns two sections, threshed 12,860 bushels of wheat.

NOT ACCORDING TO PROGRAM

Practical Joker Meant to Astonish His Wife, and Doubtless He Did.

When the first shipment of frozen eggs arrived from Australia their extreme hardness astonished the brokers.

One man, calling at a broker's office, was emezed to see him taking aim at the wall with an egg.

"What the dickens are you at?" he said.

But the broker let drive, the only result being a slight dent in the wall.

The thing being explained, the men took a couple of the eggs, put them in his pocket, and left to startle his wife. Arriving home, he waited till the family was assembled for dinner, and then banged an egg at the new dado.

But the smile quickly faded from his face. The egg had thawed.—London Tit-Bits.

OTTUMWA WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Ottumwa, Iowa.—"For years I was almost a constant sufferer from female trouble in all its forms. I had shooting pains all over my body, sick headache, spinal weakness, dizziness, depression, and everything that was horrid. I tried many doctors in different parts of the United States but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than all the doctors. I feel it my duty to tell you these facts. My heart is full of gratitude to you for my cure."—Mrs. Kittie Tamplin, VANPELT, Old S. Ransom Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Consider This Advice.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous medicine, made only from roots and herbs, has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. There seems to be a boom in contract business on the eleven towns lately which will increase in July.

Governor Eberhart will deliver the Dedicatory Address for the Isanti high school at Thief River Falls next Monday evening. Everybody in town and the surrounding country are cordially invited.

John Lindmore seems to want to keep up the county division fight. We guess John begins to miss the revenue from the county division "jack pot," and wants to fight the battle over again at so much per. John has discovered that after Thief River Falls got through using him they turned him out to die, the same as some farmers do an old plug horse. They sometime shoot an old plug horse but they can not get rid of John in that way.

The sentence of I. H. Parkhurst to six months' hard labor at Stillwater, and $500 fine, by Judge Stanton for having furnished liquor to an Indian is just what Mr. Parkhurst deserved only a little more of it. Two years hard labor would be about the right dose to give them white men that will buy whiskey for an Indian.

Congressman Steenerson has a bill passed, authorizing homestead entries of the remaining vacant lands on the eleven township, at $1, per acre. The entryman must have a homestead right and in addition to the four dollars paid the government they are to pay any drainage tax that is against the land. The same terms of payments as the other lands have been sold on. The land is big inducement on both sides the land sold at auction, as it will bring settlers into the country.

TAKE NO CHANCES.

Again a big scare headline letter comes out in the Thief River Falls News making statements that the settlers on the eleven towns have more time to make final proof, which may mislead some of the settlers to let their seven years run out before they go to make their final proof. Put the following question up to any official of the Department of the Interior viz: Has a homesteaderyman more than seven years to plead a homestead entry before making final proof? Then see how quick they will answer NO. Then take another look at these big headlines, go home and sit down and let your seven years run out and let a stranger homestead your home. Then go to the cases that you got your extensions of information from and tell them that you lost your farm by taking their advice, and they will tell you they DID NOT KNOW YOUR SEVEN YEARS WAS OUT. Those who took their last seven years ago next June should make their applications to make the final proof the latter part of March or the first part of April, so as to get your proof made in May, or thereforepaid in June, before your seven years are out. If you make final proof in May you will not have to pay taxes any sooner than the one who proves a year from next March, 1912. Take no chances, is our advice.

BIGGEST CLOTHING SALE IN THE HISTORY OF RED LAKE COUNTY.

It will pay you to come to Red Lake Falls any time Between February 18th, and March 1st.

During these nine days we offer to the public the largest and best stock of clothing ever put on sale, and the way prices are cut will astonish you

"I am all right now, thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy."

The same relief is ready for you. Are you sure you do not need it? If Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy helped Charles Holmes, why won't it help you?

"I was troubled with heart disease, and after reading about Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy, I got a bottle. Before I got the Heart Remedy I had to sit up most of the night, and felt very bad at my stomach. Whatever I would eat made me feel worse, and my heart beat very fast. But thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy, I am all right now. I eat good, sleep good, and feel like a new man, although I am almost 68 years old. I have been a soldier in the late war of the rebellion, and was badly wounded." CHARLES HOLMES, Private Co. B, 56th N. Y. Infantry Volunteers, Walton, Delaware Co., N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is kept in thousands of homes as a friend always to be relied upon in time of need.

Sold by all Druggists. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your money is returned. Ask any Druggist.

He Was Not Lasonic.

John Morley in his life of Gladstone tells the story of the statesman's examination for admission to Oxford university when he was a youth. The examiner, having utterly failed to floor the candidate on school lore, put to him a sly, subtle, "We will now leave that part of the subject." "No, sir," replied the candidate, "if you please, we will not leave it yet," and proceeded to pour forth a fresh stream. The dean in Mr. Gladstone's day was Gaisford, a famous enemy other things for his free-hail brevity. "This laconic girl," observes Mr. Morley slyly, "the dean evidently had not time to transmit to all of his flock."

Genius and Goodness.

I have had sometimes in mine the clavel bud white palm of the upper class and the heavy black hand of the lower class and have recognized that both are but of men. After all these have passed before me I say that humanity has a synonym equally and that other herein there is but one thing we ought to love to, speak, and the only thing before which we ought to kneel, godliness.—Victor Hugo.

No artist work is so high, so noble, so grand, so enduring, so important for all time, as the making of character in a child.—Charlotte Cushman.

A BRAVE TOREADOR.

One of the Most Thrilling Incidents of the Bull Ring.

The famous Spanish toreador Revette figured in one of the most thrilling incidents ever witnessed in the arena, at Puente Bayonne. After disposing of five bulls Reverte had twice plunged his sword into a third of great strength and ferocity, and as the beast continued careering wildly the spectators began to miss Reverte for bunching. Wounded to the very quick of his pride, the Spaniard shouted, "The bull is mine," and, throwing aside his sword, sank on one knee with folded arms in the middle of the ring. He was right, but he had not allowed for the margin of accident. The wounded beast charged full upon him, but the matador, splendid to the last, stood motionless as a statue, while the spectators held their breath in horrified silence. Reaching his victim, the bull literally bounded at him, and as he sprang he saw his death, with his last effort he gave one fearful lunge of the head that drove a horn into the thigh of the kneeling man and laid bare the bone from the knee to the joint. Bull Reverte never flinched, but remained kneeling, exulting in victory, till calling confidants of applause, till he was carried away to feel him of his grievous wound.

CURIOUS PERUVIAN TREE.

It Produces a Copious and Continuous Supply of Rain.

The rain tree of Peru grows very large, is rich in leaves and is called by the Indians tamalenque. It has that power of collecting the dampness of the atmosphere and condensing it into a continuous and copious supply of rain.

In the dry season, when the rivers are low and the heat great, the tree's power of collecting moisture is the highest, and water falls in abundance from the leaves. And oozes from the trunk. The water goes underground in veritable rivers, part of which filters into the soil and fertilizes it. These rivers are manifested as at to reappear the course of the water.

It is estimated that one of the Peruvian rain trees will on the average yield like gallons of water per diem. In a field of an acre of one kilometer square—that is, 3,280 feet each way—can be grown 10,000 trees separated from each other by twenty-five meters. This plantation produces daily 385,000 liters or waters. If we allow for evaporation and infiltration we have 125,000 liters or 29,581 gallons of rain for distribution daily. The rain tree can be cultivated with very little trouble, for it seems indifferent as to the soil in which it grows. The tree increases rapidly and resists both extremes of climate.—Espana Moderna.

How To Raise Potatoes.

Do you like potatoes to eat during the winter? If you do raise them. There is no better land in the United States. to raise potatoes than we have here and yet we find about 80 per cent of the farmers have no potatoes for there own use. It is your own fault, as the land or climate is not to be blame. We raised as fine a crop of potatoes last year as we ever raised in Norther Minnesota, and the same can be said of our Neighbors C. L. Clark and Walt Meandrew. Now let us see how we did it. We prepared the ground early in May and simply planted Mr. potato in a good warm damp bed. The next week we gave the ground a good harrowing, and the next week about the time the potatoes was coming up another good harrowing. Then we waited until the crop was well out of the ground and then started the cultivator, and cleaned out every weed that showed it'd self above ground with hoe and cultivator. After that we run the cultivator through them every four or five days so as to keep the ground moist and the weeds out. When the potato started to blossom we plowed the dirt up to the hills and finished with a hoe. Then we kept them treated with paris green so as to kill all bugs. And that is the way we raised fine potatoes and when we went potatoes to eat all we have to do is to go downcellar and get a mess. Never wait for rain or favorable weather to cultivate your potatoes. If the season is wet give them lots of cultivation, so the ground will drey out. If the season is dry give them lots of cultivation, so the ground will drey out. If a farmer will follow this advice he will not be running to the store Keeper to buy potatoes but may have them to sell.

A Wolf in Sheep's Clothing

A TRUE STORY OF THE SECRET SERVICE

By COL. H. C. WHITLEY Former Chief United States Secret Service

TIMES were pretty lively about Washington during President Grant's administration. The great, the near great and the shabby genteel politicians were to be daily met with. Each had an axe to grind. It was a busy day for adventurers and sharpers. Every device that human ingenuity could invent was in vogue for money making purposes. Men of respectability when at home often turned crooks after sojourning at the nation's capitol for a time. The war had left its demoralizing influence upon many and the opportunities for acquiring wealth were numerous and varied. For a long time before General Grant took his seat in the president's chair, there had been a looseness in the administration of government offices resulting in organized frauds that would not be tolerated in this day.

The Credit Mobilier conspiracy, the whisky ring and many other monumental steals were being carried on in bishop official and private circles. The big fellows set the pace and the smaller crooks loitering about the city felt quite safe in taking a hand in what was going on. Some of the deities resorted to by the lesser fellows were quite ridiculous. I will distinguish one of these schemes for the purpose of exhibiting the folly of some of the devotees of that day.

Shortly after President Grant's inauguration in the spring of 1873 he sent a messenger with a note requesting me to call at once at the White House. On entering his office I found him at his desk. He pushed to a nearby chair and bade me be seated. Reaching into a drawer of his desk he took out two long black cigars, and handing me one of them he bit off the end of the other and put it between his teeth. Straightening back in his chair, the big black cigar was pointed upward at an angle of about forty-five degrees. As the smoke curled lazily above his head I saw that there was something in his manner indicating that his usually placid temper was riled. Picking up a package of letters from his desk he turned towards me and said: "Here, Colonel, is a matter that needs your careful attention. During the last few days I have been receiving these letters. I want you to make on investigation at once. The persons engaged in this work must be punished. It is an outrage. It is probable that there is more than one person in the scheme."

President Grant spoke with great earnestness, and I saw that he was not a little disturbed and that his idea was to let no guilty man escape. The circulars he handed me were printed in letter form and had been sent through the mails to many postmasters throughout the south and west. The circulars read as follows. I give them verbatim.

Executive Mansion, Washington, Oct. 12th, 1872.

Memorandum of conversation between the president and his secretary.

Secretary—I wish to refer this telegram of Senator Morton's to the president.

To the President:

A conspiracy has been formed to overrun southern Illinois, Indiana and Ohio and to keep the colored vote from the polls in the southern states. Several thousand nonresidents will vote in Indiana. Men and money are needed. I send a man to you who has been in their council.

O. P. Morton.

President—Yes, I have thought that matter all over, and had a long talk with the man the senator sent. Who does Mr. Cook say about money? You know that we have none, and that the committee's means are all necessary for the regular business.

Secretary—Mr. Cook will furnish you any amount you require.

President—Very well, I will take the responsibility. Have Captain C—— select a dozen men to go west and south with funds and organize. The more fact of a good organization will deter leaders from attempting to defraud the people at the polls.

Additional conversation, March 24th, 1873.

Secretary—Mr. President, have you determined how you will reimburse Mr. Cook for the money furnished last October?

President—Yes, I have. The bishop has suggested Hev. J. Hale Barney to act as secretary in the matter. Appoint him immediately, and on our mails are so large and go to clerks we be arranged and briefed before we see them, you will have all letters on the subject addressed to him. Then soon our friends, and allow no one to contribute over ten dollars, and, to prevent publicity and trouble, direct the remittance to be made by a single ten dollar note. Registered letters, drafts, or express would necessitate too publicity. Mr. Secretary, you will make an alphabetical list of every contributor, to which we can hereafter refer.

" Confidential Circular No. 10.
Executive Mansion, Washington,
April 6th, 1873.

"The annexed conversations are submitted to the friends of the president in confidence. Our friends can address Rev. J. Hale Barney, who is temporarily secretary in that behalf. Any one having conscientious convictions against contributing need only silently decline. The president has acted in good faith and confidently relies upon an active and cheerful assistance. Suppose nothing had been done and the state of affairs existing in Louisiana had not been materially paralleled, what would have been the result? Read carefully the president's views and act as your judgment dictates, remembering this subject is confidential and known only to three persons besides the president and that whatever is sent should be in currency in the enclosed envelope.

"Very respectfully,

"O. E. Babcock,
"Secretary."

With the above circular was also enclosed the following letter for return after being filled out:

"Rev. J. Hale Barney,
"Ex-Secretary, Etc.
"Washington, D. C.

"Sir: Please find enclosed ten dollars in currency which you can apply at once. Others were surprised and doubtful as to their genuineness and forwarded them to the president with a letter of inquiry. Taken altogether it was a most remarkable affair planned and carried out in a reckless manner. The report of the detectives sent to capture the schemer furnishes a chapter of racy reading.

It was discovered that a lady who rented furnished rooms at No. 426 Sixth street had sometime prior to the discovery of the forgeries received a letter from a man signing himself Rev. J. Hale Barney. He said he was a Methodist minister and that he would be absent from the city during the time attending to the duties of his circuit, but he wanted to hire a good lower front room in her house for office purposes and a place to sleep and the delivery of his correspondence. He explained further that he had been appointed executive secretary of the Christian Brotherhood.

The lady thought it was a rare opportunity to secure an occupant of distinction. She had great confidence in Methodist ministers as she leaned that way herself, and she answered favorably. In a few days a large trunk was forwarded by express. It had an aperture in its top through which letters could be dropped. There was also forwarded two large cards upon which was printed "Rev. J. Hale Barney, Executive Secretary of the Christian Brotherhood," one to be hung upon the door, the other in the window of the room. Money was sent to pay a month's rent in advance.

The mendems was delighted to rent her rooms to such a nice man. She had always maintained a highly respectable place and intended to keep it so. The trunk was put into one corner of the room hired, and a mail addressed to the reverend myth was dropped through the hole in the top of the trunk pending the arrival of his reverence.

The old lady was wholly unsuspicious. A Methodist minister was above reproach with her. The heck room adjoining the one engaged by the reverend was already occupied by a quiet and unobstrusive gentlemen who paid his rent regularly and went and came at his pleasure. He, too, was above suspicion. There was also a very nice young man occupying a room upstairs. He was always busy writing and attending to his own business. Many letters postmarked at different towns of the west and south addressed to Rev. J. Hale Barney were being delivered daily. These were put in the trunk.

The detective detailed to unearth the fraud figured himself in a suit of genteel black clothes and presented himself at 426 Sixth street. Here he was kindly received by the nice old lady. She was polite, but t. lithe suspicions at first. It did not, however, take the smooth-tongued detective long to calm her fears and secure a room. He was not particular about the price. He had heard that her house was a quiet place. He was a law student and did not like to be disturbed while engaged in his studies.

At the first opportunity the detective slipped into the front room and examined the lock on the trunk with the aperture in its top. It was an ordinary affair and the officer easily secured a key to fit it. He had several circulars printed in fac simile of the original to be used as decoys. These were postmarked and after the appearance of having been sent by postmasters in the south. Some of them contained marked money. Excuses were made to others; money would be sent in course of time. Some of these letters were signed, "A Friend of the Cause," "A Sympathizer," "Depend Upon Me," etc. A letter carrier was made use of and the detective was kept posted in regard to the delivery of the letters.

When the "nice man" occupying the room back of the parlor was absent the letters contained in the trunk were examined by the detective. A short time after the return of the "nice man" he was seen to slip into the parlor through the rear door. The detective again examined the trunk. The letters were gone. Shortly afterwards the "nice man" occupying the room back of the parlor was arrested while in the act of dropping letters into the postoffice.

These letters were discovered to be circulars addressed to postmasters and others. The "nice man" arrested was searched and the marked money placed in the letters by the detective was found in his pocket. It was now certain that Rev. J. Hale Barney and the individual arrested were one and the same. The silent young man upstairs was suspected and arrested. His room was searched and a large number of printed circulars and envelopes addressed to postmasters were found.

The plot, although silly in its conception, was catchy because of its boldness. The "nice man" caught was a person of considerable prominence. He had served as a colonel of a regiment during the Civil war and was a gallant fighter.

The young fellow upstairs was a printer and he done the work on the circulars. Both of the schemers were convicted and sentenced to do time in the penitentiary. This was only one of the many bold schemes projected in our capital city by persons maintaining the outward appearance of eminent respectability.

How to Keep Young.

The fact that one has lived 60 or even for 80 years, is no reason why he should feel old.

When Longfellow was well along in years, his head as white as snow, but his cheeks as red as a rose, an ardent admirer asked him one day how it was that he was able to keep so vigorous and to write so beautifully.

Pointing to a blossoming apple tree near by the poet replied: "That apple tree is very old, but I never saw prettier blossoms upon it than those which it now bears. The tree grows a little new wood each year, and I suppose that it is out of that new wood that those blossoms come. Like the apple tree, I try to grow a little new wood each year."

And what Longfellow did we all ought to do.

We cannot stop the flight of time; we cannot heal all the sore wounds that happeneth to all; but we can keep on 'growing new wood' and in that way keep on blossoming until the end.—Magazine of Mysteries.

The Human Heart

The heart is a wonderful double pump, through the action of which the blood stream is kept sweeping round and round through the body at the rate of seven miles an hour. "Remember this, that our bodies will not stand the strain of over-work without good, pure blood any more than the engine can run smoothly without oil." After many years of study in the active practice of medicine, Dr. R. V. Pierce found that when the stomach was out of order, the blood became impure and there were symptoms of general run down, a tonic made of the glycerin extract of certain roots was the best corrective. This he called Crutches or Biere.

Richard Croker, at a dinner in New York, expressed a distrust for aeroplanes.

"There's nothing underneath them," he said. "If the least thing goes wrong, down they drop.

"I said to a Londoner the other day:

"'How is your son getting on since he bought a flying machine?'

"'On crutches, like the rest of them,' the Londoner replied."

Real Courage.

He was the small son of a minister and his mother was teaching him the meaning of courage.

"Supposing," she said, "there were twelve lions in one bedroom, and she got into bed at once, while the other knelt down to say his prayers, that boy would show true courage."

"Oh," said the young hopeful, "I know something that would be more courageous than that? Supposing there were twelve ministers in one bedroom, and one got into bed without saying his prayers!"

England's Oldest School.

A controversy has arisen in England as to which school has the right to claim greatest age. There are two schools which were founded in the early part of the seventh century—the King's school, Rochester, and the King's school, Canterbury. Justus, on his appointment to the see of Rochester in 604, made provision for a school in connection with the cathedral. Augustine established the Canterbury school about the same time. St. Peter's at York dates back to the eleventh century.

A Fairly Wet World.

The Pacific ocean covers 68,000,000 miles, the Atlantic 30,000,000 and the Indian, Arctic and Antarctic 42,000,000. To stow away the contents of the Pacific it would be necessary to fill a tank one mile long, one mile wide and one mile deep every day for 440 years. But in figures, the Pacific holds in weight 948,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons.

The Atentic averages a depth of not quite three miles. Its water weighs 326,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons, and a tank to contain it would have each of its sides 430 miles long. The figures of the other oceans are in the same startling proportions. It would take all the sea water in the world 2,000,000 years to flow over Niagara.

IT'S FOOD
That Restores and Makes Health Possible.

There are stomach specialists as well as eye and ear and other specialists.

One of these told a young lady, of New Brunswick, N. J., to quit medicines and eat Grape-Nuts. She says:

"For about 12 months I suffered severely with gastritis. I was unable to retain much of anything in my stomach, and consequently was compelled to give up my occupation.

"I took quantities of medicine, and had an idea I was dieting, but I continued to suffer, and soon lost 15 pounds in weight. I was depressed in spirits and lost interest in everything generally. My mind was so affected that it was impossible for me to become interested in even the lightest reading matter.

"After suffering for months I decided to go to a stomach specialist. He put me on Grape-Nuts and my health began to improve immediately. It was the keynote of a new life.

"I found that I had been eating too much starchy food which I did not digest, and that the cereals which I had tried had been too heavy. I soon proved that it is not the quantity of food that one eats, but the quality.

"In a few weeks I was able to go back to my old business of doing clerical work. I have continued to eat Grape-Nuts for lunch and a cereal evening meal. I wake in the morning with a clear mind and feel rested. I regained my lost weight in a short time. I am well and happy again and owe it to Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"As the sailor lurched under his heavy load along a palm-bordered avenue, his captain hailed him indignantly.

JUDGE JAGGARD DIES

SUPREME COURT JUDGE PASSES AWAY WHILE ON HEALTH-SEEKING TRIP.

CABLEGRAM BRINGS SAD NEWS

State Officials Mourn Death—House Adjourns for Day In Memory of Distinguished Judge.

St. Paul. — Justice Edwin A. Jaggard of the supreme court, of Minnesota, died of heart disease in the Bermudas, where he has been since Jan. 12 to recuperate his health.

News of the sudden death of the justice was received through a cablegram to I. A. Caswell, clerk of the supreme court. It contained no details, except that death had been due to heart trouble. The news spread through the capitol at once, and the flag on the state house at half-mast told that bereavement had come to the state of Minnesota.

Chief Justice Start and the other members of the supreme court were grief stricken by the news. Justice Jaggard had been regarded as an able jurist, and his genial and many sided nature made him popular as a man as he was highly regarded as a lawyer.

Ill for Some Time.

Justice Jaggard had been ill for some time. There seemed to be a general breakdown of his rugged health and he thought that two months spent in the sunny climate of the Bermudas, away from work and worry, would place him on his feet again. He left St. Paul, Jan. 8, expecting to return about the middle of March. Since then little was heard from him, but it was generally believed he was recovering his health.

Justice Jaggard was a unique figure on the bench, a deep student of the law, he was a popular after-dinner speaker, a member of many fraternal orders and always in demand socially because of his loyal qualities. He took a deep interest in public matters and wrote several books on legal subjects.

He had been mentioned in the last two campaigns as a possible candidate for the Republican nomination for governor. His ability as a speaker and his splendid presence. It was thought, would have made him an irresistible candidate.

Funeral arrangements are not completed, but cable messages have been sent to Mrs. Jaggard, who was with her husband. It is expected the body will be brought to St. Paul for interment, the state of Minnesota paying the last respect to the man who has been on the supreme bench since 1901.

Judge Jaggard was born in Altoona, Pa., in 1859. He graduated from Dickinson college in Carlisle, Pa., in 1879. He came to St. Paul in 1882 and was elected to the district court by the Second district in 1894, and served continually until his death. He was the author of numerous pamphlets on taxation and legal questions, and his opinions were considered highly by lawyers throughout the country.

Judge G. L. Dunn, a democrat, of St. Paul, was appointed by Gov. Eberhart to succeed Justice Jaggard.

HEARING FOR SALOON MAN.

Wisconsin Liquor Dealer in Court on Charge of Murder.

Winona.—The preliminary hearing of Al. Childs, the Buffalo county, Wisconsin, saloon men who shot and killed Henry Dingfelder in his saloon two weeks ago, began at Alma, Wis.

The defendant is in a weakened condition physically, the effects of two operations during the last year and the beating he received after the recent shooting. Ball will undoubtedly be fixed at the hearing today, and it is understood Childs will be in a position to secure any necessary amount. Physicians do not believe the man will live to serve more than a few months in prison, should he be convicted.

RAILWAYS ASKED FOR DAMAGES.

Northern Pacific and Fargo Companies Sued at Fergus Falls.

Fergus Falls.—L. O. Snelling, a barber of Marshall, Minn., has begun suit against the Northern Pacific Railway Company in the United States court in this city, asking damages in the sum of $25,000 for injuries sustained in the derailment of a train at Glendive, Mont., on August 10, 1908. Mr. Snelling was a passenger on the train and claims to have been permanently disabled.

BISHOPS MEET IN APRIL.

Methodist Dignitaries to Gather at Winona.

Winona.—The time for the spring meeting of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church has been advanced a week, and unless there is a further change from present plans outlined in a letter sent to Rev. Frank Doran, pastor of the Central Methodist church here, by Bishop McIntyre, the meeting of the bishops will open here Wednesday afternoon, April 26, and will close the following Monday.

This meeting will be of special importance in that it will be the last gathering of the bishops preceding the sessions of the annual conferences of 1911, which will vote on desired changes in the organic law of the church, the votes of the separate conferences to be reported to the quadrennial general conference of the church to be held at Minneapolis in May, 1912. At their meeting in Winona the bishops will formulate the memorials upon these matters to be sent to the annual conferences for their votes.

An effort is now being made to get Bishop H. M. Warren, the presiding bishop for the meeting here, to come to Winona for the Sunday before the bishops' sessions open, and, if his consents to this, arrangements will be made to have him give, on Tuesday evening, his lecture on "The Forces in a Sunbeam."

The bishops want two meetings for special purposes, one for education and one for missions, and these will be arranged. A series of lectures of extraordinary merit will also be provided. These will be given in the Central Methodist church. Among the bishops who have been asked to lecture are Bishops William A. Quayle, Edward Hughes and F. J. Bristol, the last named having been requested to give his lecture on "Brains."

The business sessions of the bishops will be held from 9 A. M. to 12 M., and from 2 to 5 P. M. and these will be executive in character for the bishops alone. Arrangements will be made for a series of public afternoon meetings in the church auditorium, while the bishops are in executive session in the church parlors, and it is expected a bishop or two will be excused long enough to address these public meetings. Bishop Mallalieu will hold revival meeting at the Oliva Branch church.

NIGHT SCHOOL ON RANGE.

Virginia Has 500 Adults Attending Classes.

Virginia.—The night school department of the Virginia public school system soon will have an enrollment of 500 for the present year. This school is the oldest of the range night schools, having been conducted seven years ago by Superintendent L. Bliss. The school is run both afternoons and evenings five days in the week. The scholars are all adults, mostly men.

Last year out of an enrollment of 363, more than 100 took out their first naturalization papers, and this number will be much surpassed this year. Besides learning to speak, read and write English, much useful information is presented in this night school in an attempt to make these scholars big better citizens and give them a clutch on life in this country.

For instance, different ways of earning a living are discussed, and certain ways like saloonkeeping, etc., are condemned. They are taught laws of business, how to write letters, how to dress and keep clean, to be polite and honest. They learn by heart certain sentiments intended to make them better men and women like: "Do your work as well as you can, because it always room at the top;" "If you would be wealthy, think of saving, as well as of getting money;" "With a matter toward none, with charity for all;" "Keep the spark of conscience alive in your breast."

They are taught about state and city government, how taxes are necessary, why not to sell their votes, the use of a police department, a fire department, a street cleaning department, a health department and what it should mean to every one to be a citizen of the United States. They are taught to do unto others as they would be done by, and that the land of their adoption, America, means opportunity, for those who are sincere, work hard and lead a clean life.

HIGH SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

Northfield Educator Proposes Meeting of South Minnesota Institutions.

Mankato.—The manager of athletics of the Northfield high school has been sending letters to high schools in Southern Minnesota proposing a conference to be formed of the high schools in the southern part of the state. The schools named are those of Mankato, Faribault, Red Wing, Austin, Rochester, Albert Lea, St. James, Owatonna and Northfield. Several of these schools have been heard from and all are favorable to the proposal. The object of the conference, it is understood, is to promote the standard of school work and school spirit and to create a firmer friendship between the schools.

State Progressives Affiliate.

Minneapolis. — The complete identification of the Minnesota Progressive Republican league with the national organization of the same name and the election of R. J. Lamson of Buffalo, as secretary, were effected at a secret meeting of the Minnesota organization. About twenty leaders of the Minnesota league were present. Among the Minneapolitans attending were James A. Peterson, Albert H. Hall and George S. Loftus. From St. Paul came Hugh Halbert and James Manahan; Stillwater, Judge Wilson.

FLOGGING MACHINE CHARGED

ALLEGED ABUSES IN BOYS' TRAINING SCHOOL, RED WING.

Senator Rockne to Call for Probe as Result of Statements By A. O. Stephens.

Red Wing, Minn. — At the request of F. A. Whittier, superintendent of the Boys' Training school, Senator A. J. Rockne will introduce a resolution in the state senate asking for a full and searching investigation of the management of that institution. Saturday evening, at Crookston, former Senator Stephens, before a legislative committee that was being given a smoke social, made the charge that the boys were being abused and that flogging by flogging machines was the custom at the Red Wing school.

To a representative who is investigated the school Superintendent Whittier denied the allegation and invited the fullest investigation. The state training school will again be in the limelight and a legislative committee will undoubtedly hold sessions here soon and search for the truth.

When the attention of Mr. Whittier was called to the article in which Senator A. D. Stephens of Crookston alleges outrageous conditions in the treatment of the boys, he said that there was little to be given in reply to statements that were so indefinite. Senator Stephens says that the boys are unmercifully flogged by flogging machines. Mr. Whittier asserts that there has never been a machine of any kind used for that purpose in the institution and never has flogging been allowed.

It is not desired that corporel punishment be resorted to, but when it is, it is always and only as a last resort, says the superintendent. Then it is always with the approval of the superintendent and always in his or the assistant superintendent's presence.

R. R. TAX TO REACH $4,000,000.

Levy on Gross Earnings of 21 Lines in Minnesota for 1910, $1,900,606.01.

St. Paul. — Twenty-one railway companies filed statements of their gross earnings during the year ending Dec. 31, 1910, and will pay the state $1,900,606.01 in gross earnings taxes.

The Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Rock Island railways will file their statements in a few days. The tax from these railways is expected to bring the total up to $4,800,000, a probable increase of $200,000 over 1909.

The following table shows the gross earnings and the taxes paid by the railroads that have filed statements in the last few days:

	Gross Earnings.	Tax.
Duluth, Rainy Lake.....	$ 1,000,000	$ 29,243

Omaha	95,000.00	2,375.00
Chicago, Milwaukee ...	12,587,024.41	494,038.97

The taxes paid by the Great Northern for 1909 were $856,843.03; Northern Pacific, $564,863.66; Soo, $237,655.59. There is a substantial increase in the gross earnings tax to be received from the railways who have filed their statements over last year. The total for all railways is expected to reach over $4,000,000, compared with $3,620,000 for 1909.

CORDNER SUSPECTS MURDER.

Investigation of Burned Cabin Brings Gruesome Facts to Light.

Duluth.—While Deputy Coroner H. G. Seeley does not see any so directly, his conduct in the investigation of the death of Axel and Mrs. E. A. Newman, tha Minneapolis couple whose charred bodies were found in the burned ruins of their cabin two miles from Allen Junction, establishes the belief that he thinks the couple were murdered and robbed. He will communicate with the district attorney at once, and a coroner's jury will investigate the case tomorrow.

Mr. Newman had his clothes on when he died in the cabin. The clothing was all burned, but the buckles of his vest were under the remains, and other facts establish the belief that he was not in bed when the cabin burned.

Some of the kitchen utensils of the Newman house were found hidden near the cabin. Articles of jewelry which bore marks of identification are the only ones that have not been recovered. The four sons of Mrs. Newman, Charles, Nathan, Wallace and William Lowrence, of Minneapolis, took the remains to Minneapolis for burial.

NEW COUNTY IS LEGALIZED.

Governor's Proclamation Formally Creates Division of Pennington.

St. Paul. — Pennington county, created last fall by a general election, has been given full county authority to conduct its affairs by a proclamation of the governor. Pennington was separated from Red Lake county last November by a vote of 1,924 and needed only the governor's proclamation to give it full legal status.

SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

A speedy and economical treatment for disfiguring pimples is the following: Gently smear the face with Cuticure Ointment, but do not rub. Wash off the ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and baths freely for some minutes. Repeat morning and evening. At other times use hot watar and Cuticura Soap for bathing the face as often as agreeable. Cuticura soap and ointment are equally successful for itching, burning, scaly and crusted humors of the skin and scalp, with loss of hair, from infancy to age, usually affording instant relief, when all else fails. Sold by Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston, Mass., for the latest Cuticura book on the care and treatment of the skin and scalp.

VILLAGE ON THE BANKS OF THE CHAGRES RIVER

THE PANAMA CANAL

BY WM. E. W. YERBY

CULEBRA CUT — SHOWING GOLD HILL

WHEN one looks upon the gigantic work that is in progress on the isthmus of Panama and beholds the hills and the mountains giving way before the onward march of modern machinery—ecco steam, electricity, air and water all harnessed and made to do the bidding of man, he can but stand in awe and ask the question: What is the propelling power back of this great undertaking?

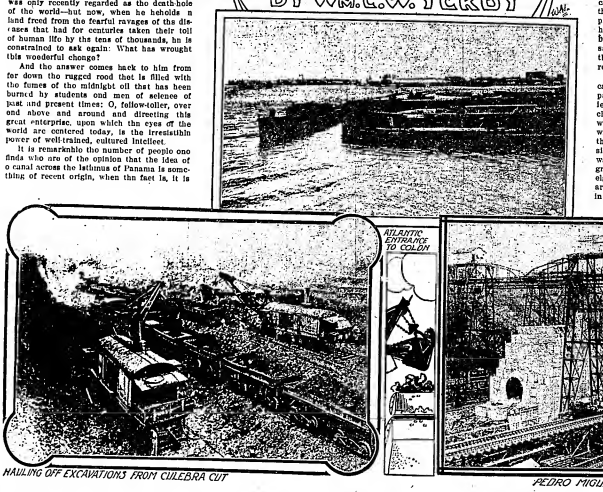
And the question comes to him in redoubled force as he remembers that the spot on which all this great work is in progress was only recently regarded as the death-hole of the world—but now, when he beholds a land freed from the fearful ravages of the diseases that had for centuries taken their toll of human life by the tens of thousands, he is constrained to ask again: What has wrought this wonderful change?

And the answer comes back to him from far down the rugged road that is filled with the fumes of the midnight oil that has been burned by students and men of science of past and present times: O, fellow-toiler, over and above and around and directing this great enterprise, upon which the eyes of the world are centered today, is the irresistible power of well-trained, cultured intellect.

It is remarkable the number of people one finds who are of the opinion that the idea of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama is something of recent origin, when the fact is, it is a matter that has engaged the attention of the civilized world for nearly five hundred years. Many unsuccessful attempts have been made to accomplish the object in the past, and it is good to realize that the dreams and designs of the Spanish adventurers of the fifteenth century are about to be brought to pass by American engineers of the twentieth century. Spain, Portugal, England and France have each in turn made a failure in their attempts to pierce the Isthmus with a canal.

Columbus was the first to propose a water highway from Europe to Asia, westward, by way of the Atlantic. It was such a highway he sought, and not the new world, which he really found. He landed on the Isthmus of Panama, near the present site of Colon, in the year 1502, but it was a Spanish engineer named Saavedra, one of Balboa's followers, who first advocated the construction of a canal across Panama. This was in 1517, and after studying the question for a dozen years, he submitted his plans to Charles V., king of Spain. Surveys of the Isthmus were made, but the work of cutting a canal was reported to be impracticable. After the death of Charles V., his successor, Philip II., in 1557, sent an engineer to survey the Nicaraguan route, who likewise made an adverse report. The question was then abandoned for 200 years, after which time it was again opened, and has been before the public ever since.

In the year 1850 the French people, headed by Count Ferdinand de Lesseps, who had gained both fame and fortune by the successful completion of the Suez canal, took up the matter of constructing the Panama canal, and went vigorously to work to connect the two oceans. The great engineer thought he had really an easier undertaking before him than he had recently been successful in accomplishing—that is, the cutting of the Suez canal—but he was very much mistaken. As work progressed on the canal with seeming success, glowing reports were wafted back to France of what was being done, and the fame of de Lesseps rose to the point of hero worship. In 1884 he was elected to the French academy, and was saluted by Gambetta as "the Grand Old Frenchman." In 1885 he was seated among the immortals—Victor Hugo, the great French novelist, being his sponsor, and Renan, that other brilliant French writer, delivered the valedictory.



But the dark clouds were gathering behind all this fantastic show, and in a few more years the crisis came. The expenditure of money that had been contributed mostly by the poorer people of France was something awful—the amount being placed as high as $600,000,000 in eight years; and then the crash came, burying beneath the wreck the hopes and expectations of the great engineer, and carrying sorrow and want to the homes of thousands upon thousands of French people who had contributed their little all toward forwarding the great enterprise. The nation was brought to the very verge of revolution. Judicial proceedings were instituted, and trials were had, extending over a period of five years. There was disclosed to the horrified world such an orgy of corruption as history had never before recorded. A hundred French senators and deputies were accused of having taken bribes, and the police department was under the same charge.

Count de Lesseps never recovered from the shock—and went down to his grave in 1894—only 16 years ago—a broken-hearted old man—but his fame will remain immortal despite the sad ending of his career.

In 1903 the United States purchased the interests and belongings of the French company on the Isthmus of Panama, paying therefor the sum of $40,000,000—the assets consisting of valuable surveys, implements of all kinds, many thousand houses, railroads, land; and also paid the Republic of Panama $10,000,000 for the Canal Zone—a strip of land in said Republic of Panama ten miles wide and practically 50 miles long—extending from Colon on the Atlantic side to Panama City on the Pacific. Through the center of this tenmile strip the canal is being constructed. At present there is an army of nearly 40,000 men engaged in the gigantic undertaking of building this great water highway from ocean to ocean.

The first party of Americans went to Panama in 1904 to begin work, but they found the country infested with diseases of the most fatal kinds, and the year 1904 was practically spent in improving health conditions. This work has been under the supervision of Col. W. C. Gorgas, and so effective have been the methods pursued by him and his able assistants in the Canal Zone of the Isthmus of Panama that the health conditions of that tropical country are about as good today as those of the southern states of America.

Contrary to the general belief, the United States is not digging a "big ditch" across the Isthmus of Panama. When the canal is finished and ships are steaming across Panama from the Atlantic to the Pacific, or vice versa, the waters of the two oceans will still be at least forty miles apart. They will never meet at all. A sea-level canal, which would have allowed the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific to come together, is not being dug; but an 85-foot lock canal is being constructed. As to the relative merits of the sea-level and the lock canal it is not within the province of this article to discuss.

HAULING OFF EXCAVATIONS FROM CULEBRA CUT

PEDRO MIGUEL LOCKS

The 85-foot lock canal which is being constructed consists of a sea-level entrance channel 7 miles long, 500 feet wide and 41 feet deep on the Atlantic side to the foot of Gatun (pronounced "Gatone") locks. On the Pacific side there is a corresponding sea-level channel to Miraflores locks, about 8 miles long, 500 feet wide and 45 feet deep.

At Gatun the 85-foot lake level is obtained by a great dam about a mile and a half long, and nearly half a mile thick at the bottom of base. The dam rests on impermeable material of sufficient supporting power, and fills the openings between the hills at Gatun, through which the Chagres (pronounced "Sheggers") once flowed to the sea. This river crosses the chennel of the canal no less than fifteen times in its serpentine course and is one of the most turbulent streams known during high water, though it looks peaceful enough during the dry season. It was one of the great obstructions to the possibility of digging a sea-level canal, but this enemy has been converted into a friend, and will be made to supply the greater portion of the water for filling the great artificial lake.

The great Gatun dam—upon the successful completion of which depends the success of the canal—consists of a water-tight center or core composed of clay and sand mixed in proper proportions. These materials were adopted after consultation with the best experts in the world, who came to the conclusion that clay and sand were the most impervious materials that could be used. This material, after being properly mixed, is deposited hydraulically—that is, by being pumped in by dredges. This center core is confined by a rock wall on each side, the rock so used being taken from Culebra cut. At the bottom this impermeable core of clay and sand has a width of about 850 feet, and gradually tapers upward until a minimum thickness of 400 feet will be had at the water level of the lake. The dam will rise to a height of 115 feet, or a distance of 30 feet above the level of the lake. The artificial lake—which will be known as Lake Gatun—will cover an area of 164 square miles, or over 100,000 acres. The entire navy of the United States can find safe anchorage therein.

The greatest obstacle that has stood in the way of the engineers for the past 500 years in constructing a canal across Panama has been the mountain range known as the Cordilleras—the backbone of the continent. It was here that the French people wasted and squandered such a great amount of money that the picture shown above is called "Gold hill"—it being asserted that they spent enough in their endeavor to cut through the mountain at the point that the money used would have covered the sides of the excavation with solid gold. The cut through these mountains is known as Culebra cut, and is nine miles in length—through solid rock. The cut begins at Bas Obispo on the east and ends at Pedro Miguel locks.

The question is often asked, What becomes of the vast quantities of dirt, rock, etc., that are taken from the canal? It is loaded on trains by means of the steam shovels and hauled off—a portion being placed on Gatun dam, a portion is taken to the Atlantic and a portion to the Pacific oceans and placed on the great breakwaters that are building there, and yet other trains are busily engaged in hauling the excavations to the railroad tracks that will skirt the northern edge of the canal, and which will have a solid rock bed the entire distance. They find use for every particle of it. Getting rid of these excavations has caused the Canal Zone to become the busiest railroad center in the world. It is said that 900 trains pass a given point near the town of Culebra in a day, hauling out the rock from the cut.

The United States is constructing a lock canal, as before stated. These locks are in pairs, each having a width of 110 feet and a length of 1,000 feet. Each lock consists of a chamber, with walls of concrete, and with water-tight gates at the ends. The level of water is to be regulated through openings in the bottom by the operation of valves in the side and center walls, which will permit the water to flow into and out of the locks by gravity. It is estimated that it will require eight minutes to fill one of them. The locks are the largest that have ever been designed in the history of the world. The gates consist of two leaves and are massive steel structures 7 feet thick, 65 feet long and from 47 to 82 feet high. Eighty-four leaves will be required for the entire canal, and their total weight will be 56,000,000 pounds, and will cost nearly $5,000,000.

When the canal is completed—which Colonel George W. Goethals, who is in charge of the great work, says will be some time during the year 1913—here is the manner in which a vessel from the Atlantic side will get to the Pacific: It will enter the sea-level channel at Colon and go a distance of seven miles to the foot of Gatun locks; there it will be lifted by means of these locks a height of 85 feet above the sea level to the surface of Gatun lake; the gates of the lock will be opened and it will steam out on this lake and go a distance of 23 miles to the beginning of the great Culebra cut, and carefully proceeding through this cut a distance of nine miles, it will check up at Pedro Miguel locks, where it will enter the lock and be lowered a distance of 30 1-3 feet to the level of Miraflores lake, and then it will steam a distance of three miles across this lake to Miraflores locks, where it will be lowered by two flights a distance of 55 2-3 feet to sea level; and then it will enter the Pacific channel of the canal and go a distance of eight miles out to deep water of the ocean. It will require from 12 to twelve hours for a vessel to make the passage from one ocean to the other—thus saving many thousands of miles of travel, and many days of time in a journey to any of the ports on the Pacific side of the Americas and also to the Orient.

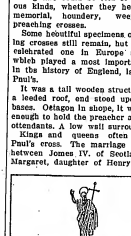
Colonel Goethals states most positively that the cost of the canal will not be over $375,000,000; and in this amount is included the purchase of the French company's belongings—$40,000,000—and the $10,000,000 paid for the Canal Zone, and also the cost of the sanitary department, which of course has been a considerable amount.

In order to get some idea of what the cost of the canal means—$375,000,000—and put it so the mind can in some measure grasp the figures, we make the following statement: There are in the world nine principal canals, to wit: The Suez, the Kiel, the Manchester, the United States Ste. Marie, the Canadian Ste. Marie, the Amsterdam, Corinth, Cronstadt and the Erie-Ontario canal. The total cost of all nine of these canals was $264,000,000, which is less by $111,000,000 than the Panama canal alone will cost at the lowest estimate. But even if this amount is doubled, the United States will complete it. The pride and reputation of the nation are at stake, and she cannot afford to make a failure as all the other countries have done that have gone before.

A LONDON LANDMARK

St. Paul's Cross Links Present With the Past.

Shaft Recently Unveiled Is Successor of Others Whose Earliest History Is Lost in the Mist of Obscurity.



London.—An interesting link connecting the London of today with the London of remote ages was made by the recent unveiling of the new Paul's cross in St. Paul's churchyard. There on the highest ground in the great metropolis was made the first settlement in fer-off days and there it is believed once stood a heathen temple, which in due time gave way to the first of the Christian edifices which preceded the present cathedral.

The cross recently unveiled is the successor of other crosses, the history of the earliest of which is lost in the mists of obscurity. At the time of the Reformation there were probably fewer than 5,000 crosses in England, varying in size and shape and varying, too, in their uses. They were to be found on the roadsides, at crossroads and at many other places all over England, and a pretty and interesting tale could be told of the various kinds, whether they be market, memorial, boundery, weeping or preaching crosses.

Some beautiful specimens of preaching crosses still remain, but the most celebrated one in Europe and one which played a most important part in the history of England, is old St. Paul's.

It was a tall wooden structure with a leaded roof, and stood upon stone bases. Octagon in shape, it was large enough to hold the preacher and three attendants. A low wall surrounded it.

Kings and queens often visited Paul's cross. The marriage contract between James IV. of Scotland and Margaret, daughter of Henry VII. of New St. Paul's Cross.

England, was proclaimed there, and in 1588 Queen Elizabeth attended in state at a thanksgiving service for the defeat of the Spanish armada. Eight years later, while the lord mayor was present there, he received an order from the queen to raise 1,000 men to eld the French in the defense of Calais. Before eight o'clock that evening the men had been recruited and were marching on the road to Dover.

Among those who did penance at the cross was Jane Shore, the favorite of Edward IV., while a still more remarkable case was that of Lady Markham, wife of Sir Griffin Markham, who in 1617 stood at the cross in a white sheet and was fined $5,000 for marrying one of her servants while her husband was alive.

This was the spot chosen, too, when anything had to be denounced, and consequently the bull of Pope Paul II. was read from, threatening all shoemakers who put peaks of more than two inches long on the shoes they made, and censuring, as well, all, whether shoemakers or not, who wore shoes of that length.

These are but a few of the things which took place at what was, in old time, the center of the world, for not only of the city, but also of the union, for it was at once the exchange, the club, and the meeting place of freedom. Here heralds proclaimed the news of victories by sea and land; here, we are told, women threw up their bonnets when they heard of Crecy and Agincourt;" here it was that a sovereign brought his new-made wife to show her to his faithful subjects; and last, but not least, it was here that the wives and daughters of the citizens gathered for their little gossips and flirtations.

It was doomed to destruction. The last sermon was preached there in May 30, 1630, before King Charles I., and in 1643 the cross was demolished by order of the long parliament.

The new cross is built in accordance with a bequest of the late H. C. Richards, who left $25,000 for the purpose. It consists of a Doric column on the top of which is a bronze figure of St. Paul, nine feet high.

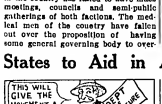
WASHINGTON GOSSIP

War Over National Health Department



WASHINGTON.—One of the most bitter fights in the history of the national capital for many years back has lately been going on, and doctors all over the United States are falling into line for or against the proposal that we shall have a national bureau of health. Mass meetings are being called and mile-long petitions are being dumped upon the national legislators. Tons of mail and thousands of telegrams keep coming urging them to vote for the "conservation of human life." Other toes of letters and innumerable messages plead, demand and entreat them to vote down what is characterized as a "doctor's trust."

Hardly a town of any consequence in the country has failed to have mass meetings, councils and semi-public gatherings of both factions. The medical men of the country have fallen out over the proposition of having some general governing body to oversee things medical in the United States. Washington is filled up with fighting cohorts. The cry of "no quarter" is the popular one, and the fighters are lashing out at each other bitterly in the committee rooms, in the press and from the lecture platforms.

All the fighting came about in this way: About a year ago 12 bills were introduced in congress, all seeking to legalize the establishment of a national bureau of health. Eleven of these bills were strangled in the committees, and but two remained. These two were the subject of bitter acrimonious debate on numerous occasions, but congress finally adjourned without doing anything.

The fight for a national health bureau is a part of the general conservation movement that is going on all over the country. The National Conservation commission has taken note of "human life" as being one of the resources of the nation that is worth saving. Originally the commission was formed to conserve lands, waters, mill sites, forests, minerals and wild game, but it speedily came to the conclusion that human life was worth more than all the rest of our resources put together.

States to Aid in Agricultural Work

THE department of agriculture announces that thirty-three colleges have organized departments of agriculture extension. The movement is only four years old. The number of persons connected with the extension work in 31 states is 92. This does not include members of the college faculty and experiment station staffs, who contribute only occasional service.

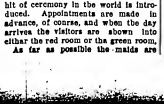
Apparatus necessary for interior instruction work in agriculture has multiplied in the four years until new entire buildings are devoted to the storing of agricultural machinery; barns are filled with horses, cattle, sheep and swine; hundreds of acres of land are utilized in demonstration, and granaries are filled with samples of feed, all used for illustration in construction work to the resident students.

The department is expressing the hope that the state legislatures will give the movement a new impetus by increasing the amount of their appropriations for the work. This year's appropriation by states aggregated $301,780. Indiana appropriated an average amount, $18,000. New York led, with $50,000; Iowa was second with $32,000, and Wisconsin third, with $30,000. The department points out that to the $301,780 should be added the amount used by the several states for extension work from the farmers' institute fund, of which no separate account was kept.

From the standpoint of the federal government, agricultural extension is a business proposition. It undertakes to do for men engaged in agriculture what proprietors of mills and manufactories are striving to accomplish in their business—conservation of waste, economy of effort and material, and an increase in the output with reduced expense. "It strives to do with and for a men that which a manufacturer desires to do with machines, his machines—improve it that it may turn out more and better quality of products," says Prof. John Hamilton of the office of experiment stations.

Lawmakers Add to Nation's Gaiety

IF ALL the freak legislation introduced by legislators throughout the United States were passed and became laws what a funny country this would become! Animals are classified one of the most recent samples. It is a bill requiring every person wishing to take a drink to take out a license.



That much-abused class, the poor bachelors, are being abused once more, this time in New Mexico, where a bill has been introduced in the legislature providing for the classification of bachelors and widowers and the levying of a tax against them.

As for Texas, the legislature is now seriously considering the enactment of a law to put you in jail if you ever dare to use bad language to the telephone receiver.

The tongues of the railway station agents in Missouri may be loosened if a bill introduced into the legislature of the state is passed. The bill provides a fine of $25 to $50 for any agent who refuses to answer questions put by travelers. The father of the bill said years of rebuffs by agents, of whom he had inquired if trains were on time, had aroused in him a lingering longing to one day "get back" at the sphinx who hides behind the wicket.

The state of Washington is catering to its lady voters. Polling places are going to be made very attractive for them. The city council of Seattle started the ball rolling with the introduction of a resolution prohibiting smoking in polling places at elections.

Mrs. Taft's Informal 5 O'Clock Teas

WILLE officially exempt from the obligations of the receiving line and other less distinguished hostesses, Mrs. Taft nevertheless takes cognizance of the duties of her position as chatelaine of the president's house and since her coming into possession of the old home has instituted a very informal but none the less delightful five o'clock tea. These five o'clock teas of Mrs. Taft's are arranged for the purpose of permitting informal presentations to the first lady and in consequence the least bit of ceremony in the world is introduced. Appointments are made in advance, of course, and when the day arrives the visitors are shown into either the red room or the green room.

As far as possible the maids are eliminated and the opportunity to have an informal chat with the president's wife over a steaming cup of very good tea is one that a great many women are willing to waive in preference to being a guest at the most ceremonious feto of the White House season. To add to the attractiveness of Mrs. Taft's five o'clock teas there is little possibility of "crowd"—just a few guests are received and Mrs. Taft's tact and good humored friendliness does the rest.

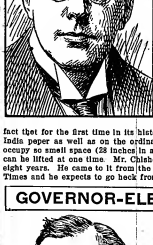
Sandwiches of infinite variety seasoned just so; little cakes which are simply one mouthful of delicousness accompany a cup of tea which is more than good enough to drink. The Tafts have been inoculated with the tea drinking virus through their long residence in countries where tea is really a beverage of quality.

Disgraced.

"What some men manages to mistake foh a clear conscience," said Uncle Eben, "is merely loss of memory."

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

CHOSEN SENATOR FROM MAINE



reaches Washington to supplant Senator Eugene Hale. He has had less experience as a legislator than his distinguished predecessor, but he has had long experience in public life.

No climate in the country has been regarded as less encouraging to the growth of Democratic timber than that of the Pine Tree state, but since the thaw of last September the meteorological conditions have been altered.

It was admitted by some political Jeremiahs that a Democratic governor might slip through the breach in the Republican lines and entrench himself at Augusta, but the most enthusiastic visionary hardly dreamed of a Democratic legislature or a Democratic senator. Not since 1856, when Hannibal Hamlin crossed the Kennebec, had a Democratic senator been sent to the national capital from Maine, and not for thirty years had any New England state elected a Democratic senator.

So, as Democratic senator from Maine, Charles F. Johnson will naturally be the center of interest when he fact that for the first time in its history the encyclopedia is to be printed on Indis paper as well as on the ordinary stock. The India paper edition will occupy so small space (28 inches in all) that the entire 28 volumes and index can be lifted at one time. Mr. Chisholm has been in charge of this work for eight years. He came to it from the position as literary editor on the London Times and he expects to go back from it to his newspaper work.

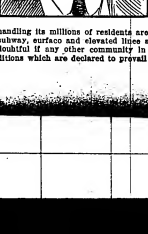
GOVERNOR-ELECT OF GEORGIA



Governor-elect Hoke Smith of Georgia, who exposed a plot of New York cotton speculators to infect the cotton fields with the boll weevil for the purpose of cutting future crops short and enabling the speculators to win a fortune by going "long" of the cotton market, was a member of President Cleveland's cabinet. He was last fall elected governor of Georgia.

The first information of the plot came in a letter to Mr. Smith from a man whose name he refuses to give, but in whom he places entire confidence. At Mr. Smith's request the writer came from New York for a personal visit with the governor-elect.

Convinced by the evidence offered by this informant, Governor-elect Smith gave prompt warning to the farmers and the planters of the south that two plotters having in their possession at least 1,000,000 live boll weevils, and are waiting their opportunity to scatter these disastrous insects over Georgia and South Carolina.

The exposure created tha liveliest interest throughout Georgia, especially in view of the fact that very recently the experts of the country gathered at Atlanta to make plans for combating this insect.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS EXPERT

There is now a movement in New York for the building and operation of a new subway to relieve the congested traffic conditions, and one of the prominent bidders for the work is Frank J. Sprague, whose portrait is shown. Mr. Sprague is one of the best known and most highly successful electrical engineers in the country. At one time he was an assistant to Thomas A. Edison and is known as the pioneer of the modern electric railway. He founded an electric railway and electric companies and has been engaged in electrical work in many yards, torpedo stations and battleships.

The other bidders are William McAdoo, who constructed the Hudson river tubes; John Bradey, a large contractor, and the management of the present subway.

One of the greatest problems confronting New York today is that of transportation. The facilities for handling its millions of residents are entirely inadequate and patrons of its subway, surface and elevated lines are crowded into cars like cattle. It is doubtful if any other community in the country would submit to the conditions which are declared to prevail in the metropolis.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Gotham's Great Peril From Dynamite

NEW YORK.—The opinion has often been expressed that some great disaster will eventually overtake New York and the recent dynamite explosion in Jersey City lends some color to this view. Over on the Jersey flats between Bedloe's Island and the end of the Pennsylvania Railroad dock at Greenville, and west of the Statue of Liberty, there are stored at times in three barges anchored there more than 600,000 pounds of high explosives. If by chance the stupendous amount of energy should be let loose, it would topple New York in ruins and cause the greatest disaster of modern times. The loss of life would be appalling. Within a 20-mile radius of the Jersey flats where the awful power is pent there live nearly 10,000,000 persons. The shock of the explosion would be inconceivable. It would set the earth trembling for hundreds of miles in every direction. Buffalo, Montreal, Boston and Baltimore would feel the ground shake under their feet. Along the coast a tidal wave would rush landward and overwhelm everything until it reached the first great barrier of the hills.

These barges, which contain enough explosives to blow the whole city to pieces, belong to the great powder manufacturing concerns that have their plants in desert places inland. They cannot store their deadly explosives near any large center of population. The regulations of nearly every city from New York down prohibit the storage of any quantity of dynamite or any other powerful explosive within its boundaries. Therefore the considerable amount that is used in Manhattan has to be transported each day from some point of distribution. These barges on the Jersey flats are the great distributing depots for dynamite for all the region of New York and vicinity.

It is impossible to say from one day to another just how much dynamite, lyddite, black powder or other explosive combinations are carried on these boats. The stock varies almost from hour to hour.

Daring Opium Smuggler Is Set Free

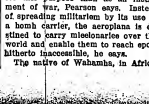
SEATTLE, WASH.—Broken in body and spirit by confinement in the federal prison at McNeil's island, where he served four terms, Lawrence Kelly, declared by customs officers to be the shrewdest and most daring opium smuggler they have encountered on Puget sound during the last three decades, was turned adrift a few days ago. He is 72, his strength is wasted, his nerve is gone and he is without a dollar. Unless former accomplices come to his aid with part of the fortune he made for them at the risk of his life and freedom, it is likely the veteran will pass the rest of his days in a poorhouse.

Kelly was smuggling days are over. He is a broken down sailor. He is under the surveillance of customs officials and will be followed by them to the grave. He never confessed or implicated others and he had the reputation of being "square" with those who profited by his traffic though he had opportunities to fleece them whenever he brought a sloop load of contraband goods into the country.

Smuggling always appealed to Kelly as a game of chance, to be indulged in only for the excitement and the satisfaction of eluding the officers. He did not sell under the black flag for the profit and it is known that he never fired a shot or harmed any one.

Kelly was successful in many of his adventures between the Canadian shores and the mainland in Washington and Oregon, and it is believed he smuggled several hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of contraband goods, including opium into the United States during the last fifteen years. His luck was against him at last, though deserted when arrested the last time, he would give not the least inkling as to who financed the expeditions or who assisted him.

Deficit in Wake of Municipal Dance



MILWAUKEE.—Municipal merriment comes high. Milwaukeeans have danced and now they must pay the piper. And the piper's bills amount to $1,000 more than the dancers donated.

Municipal balls attended by 8,000 persons, at which the employer danced with his stenographer and the employer's wife danced with the stenographer's "steady," and many similar mix-ups, all tending in the general direction of social equality, have been a great success socially, but not financially. There is a deficit and the city's strong box will have to be drawn on for $1,000 to pay the piper for piping four times at the four municipal balls that have been given.

The deficit is more than a deficit. It is a problem. It is a row which threatens to knock a hole in the Milwaukee plan of municipal merrymaking. There is a difference of opinion as to whether it is best to go ahead with the public frolics. Some point to the fact that Uncle Sam conducts his postoffice business at a loss, and that New York runs its ferries at a loss. What matters it, they say, that there is a loss of mere dollars? Look at the gain in merriment. These, instead of looking backward, would look further forward and not keep the municipal dances going but inaugurate municipal moving picture shows. The plan is to give the first of these shows in a public school building in the congested district. It will either be free or the price of admission will be held down to a penny or two.

The public dances and the public moving picture show are only the beginnings of the progressive movement put by Mayor Emil Seidel and his chief lieutenant, Congressman-Elect Victor L. Berger, and their associates.

Plans to Carry Gospel in Aeroplane

ST. LOUIS.—The aeroplane as a means of spreading the gospel is the latest idea of James H. Pearson, itinerant preacher.

Released recently from the observation ward of the city hospital, Pearson promptly set to work perfecting two aeroplane models, in which, accompanied by his wife and a corps of assistants, he intends to fly over the country.

The aeroplane will be used more for this purpose than as an instrument of war, Pearson says. Instead of spreading militarism by its use as a bomb carrier, the aeroplane is destined to carry miscionaries over the world and enable them to reach spots hitherto inaccessible, he says.

The nature of Wahamba, in Africa, pursuing his peaceful occupation of cooking his neighbor for a noonday meal, will see suddenly a strange apparition, from which a man bird will emerge. After he has conquered the field he will go on to new ones until the evangelization of the whole world will be accomplished.

"But before I tour the world in my aeroplanes, I will first clean St. Louis," declares Pearson. "It is a den of iniquity, and I cannot go away without completing my work here."

Pearson is a member of the Amateur Aeronsut Association of St. Louis. His models are constructed along scientific lines, and Pearson will soon start building the aeroplanes. Meanwhile Pearson is preaching on the streets every night.

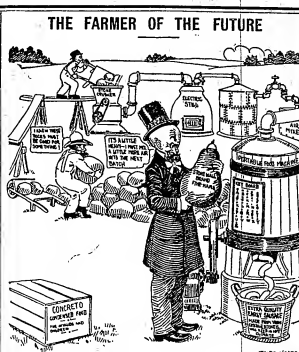
OUT OF THE FARM.

The urban conception of the farm in winter is one of snug comfort and drowsy ease, its external appearance showing, as in the familiar pictorial ideal of a snow-bound farmhouse, with a shoveled path leading through a gate to a radiant window, through which one peers in fancy and discerns a happy family clustered round a lamp, says the Philadelphia Press. The idea is that the farmer has little or nothing to do in the daytime but sit inside his home and feed the stock; the wife knits; the children go to school. It is a charming picture, not always true to life. There is no time in the year when there is cessation from toil on a farm. It is different in winter; that is all. The days are shorter, the work rougher. Of course, much depends upon the character of the farm; considerable leisure is possible where few cattle are kept and general trucking done. But always there are the "chores." A remarkably elastic expression that—"doing chores," it may mean much or little. Some dairy farmers, for instance, whose serious business in life is milking cows, may potter around the farm after the morning's milking and taking the morning's milk to the creamery or railroad station, eat their noon dinners, mend some fence, look over the harness or haul out manure, potter around some more, and then say: "Guess it's about time to do the chores;" meaning to milk two dozen cows or so—the real hard work of the day.

Following Chicago's school for policemen comes New York's school for firemen. It will open, according to the announcement of the city's fire commissioner, immediately after the new year. All present employes of the department, as well as all new hands, will be required to attend, and only "graduates" of this "fire college" will be eligible for places on the force. Some fifteen subjects, embracing everything appertaining to the work, will be included in the curriculum, says the Chicago Record-Herald. As the automobile has become an important part of the up-to-date fire equipment, the management of the gasoline motor car will be taught. And as casualties tend to increase in number and in seriousness, there will be instruction in first aid to the injured. A comprehensive course for the benefit of the fire fighter seems as ordinitaneous as one for that of the pedrotimun. An exchange of views and experiences between New York and Chicago might result in gains for both cities and both services.

Indigestion of brisks which do beneficial service to man is certain to be more than a matter for state action. Representative Weeks of Massachusetts, a state which realizes the mischief involved in the destruction of the insect-eating birds, has introduced in congress a bill making it a misdemeanor, punishable by a heavy imprisonment or $200 fine, to kill or harm coveys or single specimens of birds on their migratory flight from south to north. The fact of birds which it is designed to guard includes geese, ducks, pigeons, swans, snipe, doves, robins, bluebirds and various kinds of waterfowl. These are friends of man or valuable some-birds, and as the whole country is interested in their preservation it seems to be in order for congress to take action.

School girls in Atlantic City are rebelling against an edict of the domestic science authorities that they must learn to make hash. They are afraid proficiency in this art may lose them the hearts of admirers who know hash only through the hoarding houses they have met. The girls openly aver they hate to lose the homes they may make happy by "feeding the brutes" if the said "brutes" learn beforehand that prospective wives have been encouraged to put hash on the daily menu.



A New Jerseyite boarder, not liking his dinner, attacked his landlady, choking her. Other boarders interested in this summary protest will be disappointed to learn that the accounts said nothing about his choking her into submission.

A Kansas man hugged his wife so hard that he broke two of her ribs. Some men never seem to learn that there's such a thing as overdoing a good thing.

Since the recent tragedies, anvilism may now contest its supremacy as defying across the earth instead of up into the clouds. There certainly seems to be no useful or practical purpose served by efforts in the latter direction.

LORIMER IN DEFENSE

ASSERTS HE DID NOT BUY OR AUTHORIZE BUYING OF VOTES IN ILLINOIS LEGISLATURE.

HITS AT GOVERNOR DENEEN

Senator Declares He Secured Support From Democrats in His Election Through Friendship—Gained by His Deep Waterway Plan.

Washington.—Before a vast assemblage of spectators and a full attendance of members Senator William Lorimer Wednesday denied on the floor of the senate that he had purchased or authorized the purchase of votes in the Illinois legislature to encompass his election.

Throughout Mr. Lorimer's final exposition of his defense, he strove to make it plain that the mysterious Democratic votes which enabled him to get his senatorial seat were given him as the gifts of life-long friendship.

Mr. Lorimer then stated that no effort had been made to cover the case with a cloud of suspicion, and to make it appear that some man of great ability had prepared a plan to organize the legislature of Illinois for the purpose of defeating Hopkins and electing some one else United States senator.

"Edward Shurtleff was elected speaker because of a condition which arose there and if a similar condition had arisen anywhere in the country, the result would have been the same," said the senator. "Governor Deneen was opposed to me re-election of the speaker, and said that some one else must be elected. Under no circumstances was any Republicans to vote for Shurtleff. Representative Brady, who had pledged his support to Shurtleff, was told that if he did not join in with Deneen's plans every employe who had obtained his position at Brady's recommendation would be forthwith dismissed. In other words, the governor of our state undertook to dictate who should be speaker."

Senator Crawford interrupted. "If this statement is true," he said, "why was not Governor Deneen called as a witness in order that he might have the opportunity of making reply to this charge?"

"It would have been impossible for Governor Deneen to have been called to refute that statement," said Lorimer, "as the cause for making it was not suggested until the senator from South Dakota, Mr. Crawford, made it on the floor a short time ago."

Senator Lorimer then took up consideration of the Lamoreux vote which he received and the incident of his presence in Springfield. He told the story of his interest in the bill to do the gulf deep waterway plan and his effort to make it a non-partison proposition. In this way, he said, he gained the friendship of the Democrats.

His presence in Springfield was caused by the plan and his desire to win votes for himself in the race for the senatorship, was the line of Lorimer's argument. "It has always struck me that if a man wants the votes of the legislators he has a right to go where the votes are," said Mr. Lorimer.

"I say on my word as a man and on my word as a senator that I am not guilty—that I have no knowledge and that I had no knowledge in the remotest degree—that bribery and corruption were used in securing my election."

IS READY TO REVISE

DEMOCRATS ARE TO TAKE UP TARIFF REVISION.

Underwood Gives Out Authoritative Statement—Farmers Protest Against Treaty.

Washington.—The Democrats of the house are prepared to go to work at once on the revision of several schedules of the Payne-Aldrich tariff act should an extra session be called following the present session of congress.

An authoritative statement to this effect was given out Tuesday by Representative Underwood of Alabama, who has been selected as chairman of the new committee on ways and means. It was made to correct an erroneous report which has gained circulation in the last few days. Mr. Underwood said:

"The statement that if on extra session is called the Democrats in the house will not begin the work of revising the tariff is absolutely unfounded. The Democrats are pledged to revise the tariff and if we go into an extra session the house unquestionably will pass some tariff bills, revising some of the schedules of the Payne act downward, before it adjourns."

Farmers registered protests against Canadian reciprocity at the hearing before the senate committee on finance. Former Governor N. J. Bachelder of New Hampshire, master of the national grange, made the opening argument and announced that if the committee had the time to hear them he would be followed by masters of granges in Indiana, Delaware, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York, West Virginia, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Massachusetts, as well as representatives in the various states of dairy, horticultural and other associations, including directors of state experimental stations.

NAVAL BILL IS PASSED

Two Warships Voted by House—Practice of Torpedo Fleet to Be Held During March.

Washington. — The navel appropriation bill passed the house. The advocates of a naval increase program of one battleship instead of two tried to force a recommittal of the bill for amendment in that respect, but the motion was defeated, 197 to 132.

Plans for the spring and summer practice of the Atlantic torpedo fleet have been announced by the navy department. During March, April and May the first and third submarine divisions, with the Castine and the Severn, will conduct submarine exercises in Chesapeake Bay. The vessels will leave the Norfolk navy yard for Solomon's Island, Md., on March 1.

REJECT ROADS' PLEA

COMMERCE COMMISSION UNANIMOUSLY DECIDE AGAINST INCREASE IN RATES.

ADVANCE IS NOT NECESSARY

Decision Shows Carriers to Be Prosperous—Do Not Need Larger Revenue to Maintain Their Credit or Insure Against Adversity.

Washington.—The interstate commerce commission in a decision handed down Tuesday rules against the railroads in both the eastern and the western rate cases.

The railroads are prohibited from advancing first-class rates and they are ordered to reduce second-class rates.

The commission shows that at the moment when the railroads were beguling their justification for e raise they were eminently prosperous. The decisions were by unanimous vote of the commission.

The report, written by Commissioner Franklin K. Lane, is an elaborate, optimistic review of the American railway situation.

Despite what the railroad reports say of the considerable increase in wages and the increase in the cost of fuel, the last six months of the year 1910, in which the new wage schedules were in effect, the report shows for the carriers the largest operating income they have ever enjoyed.

The report opens with a consideration of the affect railroad rate regulation has had upon the revenues of the carriers, which it finds to be, by reason of the law and its enforcement, the railroads have been protected against such other. As a result the revenues of the carriers have increased under regulation and their dividends and their surplus have also increased as in no other period of their history. In the past ten years the railroads of the United States have borrowed over four end one-half billion dollars, or twice the amount of the national debt at the close of the Civil war.

This is evidence of the faith the public has in these properties. The rate of dividends and the total amount has increased more rapidly than the additional mileage built. The western roads have increased their surplus over 100 per cent. in ten years.

Comment is made upon the fact that the railroads are now seeking to increase rates which were voluntarily made by them under competitive conditions and which they admit could not be increased under such conditions. The carriers are seeking to gain the benefits of protective legislation and at the same time asking for a free hand and criticising the law for the restraints which it compels upon them. It is found that the carriers do not need larger revenue for purposes of maintaining their credit or insuring them against temporary adversity.

The report closes with these words:

"We shall ask the carriers to withdraw the proposed tariffs end, if such action is not taken, the commission will further suspend these rates and make an order directing the maintenance of present rates for a period of two years."

FIGHT ON FLOOR OF HOUSE

Mondell of Wyoming and Wickersham of Alaska Come to Blows Over Alaska Bill.

Washington. — Violent language and actions were exchanged in the house Thursday when Representative Mondell of Wyoming and Delegate Wickersham of Alaska clashed over the former's bill for leasing coal lands in Alaska.

Delegate Wickersham, in opposing the Mondell bill, quoted from his statement from the interior department.

"That is a lie," said Mondell, in an undertone, turning in his seat to speak to Mr. Burke of South Dakota.

"You are a liar if you say that," shouted Wickersham, who had overheard.

Mondell turned to find Wickersham standing over him, pale in anger, with clenched fists as if to strike.

Foster of Vermont leaped forward and grasped Wickersham by the throat in a desire to pull him away.

"Don't try to choke me," yelled Wickersham, turning about and striking Foster in an effort to break his grip. Poindexter of Washington tore Foster's hands loose.

At this juncture the mace made its appearance and over the shouts of the angry men and their excited friends was heard the steady crash, crash of the speaker's gavel.

Both men then apologized to the house for the language used and the house killed the bill that had caused the trouble. After the adjournment friends of the two men effected a reconciliation, but without success.

WOMEN OPEN BATTLE

DESCEND UPON ALBANY FOR SUFFRAGE DEBATE.

Antis Prove Themselves As Aggressive As Their Sisters Who Demand the Ballot.

Albany, N. Y. — At the hearing on the woman suffrage bills given by the joint judiciary committee of the state legislature in the assembly chamber women largely predominated over the men, but few of the latter being able to obtain seats in the chamber.

For three hours the battle waged, and at its conclusion Chairman Belden announced that the measures would be taken up in executive session by the committees, both sides put forth their best speakers.

The anti-suffragists who spoke included Miss Margaret Doane Gardiner of Albany, who declared that there is "nothing dignified about a suffragist." Miss Margaret C. Cummings of New York, a school teacher, although one of those "poor down-trodden working women" the suffragists speak about, said she never had felt the need of a vote.

Richard Berry, an investigator who described the conditions in the suffrage states, and Miss Alice Hill Chittenden urged the committee seriously to consider the arguments of both sides before deciding the question and not to report the bill because the suffragists had asked for it.

Speaking from the suffragist stand point, Mrs. W. W. Penfield, representing the woman suffrage party, bluntly told the committee that it was proposed to carry on the suffrage campaign in this country as it has been carried on in England if it becomes necessary.

Mrs. Minnis Reynolds of Colorado talked in a breezy western style, declaring that women if enfranchised would not desert their homes, hus band and children by "chasing around after votes."

Rev. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the new association of suffragists, said the government has taxed the clothes of the women to the east in order to pay for irrigation in the west.

TAFT SENDS IN JAP TREATY

Feature of Document Transmitted to Senate is Omission of Immigration Restrictions.

Washington.—President Taft Tuesday transmitted to the senate the proposed new treaty with Japan.

The distinctive features of the document is that it makes no reference to the restrictions now imposed by the United States on the admittance of Japanese immigrants to these shores.

The understanding is that this all important question is left to the no limitation honor of the Japanese government, which is expected to enforce at her home ports the limitations which are now enforced under the Root-Aoki agreement in the matter of her subjects who seek entrance to the United States. Pending ratification, the new treaty is submitted to the senate in strictly confidential documents, and it is impossible to secure the exact text of the document.

BRYCE DEFENDED BY ASQUITH

Attacks Made on British Ambassador Are Answered in Reciprocity Debate.

London. — Again in the house of commons the government was made the target for a multiplicity of questions regarding the United States-Canada reciprocity agreement. In most instances the replies of the premier were colorless reiterations of known facts.

They evoked the political controversies which the national debate brought to arouse.

The unionists were especially active in suggesting that Ambassador Bryce had failed in his duty of watching over British interests, but Premier Asquith staunchly defended the diplomat. The ambassador, he said, had kept the crown at the special interests of British trade.

ANTI-PASS LAW IS VALID

Decides Cash Only and Not Advertising Can Be Accepted for Railroad Transportation.

Washington.—The Supreme court of the United States in interpreting the Hepburn rate law of 1906, declared that only money and no advertising can be accepted by interstate railroads in payment for transportation.

The decision involved a large number of contracts between the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville Railway company and various publishers, and confirmed the decision of the federal circuit court of the northern district of Illinois.

This court also decided that interstate railroads cannot issue passes for interstate transportation, even though they had contracts to do so before the passage of the Hepburn rate law.

WESTERN CANADA COUNTING ITS GOLD

THE GRAIN CROP OF 1910 WAS A GOOD PAYING ONE.

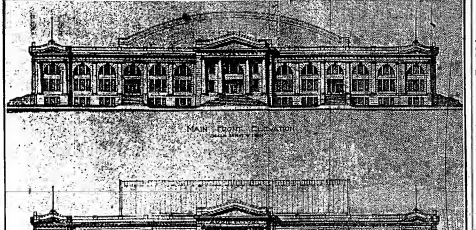
Crop conditions throughout the west of Canada were not ideal, but notwithstanding there were excellent crops. Reports come from different parts to the agents of the Canadian government, whose literature tells a good part of the story, that the crops in most places were splendid.

At Castor, Alta., F. Galloway's oat crop threshed 35 bushels to the acre, machine measure, and 44 bushels by weight. Alex. Robertson of Balzac, Alta., had 20 bushels to the acre on 85 acres. W. & H. Clerk, 17 bushels to the acre on 77 acres. Sheldon Ramsey, 20 bushels on 160 acres. J. Lano threshed 3,500 bushels off 200 acres; J. Hamilton, 5,200 bushels off 264 acres. Mrs. Headley had an average of 25 bushels per acre on 160 acres. Chambers Bros. got 13,750 bushels off 650 acres.

Pemble Valley district, G. Rollo, had an average of 25 bushels to the acre on a total crop of 10,000 bushels. E. Brown of Pinchor Creek had a yield of 22 bushels on his winter wheat; W. Walker, Miss Walker and John Goberts all had an average yield of 25 bushels; Mr. Fitzpatrick, 22, and Mr. Freebairn, 20. Charles Nelson of Bon Accord, Alberta, had threshed his crop of 5,000 bushels of grain, wheat, oats and barley, from 210 acres of old ground.

Wm. Logan of Bon Accord is reported to have threshed 400 bushels of wheat from 9 acres of new breaking. His oats it is said yielded over 100 bushels to the acre. Robert Martin of Belbeck, Sask., from 100 acres got 3,240 bushels of wheat. Geo. Campbell of Caron, Sask., from 130 acres summer fallow got 40 bushels per acre, and from 50 acres stubble got 24 bushels per acre. One of the farmers of Colonsay threshed out 85 bushels of wheat per acre from 160 acres summer fallow, and another 82 bushels more. Jacobs Glen of Drinkwater, Sask., had 36½ bushels per acre; 40 acres summer fallow, 20 bushels per acre; 40 acres stubble, 27 bushels per acre; total, 6,680 bushels off 200 acres. Abe Winters of Floral has 39 bushels of wheat per acre. At Govan, Benjamin Armstrong had 33 bushels to the acre. John Glentin, 34 bushels per acre. Latta, 35 bushels. J. K. Taylor, 35 bushels. W. Small, 2,960 bushels on 90 acres. J. F. Moore, 6,600 bushels on 215 acres. J. McaLean, 1,500 bushels on 63 acres. W. Hopwood, 1,750 bushels on 50 acres. W. Gray, 950 bushels on 20 acres. W. Curtis, 850 bushels on 30 acres. John Meyers, Jr., of Grand Coulee, reports 145 bushels to the acre. P. P. Epp of Langham, Sask., has 35 1-3 bushels per acre. J. J. Thiessen, 31 bushels per acre. Chris Dear, 25 bushels per acre from 90 acres. Wm. Thiessen, 1415 bushels from 100 acres. P. Schmidt, 18 bushels per acre from 100 acres. Robt. H. Wiggins of Manor, Sask., had 39 bushels wheat and 75 bushels of oats per acre. Fred Cobb, 30 bushels of wheat and 75 bushels of oats per acre. Jack Richardson, 40 bushels of wheat per acre. Wm. Kindof of Milestone, Sask., had 38 bushels of wheat per acre. H. J. Moore, 40 bushels of wheat per acre. Martin Roddy, 38 bushels of wheat per acre. J. D. Sifton of Moose Jaw had 37 bushels wheat per acre; oats, 80 bushels per acre; flax, 11 bushels to the acre. John L. Smith of New Hazelton had 35 bushels of wheat per acre. At Regina H. W. Loird had 35 bushels to the acre; W. H. Duncan, wheat, 35 bushels to the acre, flax, 16 bushels. G. M. Bell, wheat, 35 bushels to the acre, oats, 75 bushels; E. E. Hetherington 25 bushels to the acre; J. McKinnie, wheat, 35 bushels summer fallow; 20 bushels stubble; oats, 80 bushels; J. S. Mooney, 31 bushels of wheat; 80 bushels per acre on stubble. At Tessier, Wm. Nesbitt had 44 bushels wheat to the acre. Sup. Latreca, 34 bushels. Tho. Miller, 31 bushels. There were all on summer fallow. Major Bros.' stubble went 14. At Tuxford, Sask., F. B. Bunting had 37 bushels summer fallow. At Yellow Grass, Wm. Robson, off one half section, had 45 bushels wheat to the acre, and 40 bushels off another averaged 37 bushels to the acre. Geo. Breen, off a twenty-acre field, threshed half. M. A. Wilkinson, off 160 acres, 62 bushels wheat to the acre. His whole crop averaged over 40. Alex. R. Cameron's half section averaged over 36 bushels to the acre. D. McNevan, who has two farms, averaged about 40 bushels. W. A. Cooper got 47 bushels to the acre off 71 acres; his whole crop went about 40. Percy Murray, 35 per acre off 160 acres. Hockley Bros., 35 per acre off a half section. W. Ransom, 35 per acre off the Caldcott farm. N. Dunne, 39 to the acre. S. C. Hart, 34 per acre. T. Murray, Jr., 36 to the acre. A. E. McEwon, 38 to the acre. Mayor Taylor, 32 to the acre.

Rattlesnakes Appear Early.



The unusually warm weather throughout central Wyoming the last few weeks has caused large numbers of rattlesnakes to leave their dens and many have been killed by ranchmen and others. Not in the recollection of the oldest inhabitants have rattle snakes appeared as early in the year. —Casper correspondence Denver Republican.

Violation.

"They have expelled my favorite waiter from his brotherhood," said one hotel patron.

"Yes," replied the other, "he accidentally smiled and said 'Thank you' a dollar's worth for a 50-cent tip."

PLANS FOR NEW AGRICULTURAL HALL AT FAIR GROUNDS.

Legislative Committee Agrees on $350,000 Appropriation for Building.

Plans for an agricultural hall at the fair grounds, to cost $150,000, were presented to the joint senate and house committees on state fair by the board of managers. After examining the plans and hearing the arguments, the committee agreed to introduce a committee bill, carrying the desired appropriation.

The needs of the state fair were presented to the senators and representatives by C. W. Glotfelter, president of the Minnesota Agricultural society, C. P. Craig and Reuben Werner, of the boards of managers, and John C. Simpson, secretary of the society. The legislators were informed that there has been much dissatisfaction among the farmers of the state because of the poor accommodations for displaying products of the soil.

County exhibits protested last year of inadequate facilities and the college of agriculture complained of insufficient room. A temporary shelter was erected for displaying the work of the pupils of the ten agricultural high schools of the state.

The preliminary sketches of an agricultural hall, by F. G. German, Duluth, were examined with interest and explained by the architect. Representative R. C. Dunn urged that an appropriation of $350,000 be recommended by the committee, and this was adopted, but Senator Ole J. Segerg announced that he did not consider himself bound by the committee's vote.

The proposed building will be 200 feet square, with a full basement and two floors above. It will be fireproof throughout, only concrete, steel and tile being used in its construction. The exterior walls will be of artificial stone, resembling gray granite in appearance and having a crushing strength of 1,500 pounds a square inch.

The exterior lines will be of the Doric order, which combines simplicity and dignity, and the building of the size proposed should give a most impressive effect.

The basement will contain a large unpacking spaces entered by driveways direct from outside; toilet rooms and, if necessary, a kitchen and restaurant. The heating, ventilating and vacuum cleaning plant also will be in the basement.

Two elevators end four wide stairways will connect the basement with the upper floors.

On the main floor will be fifty-six exhibition booths and a large central court which can be used for an auditorium capable of accommodating 5,000 people at one time. Above the latter belag room for forty more in this space. A lecture room and other space is provided.

The second floor or gallery will be devoted largely to educational features and allied industries, space being provided for agricultural school displays, the college of agriculture, the state entomologist, soils and their analyses, marketing and shipping splances, fertilizers, milling, canning and other industries. Offices, toilet rooms and reserve rooms also are provided.

Mr. Germsa said that the estimate of $350,000 had been obtained after close figuring and with the best materials obtainable. The heating and cleaning plants will be of the most modern kind and the building can be used at any season of the year by the college of agriculture or for any other public purpose.

MAYOR VS. COUNCIL

WINONA IS ENJOYING AN INTERESTING MUNICIPAL ROW.

HAS ONLY SHORT TERM TO SERVE

But is Making Things Interesting—Says Bills Aggregating $8,643 Have Been Allowed Contrary to Law.

Winona.—Mayor W. E. Hamilton, whose term of office expires in April, is closing his administration at outs with the city council. At the meeting of that body last evening he submitted another communication following up his previous one asking for an auditing of the city books and the assistance of the council in investigating places where, it was alleged, liquor was being sold in Winona under government and without state license contrary to law. In answer to the mayor's original communication the oldermen made formal reply that the city books had been twice audited by expert accountants in two years and found correct. As to the allegation that there were places in the city where liquor was being sold contrary to law the council maintained it was the duty of the mayor and not of the council to investigate law violation and proceed for its suppression.

Mayor Hamilton at last evening's meeting came back in a communication in which he charged that bills amounting to $8,643.24 had been allowed by the finance committee and the council by three aldermen contrary to law. Referring to liquor matters Mayor Hamilton said the only place he knew where liquor was sold under a government license without the payment of the $1,000 state license which belongs to the city was in certain social club, which he had been informed by a traveling salesman for a whisky house had been sold fifteen barrels of whisky by that house. The mayor said he had talked with a member of the club who had said the information was incorrect, in that only five barrels of whisky had been bought from this house. The mayor said further that a member of the city council was on the purchasing committee of this club and ought to know something about the transaction.

The council referred the mayor's communication to the finance committee to report upon later.

As to the mayor's charges that the council allowed bills to three aldermen in excess of $8,000 for work performed for or articles furnished the city, the oldermen say they are no unjust reflection on the present council for acts for which a previous council was responsible.

Supreme Court Decides in Land Dispute With Railroads.

Washington, D. C. — A bitter controversy over title to land in Minnesota between claimants under the congressional land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and claimants under the timber and stone act was decided by the supreme court of the United States in favor of the railroad claimants.

The controversy had its origin in the dispute as to whether the eastern terminus of the Northern Pacific was at Duluth, Minn., or Ashland, Wis. The interior department decided it was at Duluth and canceled selections of land the railroad had made east of Duluth under the land grant acts. When the supreme court determined the terminus was at Ashland, the interior department reconsidered the former cancellations and awarded to the railroad lands previously selected by it despite the fact that individuals claimed it.

Richard H. Jones made his application for one parcel of land under the timber and stone act. It was accepted by the commissioner, but the land was afterwards awarded to Frederick Weyerhauser and John A. Hubbard, who claimed it under the railroad grant. Herbert H. Hoyt succeeded to Jones' rights and brought the present proceedings.

PIONEER WOMAN IS DEAD.

Mrs. Langseon Among First Danes to Settle at Hutchinson.

Hutchinson.—Mrs. Morie (Olson) Langseon, one of McLeod county's best-known pioneer Danish women, is dead at the age of 78 years. She was the widow of Rev. C. T. Langseon. She came to Hutchinson from Denmark in 1866. Her first husband, Christian Christensen, met a tragic death by drowning three years later. She was married to Mr. Langseon in 1878. Her children were all prominent and respected members of the community in which they live. They are Mrs. Andrew Anderson and Chris A. Christensen of Hutchinson; Mrs. Linnie Gleason of Lynn township, Mrs. S. G. Peterson of Redwood Falls, L. P. Christensen of Superior, Wis., and Mart Christensen of Noonan, N. D.

WILL IS CONTESTED.

He's of W. C. McElrath Are Not Satisfied

Litchfield.—Archibald McElrath, a brother, and Elizabeth McElrath, widow, an inmate of the St. Paul asylum, have filed objections to the probate of the will of W. C. McElrath, who died at Kingsley, Minn., leaving an estate of $20,000 to Ethel Hare, daughter of Mrs. Tennant in the town of Cedar Mills, this county, and Arthur Aylesworth, his partner in Montana.

MOORHEAD HOLDS ELECTION.

Youth of 23 Becomes City Attorney by Big Majority.

Moorhead.—W. H. Davy was re-elected mayor by a majority of 78 votes. Lew A. Huntoon of the First National bank was his opponent. Garfield Rustad, aged 23 years, and a graduate of the law department of the Minnesota University, was elected city attorney. He is said to be the youngest city attorney in Minnesota.

BUILDING A $5 HOG HOUSE

Low Cost and Ease With Which They Can Be Moved Should Recommend Them to Breeders.

The hog house shown in the accompanying illustration is ten feet long by five feet wide, the shed seven feet, and the open pen in front three feet. The pen is three feet high, the shed four feet at front, sloping to three at the back, our corner posts, 2 by 4, three feet long, and two upright at front of roof, 2 by 4, four feet long; six boards one foot wide and 16 feet long make the sides and ends; boards one foot wide and seven feet long, cut from corner to corner, will give necessary slope to the roof. The roof may be of board, iron, or any roofing. If iron is used, it should be laid over building paper to prevent sweating, writes Stanley Wells in the American Agriculturist.

If made of pine these houses cost about $5 each, but when made of native lumber they cost less. When a lid is put over the opening in front the houses are weatherproof and safe for farrowing sows at any season. In extremely cold spells I have warmed them with a small oil stove and made them as comfortable as a high-priced, artificially heated house could be made.

Five ten-foot boards make a floor, which can be laid in seasons when one is necessary, and when not in use can be neatly taken up and stored away for another year. Any man can easily move one of these houses with a stoneboat, and when they are to be moved o distance, two can be put on a wagon. The low cost and ease with which they are moved should recommend a house of this kind to the farmer, who is liable to find poor facilities for hog raising on many farms.

RATION FOR GROWING PIGS

As Feeding Capacity of One Differs From Another It is Impossible to Say What is Best.

It is impossible for anyons to say what is the best ration for growing pigs. The feeding capacity of one differs from another. We have been feeding for years, yat are all the time finding satisfactory new ways to produce better results. Sometimes we think we are feeding more grain than necessary, and then again think we are not feeding enough. As a rule more pigs are underfed than overfed, says Arthur Herd. And to find a good ration for developing youngsters in five pounds of O. P. oil-meal, 10 pounds of wheat bran or middlings, 10 pounds of cornmeol and one pound of salt well mixed in a borrel with milk and water. Better, feeding of the whole will go clean morning and night. If you have apples, cabbage or roots feed them by all means. Also they love to their evening slop feed them one pound of corn to each pound of live weight of pigs. Corn meal, finely ground or cote con be substituted for a portion of the bran and middlings if desired. Put the bread ones we add one bushel of cut alfalfa to this mixture in winter. They eat it with a relish, but small pigs do not like the alfalfa mixture as well. They love a large portion of the alfalfa in the trough unsteamed; either do they have to be tedied with halfere or confined with stanchions. All they need is good feed, clean water and absolutely dry shelter, and for this care they will return a better profit considering the investment than any other animal on the farm.

Grow Hogs.

Every farmer should grow hogs, if only enough for home use. Of course, we would not advise the farmer to grow more hogs than he can properly feed and handle. The farmer must grow some clags of live stock for meat, and the hog is about the easiest and cheapest to handle.

A TRIAL WILL CONVINCE ANYONE—THE GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY NEVER DISAPPOINTS

A few years ago I was troubled with a complication of kidney and stomach ailments, and although I tried two or three different doctors, I was unable to obtain a cure. Having heard a great deal about Swamp-Root, I decided to give it a trial and purchased a one dollar bottle of Mr. Alexander, the druggist. From the beginning I could notice a change for the better and after taking eight bottles of your medicine, I felt entirely cured and have not had my trouble since.

Had I begun using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root sooner I would have been a few hundred dollars to the good and saved myself a lot of suffering.

You may use my testimonial any time you wish.

Yours very truly,

WAS JUST COPYING MAMMA

Child's Actions That at First Mystified Father Were Easily Explained.

The little six-year-old daughter of a well-known club woman was found in her play room the other day doing all kinds of acrobatic stunts and gesticulating wildly and wierdly.

"What are you doing?" asked the child's father.

"I'm playing I'm mamma," she answered. Then she made more unique movements with her little arms and said: "There, father, you accept them. That's what they do when mamma makes them."

"What shall I accept?" asked the father, still more mystified, "and what does mamma make? Tell me what you are doing?"

"Why," she said, "I am playing that I am momma at her club. Whenever mamma goes to her club she makes motions, and the others accept them. I heard her say so over the telephone to Mrs. Smith this morning."—Illustrated Magazine.

Denominational Puzzle.

The wife of a prominent Unitarian clergyman is still wondering what her cook meant. She was a new cook, and there was every reason to believe she was a good cook. At any rate, she had unquestionably served in good families, and she brought the best of references. Nevertheless, her new mistreee did not hesitate to give her a few instructions.

"One thing I want you to remember, Nellie," said she, "is the way we like our oatmeal. Don't leave it we forget but we don't forget it next day, either."

"Yes, ma'am, ma'am," reeponded the cook, confidently. "I'll get it right, never fear. I've worked in Unitarian families before."

A Religious Innovation.

A certain well-brought-up little girl yawned at the breakfast table last Sunday morning and received a polite proposition to her mother.

"I really don't feel at all like going to church this morning," she remarked. "Can't we just send cards?"

CHILDREN AFFECTED
By Mother's Food and Drink.

Many babies have been launched into life with constitutions weakened by disease taken in the mother's mothers' milk. Mothers cannot be too careful os to the food they use while nursing their babes.

The experience of a Kansas City mother is a ouee in point:

"I was a great coffee drinker from a child, and thought I could not do without it. But I found at last it was doing me harm. For years I had been troubled with dizziness, spots before my eyes and pain in my heart, of which was added, two years later, a chronic sour stomach.

"The baby was born 7 months ago, and almost from the beginning, it, too, suffered from sour stomach. She was taking it from me.

"In my distress I consulted a friend of more experience and she told me to quit coffee at once. I did not make good milk. I have since ascertained that it really dries up the milk.

"So, I quit coffee and tried tea and at last cocoa. But they did not agree with me. Then I turned to Postum with the opposite result. It proved to be the very thing I needed. It not only agreed perfectly with baby and myself, but it increased the flow of my milk.

"My husband then quit coffee and used Postum and quickly got well of the dyspepsia with which he had been troubled. I no longer suffer from the dizziness, blind spells, pain in my beurt or sour stomach.

"Now we all drink Postum from my bueband to my seven months' old baby. It has proved to be the best hot drink we have ever used. We would not give up Postum for the best coffee we ever drank." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Overhauling and Installation of New Machinery Starts.

Hibbing.—There is every evidence of an early opening up of the mines in this district and already several orders have been received to overhaul steom shovels, dinkeys, dump cars and other material, preparatory to starting the season's work. Among the latest important mining news is the reported starting of stripping operations on the Longyear property by Butler Brothers. Only one steam shovel and a crew of men are now employed at work in the first, the number being increased as the work advances. As yet no word has been given by the Oliver Iron Mining company as to the probable date of renewed activity on their part, but information from reliable sources states that they will probably be among the last of the mines to start work in earnest this season.

The rumor is current here that no very definite move will be made until the return of the general superintendent, W. J. Wee; from his present vacation trip, which is expected to last for another six weeks.

SECOND HELEN KELLER.

St. Paul Blind and Deaf Girl Makes Wonderful Progress.

Faribault.—Vera Mabel Gammon of St. Paul, the deaf and blind child in the school for the deaf here, has been making wonderful progress the last few months in her studies. Since she has been in school from the three word "hat," "ball," and "bear," taught her the first day, her vocabulary has increased to about three thousand words. She writes good English, is fond of reading books in raised type, writes on an ordinary typewriter and braille writer, and is a "wonder hand" in writing with a pencil on a tablet. She can also do neat sewing. She has also learned to speak.

Since entering the school, most of her work has been in the shops. However, she has also studied geography, biography, nature study and arithmetic as far as fractions. One of the most interesting features in her education is the reproduction of the daily chapel lessons which are delivered in signs by the male teachers of the school and are spelled into Vera's hand by her teacher, Miss Hansen.

Miss Hansen's success in teaching Vera has been remorkable. Her pupil has learned as rapidly that she has often been termed the Helen Keller of St. Paul.

MINES WILL OPEN EARLY,

Pigs With Mange.

For pigs with mange sprinkle a little coal oil down the spine, around the head and ears and under the legs. The next day scrub the entire pig with warm water and rosin soap. Mix a little hickory wood ashes in the water, rub dry, then greass with crude petroleum, which is the same as coal oil before it is refined. Clean out the pens, dust with air-slacked lime, then give bed of clean straw. Keep shut from sleeping in hot manure or wet straw.

Sheep Are Profitable.

Sheep require more attention than any other farm animal. They do not have to be curried or brushed or blanketed, but they have to be tedied with halfere or confined with stanchions. All they need is good feed, clean water and absolutely dry shelter, and for this care they will return a better profit considering the investment than any other animal on the farm.

Will Dig Many Ditches.

Cancourse.—Some are busy hauling coal and supplies for the two dredges which will commence ditching operations out of town early in the spring. About 7,000 tons of coal have been contracted for. Brown & Hersey of Litchfield, who have contracts for ditch No. 18, commenced hauling last week with a score of teams, and another contract for commences tomorrow. Two more ditch contracts will be let in a few days. Five dredges will be worked on as many different ditches this spring.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered at Second-class matter August 20 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

March came in like a roaring lion Wednesday, which makes it due to go out like a lamb.

The planting of Red Lake and Pennington counties in the same legislatative district is somewhat like putting Tennesee and Minnesota to sleep in the same bed in 1865, but time heals wounds.

Those who rushed down to Crookston to file homesteads last week because they seen notice published in the Thief River Press that these vacant lands had been opened found themselves in about the same position as a man that is foolish enough to let his seven years run out before he tries to make final proof, because some paper says he can.

It is said to be the intention of the County commissioners to improve, and remodel the Court house in the early spring, in such a manner that it will meet all requirements of the County for many year to come. Though the building was not built for Court house purposes it can be readily and cheaply converted into a very good one, from the standpoint of both convenience and safety.—Thief River Falls News.

The law to increase the salary of county officers from two to four years should be put to sleep in a pigion hole at St. Paul. The members of the lower house will not take kindly to a proposition that will leave them to fight a body campaign every four years without any assistance from candidates for county office to help him pass around the cabbage leaf cigars.

It was our good fortune to be at Thief River Falls Monday evening and listen to the speech of Governor Eberhardt made at the Auditorium Building. We consider it one of the most earnest talks that could be made by our governor on the Minnesota school question. He laid particular stress on the disadvantages of the farm boys and girls to secure an education. He believes in the passage of the bill now before the legislature for the consolidation of country shchools, and said that it had been found to be a success where it had been tried in the southern part of the state.

The denying of the right to take the county division matter into the courts by attorney general Simpson rings down the curtain in the last act had places Pennington county on the map of Minnesota. As for us we have no apology to make for our opposition to it and hope that time will prove that we was wrong in our opinion. But the fight is over, and we sheath the sword, and will grease the wheels of ingdustry to make Pennington county one of the best and richest counties in northern Minnesota. No matter where we are located we always work for the best interest of our home, and we want to say to all of those that are how residents of Pennington county, that was of the same opinion as our selves in the late unpleasetness, to bury the hatchet, and all get into line and work for the best interest of our home county of Pennington.

TAFT TAKES A HAND.

President Taft has repealed those portions of treaties made with the Indian tribes in Minnesota of a county ago, prohibiting all traffic in intoxicants in the Indian country. He also sent to congress a special message urging similar action by that body in those treaty provisions which he is not empowered to repeal or modify.

"In the years which have elapsed since the making of these treaties," he says in his message, "conditions have largely changed the Indian population having been reduced largely, while settlements have been made and great cities like St. Paul and Minneapolis have been built since the date of the treaties was demonstrated in the Indian country. Notwithstanding these facts, this territory still remains subject to the regulation respecting the traffic in liquor originally imposed for the protection of the Indians.

"Such an anomalous condition of affairs," he continued, "should not longer continue and the regulation of the traffic in liquors in those arias now almost exclusively occupied by white people should be left to them. In those instances where the treaty authorized the president to repeal or modify the provision, I have exercised that right Some of the treaties however, provide that the provisions referred to shall continue and be in force until otherwise provided by congress."

Worth Her Weight in Butter.

Curious customs still prevail with regard to marriage. In some parts of Uganda the custom is to offer six needles and a pack of india rubber for a wife. Some of the Kaffirs exercise the Tartars of Turkestan give the weight of the prospective wife in butter. In Kinchelle the price varies from one to ten reindeer. Some savages require a certain amount of labor. Among the aborigines it is said the current rate for a wife is a box of matches, which prompted a Paris newspaper to speculate whether one of the French government boxes would be accepted.

Light on a Dark Subject.

Caller—There's one question I should like to have answered. When a thought flashes across the intellect does it effect any molecular changes in the cellular or nuclear tissues composing the material substance of the cerebral tissue, or does it operate merely in the realm of the spiritual ego, thereby leaving no trace subject to detection or classification in the domain of subjectivity? Information Editor (turning to his assistant)—There is no present need in the room.—Chicago Tribune.

A sufficient contest affidavit having been filed in this office by David Stahl contestant against homestead entry No. 430, made June 29, 1904, for S. W. ¼ Section 26 Township 153 N. Range 41 W., by Gustave L. Reimsan Contestee, in which it is alleged that said latyman has wholly abandoned said tract; that he has changed his residence therefrom for more than six months last past since making said entry; that said tract is not settled upon and cultivated by said party as required by law; said parties are hereby notified to appear, respond and offer evidence touching said allegation at 10 o'clock a. m. on March 20, 1911, before Stephen Singer, a Notary Public at Kratka, Minnesota (and that final hearing will be held at 10 o' clock a.m. on March 31, 1911, before) the Register and Receiver at the United States Land Office in Crookston, Minnesota.

The said contestant having, in a proper affidavit, filed Feb. 10, 1911, set forth facts which show that after due diligence personal service of this notice can not be made, it is hereby ordered and directed that such notice be given by due and proper publication.

A LIFE FOR A LIFE.

Cheerful New Guinea Custom Which Causes Frequent Murders.

Everywhere in New Guinea the traveler is continually brought face to face with death, and the natives are devoid of the slightest pity or respect for the dead or dying, although after a death they will often wail and lament for a considerable time.

Murder is an everyday occurrence, and nothing could be worse than the morals of the natives. In fact, they have none. They believe and live with a persistence and cunning which are surprising.

The Papuans have a cheerful custom which demands a life for a life. Should any one die at the first opportunity they kill some one—they are not very particular whom—to make up for it. "While we were at Hunsloh Bay," says Professor Pratt in the Wide World Magazine, "a Malay died of dropsy. He was the first Malay who had ever come to that part, and the Papuans greatly respected him.

"Very well," they said, 'we must shoot a Malay with our bows and arrows to pay for his death.' And sooner or later some innocent person would be killed to square the account, when everybody—except, presumably, the victim's friends—would be satisfied."

ALL OF ONE NAME.

So They Had to Tag Each of the Many Tom Hazards.

Perhaps no community more carefully and frequently set forth its erratic fancy than did the early settlers of Narragansett, R. I., of whom W. B. Weeden tells in "Early Rhode Island." There were so many of one name that the bearer must have a descriptive prefix lest he be lost in a concordant multitude. Mr. Updike cites thirty-two Tom Hazards living at one time and thus illustrates a few:

College Tom, because he had been at college. Bedford Tom was his son and lived at New Bedford. Barley Tom, because he boasted how much barley he raised from an acre; Virginia Tom, because he married a wife there; Little Neck Tom, from the farm of that name; Nailer Tom, the blacksmith; Fiddle Hend Tom, an obvious resemblance; Pistol Tom, wounded by an explosion of that arm; Young Pistol Tom, his son; Short Stephen's Tom, the father low, against Long Stephen's Tom, the father tall; Tailor Tom needs no explanation.

The Ggeorges were not so numerous, but they were distinguished as Beech Bird George, of little lore; Shoestring George, an opponent of shackles; Wig George, Dr. George and Governor George.

UNRELIABLE NEWS.

There was a rush for the land office last Friday and Saturday to file homestead entries on the eleven towns, but the poor fellows found out when they got to Crookston that the lands was not opened for filing yet, and that they had been misled by that Thief River Press, whose editor don't know the difference between a law being passed by congress to open land for homestead entry and a notice sent out by the Department of the Interior of the date that they will be prepared to accept filings on a newly opened reservation. However there was no great amount of damage done, as the boys all had a nice little trip to Crookston, but woe be unto the man who pins his faith to that kind of information and does not make final proof on his home, homestead before his seven years are out.

ONE MORE WARNING.

An Otter Tail county man wishing to divide his joys and sorrows with some female who was willing to accept a portion of his, not having enough of her own, personally, advertised for a wife and fancy fell into the hands of a Milwaukee woman. His ardent wooing cost him the munificent sum of $16 and a gold ring, price not stated. Possessed of his affection and the goods above named, she refused to yield on his insistet demand to become his very owne own, also refusing to return the ring or the plunks.

Referring to this case, the Fergus Falls Journal says: "The plan of sending away for wives is a good deal like sending away for goods. They are not always as the catalogue represents them and after you have paid freight and have sent your money you can't help yourself. By trading, marrying at home you have a chance to see what you are getting before you pay your money.

We presume that the reason men send away for wives is the same as why people send away for goods. They don't know that they can be had at home, it will pay to advertise.—Little Falls Transcript.

AN ARCTIC DELICACY.

Eskimo Soup Would Hardly Tickle Refined Palates.

Kane and Dr. Hayes, the first white men—apart from an occasional whaler—to visit the Eskimos, found some delicacy in accommodating themselves to local customs. In "The Toll of the Arctic Seas" D. M. Edwards quotes Hayes' account of his first visit to a native hut. After a cordial welcome he was pressed to eat.

"This," says Hayes, "was an invitation which I feared, but now that it had come I knew that it would be ill-bred to decline it. The expression of thanks was one of the few in their language that I knew, and I made the most of this. They laughed heartily when I said koyeaah in reply to their invitation, and immediately a not very beautiful young damsel poured some of the contents of the pots into a wide dish, and, after sipping it to satisfy herself, as I supposed, that it was not too hot, passed it to me over a couple of heads. At first my courage forsook me, but my eyes were fixed upon me, and it would have been highly impolite to shrink. I therefore shut my eyes, held my nose, swallowed the dose and retired. I was told afterward that it was their greatest delicacy—a soup made by boiling together seal oil and seal intestines."

The CHILDREN of our LEADING OFFICIALS

By WALDON FAWCETT

DAUGHTER OF GRANDPA CLARK.

SECRETARY KNOX'S DAUGHTER AND FAVORITE.

MABEL AND FAVORITE.

PRESIDENT TAFT AND HIS CHILDREN.

SENATOR LA FOLLETTE SENDING A MESSAGE TO HIS FAMILY.

AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AND SONS

DAUGHTERS OF SECRETARY MACVEAGH.

THE past decade has witnessed a most decided change in what might be termed the status of children on a class in the higher official circles of the nation. Time was, and not so many years ago, either, when I here were comparatively f e w children of an age that entitled them to be classed as young people in the households of Uncle Sam's best-paid servants. If there were junior members of such households, they were for the most part grandchildren or cousins or nephews and nieces. The result of this state of affairs was that the juveniles, neither collectively nor individually, were much of a factor in the social activities of officialdom, and very few of the entertainments in this sphere were planned especially for the benefit of the younger contingent of the community.

But, as has been said, the past half score of years has seen gradual change of conditions that has made the juveniles and the interests of young men and young women an element to be reckoned with. The explanation of the new state of affairs is to be found, of course, in the capture by younger men of a large proportion of the most exalted positions in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the government. No longer need a public man be a grandfather ere he is deemed to have arrived at the years of discretion necessary to warrant the notion in intrusting its most momentous affairs to him. Something of this same leaning in favor of younger men has even been manifested on the part of many of the leading foreign governments that send envoys to act as accredited resident representatives at Washington.

The natural sequel of this invasion of young blood in our governing circles is that the elders have been introducing in forms of entertainment less staid and solemn than those of some years back—why, President Taft himself delights to trip the light fantastic toe—and the juniors of official households have had all sorts of parties planned with special reference to their well-known proclivities. The White House furnishes an outstanding exception to the revolution in sentiment that has taken place. Prior to the Roosevelt administration there had been in many years only a few periods when there were present in the executive mansion children of age to influence the social program. Indeed the children of the Grant and Hayes families were about the only youngsters to liven up the old mansion since the days of the Civil war.

With the arrival of Theodore Roosevelt, accompanied by his half a dozen strenuous children, however, time-honored traditions had a shake-up in favor of the fads of young hearts and young heads, and this policy has been pursued during the Taft regime, although the present chief magistrate has a brood only half as numerous as that of his predecessor. A noticeable exemplification of the revolution that has taken place in the social calendar is found in the prominent place that young people's dances have occupied of late years on the winter entertainment program at the White House. And in summer the tourist may see juvenile baseball games in progress in the president's back yard, to say nothing of the comings and goings of youthful riders on horse or bicycle; roller skating on the asphalt about the mansion; and mild "joy riding" in a nutty electric phaeton.

What has been true of the White House has been true in an equal degree of the cabinet homes. It is safe to say that the homes of the members of the president's official family have during the past ten years sheltered more young people in their teens (or just out of them) than in any other similar interval in the entire history of the country. And, today there is a liberal representation of this junior element in the cabinet community. Secretary of State Knox may be said to have but recently graduated from the class of "dependant fathers" when his youngest son eloped with a pretty Rhode Island girl, although the youthful looking premier has been a grandfather for several years past. Secretary Nagel of the department of commerce and labor has several children, including a very attractive daughter, and Secretary of the Navy Meyer has two daughters who always dress exactly alike, after the fashion of twins. There are also young people in the family of Secretary of the Interior Ballinger.

In the "near cabinet" circle made up of the households of the members of the "little cabinet," as the assistant secretaries of the departments, the assistant postmaster general, etc., are dubbed, there are a number of young folks. Secretary to the President Norton, who might be placed in this category, if, indeed, he is not entitled to rank as the equal of the cabinet members themselves, his children of the interesting age, and so have Assistant Postmaster General Stewart and other of the proxies of the cabinet members.

Children have even invaded the conservative supreme court circles in formidable numbers. Time was when the thought of young people in the homes of the aged and dignified members of the nation's highest tribunal seemed almost incongruous, but on in other spheres of governmental activity this is an age of younger men on the supreme court bench, and this has created a supreme court community with a number of junior members. Mr. Justice Hughes, who came so near to winning the coveted appointment of chief justice, has perhaps the most interesting family, consisting of three daughters and one son, but Mr. Justice Day has several sons who yet rank as young men, though they have left the paternal roof, and there are grandchildren in several of the supreme court households who have all the privileges claimed by closer kin.

Probably the most interesting family in that section of officialdom made up of the households of the members of the United States senate is that of Senator La Follette, the insurgent leader. There are two manly sons and two very beautiful daughters, the eldest of whom has already demonstrated her inheritance of her father's marked histrionic ability. Senator La Follette is the chum and companion of his children to a degree that is almost ideal. Senators Smoot, Dick and Tillman are other wearers of the togn whose children have become fairly well known to newspaper readers through the publication of characteristic anecdotes, and there are a number of other members of the upper house of congress who are kept youthful by their energetic offspring.

Among the families of the members of the house of representatives children are so numerous as to render it impracticable to attempt a detailed roster. The recent elections which turned the control of the house over to the Democrats will likely serve to bring a couple of children into the limelight—the son and daughter of Champ Clark of Missouri who is the fortunate man who has been selected to succeed "Uncle Joe" Cannon as speaker. Speaker Cannon has no young children of his own, but he has had with him in his Washington home much of the time the two sweet-mannered daughters of a married sister, and since the veteran legislator makes his home in summer with this daughter at Danville, Ill., he has enjoyed the companionship of these girls as continuously as he could expect to enjoy the society of young children of his own.

Gen Leonard Wood, the new head of the United States army, furnishes another example of a man attaining an exalted post at an unusually early age. He and Mrs. Wood have three children. The sons, Leonard, Jr., and Osborn, are of about the age to enter college, but the dainty daughter of the family, named for her mother, Louise Condit-Smith Wood, is but ten years of age. Some of the children of public men in whom the people of the nation take the greatest interest are the little sons or daughters of former national officials now deceased. Prominent in this category is Miss Ellenhath Harrison, only child of the late ex-President by his second marriage and the youngest living daughter of an American president. Other fatherless young folks for whom the people at large feel a strong regard are the children of the late Grover Cleveland and the children of the late United States Senator Dolliver of Iowa, perhaps the oldest of all the leaders of the "Progressives" in congress.

In our "official foreign colony," made up of the families of the envoys of different nationalities who are sent by their respective governments to act as diplomatic representatives in the United States, there are many children. Moreover, inasmuch as the foreign envoys have in many instances married American wives, it naturally follows that the children of such unions are half American. This is true of the children of the minister of Belgium and Countess do Bulsseret and Countess Latoe-Alexandra von Bernstorff, only daughter of the German ambassador and his Yankee consort. And, by the way, it is of interest in this connection that the young countess is to be presented this winter at her father's secretaries, tha Count Pourtales, who also has an American mother.

Baron Hengelmuller, the ambassador of Austria-Hungary, end present dean of the diplomatic corps (although, if he confirms current gossip, he may resign ere this reaches the eyes of our readers), has a very pretty little daughter in her early teens who has spent virtually her entire life in the United States, her father having been stationed here continuously for some 16 years. The minister from Costa Rica and Senora Calvo lend another family that has tarried long enough in this republic to feel perfectly at home. Alike to most of the diplomatic American households, the Calvo family includes a number of children, and these young people are very talented in music and have formed an orchestra within their family circle.

Senor de la Barra, the Mexican ambassador, whose wife died a little over a year ago, and who is about to marry his sister-in-law, has two handsome boys aged 11 and 13 years, who are being educated in American schools, and the Chinese minister has daughters who are receiving a Yankee education in the seclusion of their own home by the aid of an American governess. Baron Rosen, the Russian ambassador, has a number of children, and there is also an attractive daughter of the "bud" saga in the household of Marchese Susani Canfalonieri, the new ambassador of Italy.

THE COURAGE OF LIFE.

The two virtues that help us along most in life are trust and courage. Apart from the tragedies invited by sin and violence and self-indulgence, a large part of our trouble comes from anxiety, distrust, apprehension. It was not all frivolity that dictated the answer of a young girl, who, being urged to prepare herself for a profession or a definite work, responded: "I'm not going to look ahead and worry. I can do a lot of useful things: I can mend, and make salad, and amuse children, and be patient and economical, and help people to enjoy themselves, and I don't believe alice girls starve." Courage and faith are always assets. Even if life goes back upon them and falls to come up to expectations, the practice of these virtues is just that much to the good, and we have at least not lived in the evil moment until it arrived.—Harper's Weekly.

Farmer's Rather Humorous Explanation for Telling Exceedingly "Tall" Stories.

Irving Batcheller once told a story of a farmer on the Connecticut hills. "Pretty steep land for planting, isn't it?" a visitor asked the tiller of the soil.

"Pretty steep," the farmer assented.

"I suppose it's quite difficult to plant your corn?"

"Quite difficult," came the echo.

The visitor was interested, and would not be put off with short replies.

"Eh—how do you manage to plant on this hill?" he persisted.

The farmer gazed at him pityingly.

"We have to shoot it all into the earth with shotguns, stranger," he assured his guest.

The visitor gasped. "Really?" he ejaculated. "Really now? Is that actually true?"

The farmer sighed and turned upon his guest a look of withering scorn.

"No, that isn't true," he answered. "I'm trying to make conversation."

Nine or Ten Deposits.

"It is expensive to learn to fly," said Clifford Harmon at Muscoh. "Your aeroplane costs more than $5,000. You must pay a fee of $500 for tuition, and you must deposit, too, about $500 more for damages. All the damage you do to the machine you learn to fly must be paid for, and your deposit may easily be eaten up.

"I was talking one day at Nice to an English flyer.

"'I learned to fly in a week,' I said. 'How long did it take you to learn?'

"'Oh, nine or ten—'

"'What!' I interrupted. 'Not nine or ten weeks?'

"'No, aeroplanes,' he said."

THAT AWFUL BACKACHE

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. was suggestive run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since. I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have the backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Morton's Gap, Ky.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. Try to get permanent relief if you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

IF YOU HAVE A SICKLY YOUNGSTER TRY THIS FREE

The family with young children that is without sickness is the house now and then is rare, and so it is important that the head of the house should know what to do in the little emergencies that arise. A child with a serious ailment needs a doctor. It is true, but in the majority of instances, as any doctor knows, the child suffers from some little intestinal trouble, usually constipation.

There is no sense in giving it a pill or a powder containing an opiate, nor is flushing of the bowels to be always recommended. Rather give it a small dose of a mild, gentle laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which by cleansing out the bowels and strengthening the little stomach muscles, will immediately correct the trouble.

This is not alone our opinion but that of Mrs. N. H. Mead of Prospect, Kans., whose granddaughter has been taking it successfully and of Mrs. I. S. Whiting of Lena, Wis., who gives it to her children and takes it herself. It is sold in fifty cent and one dollar bottles at every drug store, but if you want to test it in your family, before you buy it send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will forward a supply free of charge.

The now governor of a western state has two sons. One is big and husky like his father, but the other is more slight, and at times he rather vexes his father by his affection for 'rah-rah boy clothes and a general air of inestitude and dudishness.

The two sons and the father were in the library one night and the name of a prizefight referee came into the conversation. The 'rah-rah lad had been sitting by, twiddling his thumbs, but his ears pricked up at the man's name, and he drawled: "I rather like that chap. He's all right."

"What do you know about him?" the other brother asked, rather contemptuously.

"Oh, he once met a whole the best of it one night."

"Gave you the best of it?" both father and brother shouted.

"Yes, you see, I fight under the name of Young Ryan and bo counted pretty slow one time when I was down."—Saturday Evening Post.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, Feb. 22.—The joint committee of the legislature completed its anta fair bill which will be introduced in the house early next week. It makes the state fair a quasi-state organization and places its finances under the supervision of state officers. The proposed bill reduces in membership the number of agricultural societies entitled to dategates.

County fair associations which shall maintain an active existence, hold an nual fairs and shall have paid out at the preceding fair the sum of $400 in premiums and have a membership of 25 are entitled to three delegates each. Two of these are to be elected and the third is to be the president of the fair society. In cases where more than one county fair exists in a county exists the senior society shall be entitled to choose such delegates. Such seniority shall be determined by the state auditor, no delegates are to be seated until they have certificates from the state auditor.

One delegate is allowed from every county in which no county fair society exists and he is to be appointed by the county board of commissioners. No one is allowed a vote unless he is a resident of the stete. This section was put in the bill to eliminate several honorary members who reside outside the state. The bill provides that honorary members moy be chosen by a vote.

County Option is Defeated.

County option was given its quietus in the senate by a vote of 37 to 24 it was the fines county option bill defeated in the house, and introduced in the senate by Senator V. L. Johnson.

Senator Johnson opened the debate. He said the county option bill was the most important measure before the legislature. More people were interested in it, he said, than in reapportionment, railroad legislation or workingmen's compensation bills. He described the harm done by "that monstrosity of modern civilization, the American saloon." Also, "the force bonage recently enacted in the so called 'indian lid' territry" come in for its share of execration.

St. Paul, Feb. 23.—Reapportionment on a population basis has neared its goal. By a vote of 85 to 21, the Minnesota house passed the Congdon bill, putting the measure up to the senate where is said the friends of reapportionment heve enough votes to pass the bill. The passage of what is probable the most important measure of the session, came after a notable debate.

Bank Guaranty Law Urged.

State guaranty of bank deposits is planned in a bill introduced in the house by Representatives Kelly and Robinson. It provides for a state banking board to be composed of the governor, auditor of public accounts, and attorney general which is to be given control over the banking business in the state and bo at the head of a corps of bank examiners. The bill proposes that on assessment of one-fourth of a mill on the average daily deposits of any bank be levied to create a fund to re-imburse depositors in case of failures.

A new feature of the bill is the limiting of banks in the state. It provides that no bank can be organized with a capital of less than $10,000 in towns of not more than 500 people, a minimum capital of $15,000 in towns of not more than 1,000 people; $20,000 in towns of not more than 2,000 people; $25,000 in cities of not more than 5,000 people; $35,000 in cities of not more than 25,000 population; $50,000 in cities of not more than 100,000 people, and $100,000 in cities between 100,000 and 200,000 inhabitants.

Four-Year Terms for County Jobs.

R. C. Dunn has introduced a bill in the house extending the terms of county auditors, treasurers, registers of deeds, sheriffs, coroners, county attorneys, county surveyors and superintendents of schools from two to four years. The bill proposes that the present terms shall be lengthened two years and that thereafter they shall be four years.

The reciprocity pact received a body blow by a vote of 36 to 25. The Rockne resolution recommending postponement was adopted.

Tha. Nash-Moriarty bill, making Columbus day, Oct. 12, a legal holiday in Minnesota, passed the house by a vote of 71 to 25.

Trouble at Outset.

Trouble arose at the outset of the debate over the proposed amendment changing districts in the southern part of the state. This change involved districts No. 9 and No. 10, Watonwan and Martin counties composed of district No. 9 in the original bill and Jackson, Cottonwood and Murrey counties, made up district No. 10. By the amendment, Martin and Jackson are joined and Watonwan goes to the tenth.

St. Paul, Feb. 25.—A semi-monthly payday bill for public service corporations, e bill to limit the working hours of women to 10 hours a day in all lines of employment, and an anti-boss shaft bill occupied the attention of lehor committee of the senate. All were recommended for passage.

Representatives of labor unions appeared before the committee to advocate the semi-monthly payday. Individual employes from the shops, and railroad lawyers, spoke against it. When the committee went into executive session Senators Pauly and L'Hereault of Minneapolis took up the cudgels for the bill. Senator Duxbury of Houston opposed it.

The bill was recommended to pass with one dissenting vote.

Mrs. Peary Starkweather of the state labor department, asked that a bill making it unlawful for women to work more then 10 hours a day in any mercantile, manufacturing or laundrial establishment be made a committee measure and recommended for passage. This was done.

Senator Pauly's anti-loan shark bill provided that no man could assign his wages without the consent of the employer and the recording of the assignment with the city clerk. It also provided that if a man were married, he could not assign his wages without the written consent of his wife.

Drainage Probers are Named.

Speeker Dunn appointed the house committee to investigate the conduct of George Ralph, state engineer, relatives to the letting of contracts and the construction of drainage ditches in upper Minnesota. The committee is headed by Representative Cleon T. Knapp of Chisholm. The other members are Donald Robertson of Argyle, J. J. Moriarty of Belle Plaine, C. R. Fryer of Minneapolis and Ralph E. Crane of Grand Meedow.

State Drainage Commission Hit.

"The state dreinage commission should be abolished," said Senator Swenson before the senate committee on public accounts, referring to the charges made by State Examiner Schaefer against the commission. The committee appointed three of its members, Senators Works, Murry and Swenson, a special committee to investigate the state dreinage commission. It was decided to work in conjuntion with the house committee for the same purpose if the house committee would accept their co-operation. If not they will work independently.

St. Paul, Feb. 27.—For the third time in its history, a proposal for a distence tariff, the "Iowa idea," with which the name of Senator Cashman has become associated, was defeated in the Minnesota senate.

The final vote on the measure was 29 for and 23 against. Two years ago, the measure received 29 votes for end four years ago it received 22 votes.

The vote came after a spirited debate in which such leeders as Senators Cashman, Clague, Putnam and Dwinnell took a leading part.

Camphall Bill Advanced.

Initiative and referendum won a point in the lower house of the legislature. By a close vote of 57 to 50, its advocates succeeded in taking the bill from general orders and making a special order for Thursday morning, March 9. Many of the members who opposed placing the bill on a special order a week ego, changed their stand. Moyle Edwards of Breckenridge, who is opposed to the Campbell bill, but will favor a conservative initiative and referendum measure, brought the issue before the house by a motion to have the action of a week ago reconsidered.

There were two absentees in the senate roll call, Duxbury and Nelson. Both had been excused. Duxbury voting, Senator Duxbury had announced he would vote against the bill.

Representative C. R. Fowler led the opposition. Representative Campbell took the position that the bill was one of the most important measures before the legislature. R. C. Dunn objected to further discussion.

The long-expected 12 o'clock saloon closing bill was introduced in the house by J. D. O'Brien of St. Paul. It affects only the three cities of the first class. The proposed measure is expected to excite even more discussion than the county option bill.

The Elwell deficiency appropriation bill for the university was passed. It provides about $600,000 for construction and equipment of buildings.

Senator Elwell's new bill, giving the park board right to acquire property outside the city limits, also was passed.

The report of the house committee on university affairs was unfavorably recommending. Indefinite postponement of the bill providing for a homeopathic building at the state university, was defeated. The bill will be placed in general orders.

COULD NOT STAND SUFFERING FROM SKIN ERUPTION

"I have been using Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment for the past three months and I am glad to say that they cured me of a most annoying skin eruption. It began by my noticing red blotches appearing on my face and scalp. Although they were rather disfiguring, I did not think anything of them until they began to get scaly and dry and to itch and burn until I could not stand the suffering. Then I began to use a different soap, thinking that my old kind might be hurting me, but that didn't seem to do any good. I went to two different doctors but neither seemed to help me any. I lost many nights' sleep in continual scratching, sometimes scratching till I drew the blood on my face and head. A Frequent Speaker.

A member for a northern constituency, who was one day reproached by a disappointed supporter for never opening his mouth in the house, repudiated the accusation with indignation. Not a day passed, he declared, but that he said something; and it was reported in the papers, too. In confirmation of his statement he produced the report of the last debate, and pointed triumphantly to the "Hear, hears" with which certain speeches were punctuated. "That's me," he said.—The Bits.

Housework Drudgery

Housework is drudgery for the weak woman. Sin brushes, dusts and scrubs, or for her part in all day attending to the many details of her household, her back aching, her temples throbbing, nerves quivering under the stress of pain, possibly dizzy feelings. Sometimes she can't rest in bed nor refreshing, because then tired nerves do not permit of refreshing sleep. The real need of such women is satisfied by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

It Makes Weak Women Strong and Sick Women Well.

This "Prescription" is a powerful, yet safe, remedy for all the many forms of women's weaknesses, functional disturbances and irregularities. Many of these weaknesses so peculiar to women. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces restful sleep.

Dr. Pierce is perfectly willing to let every one know what his "Favorite Prescription" contains, a complete list of the ingredients on the bottle-wrapper. Do not let any unscrupulous druggist persuade you that his substitute or unknown compostition is "just as good" in order that he may make a bigger profit. Just smile and shake your head!

A TRUE STORY OF THE SECRET SERVICE

By COL. H. C. WHITLEY Former Chief United States Secret Service

THE barren, rocky little farm in Northern Vermont, a mile or two out from the village of Newtown, near the Derby line, was suggestive mainly of hard work and small returns, to the ordinary observer. Its buildings were small and old and out of repair; its fences were sagging in places; the orchard, long past its prime, was sadly out, and the lack of money to buy new trees had prevented the filling up of the vacant places. But in spite of all its drawbacks, the barren, rocky little farm was a glorified place to John Barrows that day in early spring in the fifties; for that day Jane Heath had promised to be his wife. Jane had lived alone in the little house in the village, left to her or the death of her father and mother several years before, and always the families had been friends. She was a beautiful girl, with the glossy black hair, the dark and sparkling blue eyes, the firm apple cheeks and the sunshiny nature and undaunted courage of her Irish ancestors. She had never been afraid to live alone—neither fear of possible physical peril nor of the mental attitude that sometimes is more to be dreaded even than thieves or wandering beggars, by people who have too much of their own society, ever had disturbed her. She possessed a strength of character which the herself did not realize but which, in promising to marry John Barrows, meant that she gave him her undying devotion.

She had known John Barrows long and intimately—since the days when they went to the little village school together. In later years, often she had been a guest at the Barrows farmhouse, wherein the family was made up of John and his mother and his brother Andrew. Mrs. Barrows loved the sunny-faced girl as a daughter, and Andy—Andy was the one source of apprehension to the otherwise entirely happy young couple. An amiable agreement as to the division of the farm had been reached, but lately Andy had seemed moody and despondent, and often he watched John and Jane with jealous eyes. A few days before John's proposal, Andy had asked Jane to marry him, but she had gently refused.

"Yes, I know why you won't marry me. You're in love with John. He's younger then I, and better favored, and you've fallen in love with his handsome face. But you've mine by rights—as I'm the oldest I should have the first choice. Oh, do say you love me, Jane!"

"Why, Andy, you know I couldn't say that, when you know I do not care for you in that way. I'm so sorry—"

"I don't want your pity. Even if you don't love me, I love you enough for both—and you must marry me. I could fix it so we'd have oil the farm, and you need never want for anything."

"No, Andy, I don't love you, and I never shall, and I'm not going to marry you. I'm sorry you feel so bad; can't we be friends?"

"Yes, we can be friends, but even if you won't marry me, neither shall you ever marry John. Mark my words."

Andy Barrows had an intimate friend, Malcolm Thomson, a clean-mouthed, crafty Scot, and to him Andy confided his troubles. The latter considered the matter, then advised Andy to be friendly to his brother and thus lead him to think that he—Andy—was reconciled, but to bide his time.

Plans for the marriage were discussed, and Thanksgiving day was decided on for the wedding. The sale of John's share of the season's crops and livestock, with the money—the bank account dear to the heart of every New Englander—which John had in the bank, would be enough to build the little house, on the opposite side of the field from the old one, on which the young couple had selected their dreams. John was working his project to coax the old farm to yield, and hauling logs and lumber in odd hours for the new house and outbuildings. One day, early in the fall, the brothers were working in the field near the house. The days were growing shorter, and Andy suggested that he remain in the field, working as long as there was light, and that John go to the house to get the chores. John agreed, and went to his chores with a happy heart, thinking that Andy hadn't really taken so greatly disappointed, after all.

"Mother," he said, as he brought in the pails of foaming milk, "I believe Andy's got all over being jealous of me. He's so pleasant and agreeable lately that I don't help thinking he has forgiven me."

"No bad nothing to forgive, my son," said Mrs. Barrows; "but I'm so glad as you are to see him in a more reasonable frame of mind. I only wish there were two Janes. She is a good, sweet girl, fit to be the wife of any one."

"Bless you for saying that, mother. You don't know how happy you make me. I'll go and whistle for Andy—I see supper is nearly ready."

Andy, however, did not respond to repeated whistlings, and finally John went to the field to search for him, but could not find him and returned to the house. "I guess he's gone to the village, mother," he said, "and I suppose he will eat supper there. You know he often does that." His mother was satisfied, and Andy's absence caused no alarm. Later in the evening a haystack, that stood in the field near the place where the brothers had been at work, was discovered to be on fire. John went out to try to save it, but it seemed to be burning all over at the same time, and he could do nothing. The fire was attributed to some malicious or thoughtless boys, and no one thought of connecting it with Andy's disappearance.

Several days elapsed, and Andy did not return. His mother and brother thought he might have gone to visit his friend, Malcolm Thomson, who lived a short distance over the line in Canada. Nearly a week later Thomson appeared at the Barrows farm to transact some business, he said, with Andy. He seemed greatly surprised and disappointed at the latter's absence, and expressed anxiety lest some accident had befallen him. The following day Thomson went to the village and in the stores and shops he discussed the disappearance of Andy, and stirred up considerable comment among the villagers who had thought, with his mother and brother, that Andy was visiting Thomson. The Scotchmen appeared much concerned and, while expressing no opinion, kept up the gossip he had started until at last suspicion was aroused. That which had been a commonplace circumstance at first became a mystery that grew deeper and deeper each hour, until finally someone suggested foul play. This suggestion rapidly took root and gathered credence until the entire neighborhood was sure that Andy Barrows had been murdered.

John Barrows and his mother, of course, were the last to hear these stories, and when they finally reached his ears, John started an immediate investigation, in which nearly all the men of the village willingly joined. They searched every out-of-the-way place, every abandoned well, every possible nook and cranny on the farm. At night the men looked puzzled and were ready to go home, and alone the search to go over until the next day, when Thomson casually mentioned the burning of the haystack.

Here the searchers were horrified to find a partly burned body. Raking in the ashes, some found a bunch of keys and a pocketknife, which were recognized at once as having belonged to Andy Barrows. A blood-stained ox, with some light red hairs, exactly the shade of Andy's hair, adhering to the blade, was found in the grass near by. These discoveries seemed to solve the mystery of Andy's disappearance, and the cowardly murder had been committed, the body hidden in the stack, and the stack burned to conceal the crime. There seemed no doubt as to the identity of the body, and the next thing was to discover the criminal.

Suspicion at once pointed to John Barrows. Who else could have committed the awful deed—who else could have had the motive for doing it? Thomson, while expressing doubt as to John's guilt, said he knew there had been some misunderstanding between the brothers, but did not think it ever would reach such a stage. Several persons who had heard, or heard of, the quarrel between the brothers, some forward to tell what they knew or imagined, and things began to look pretty dark for John. He was at much puzzled as anyone by the discovery made in the ashes of the haystack, and could offer no explanation of the mystery.

John Barrows was formally charged with the murder of his brother, and a warrant was sworn out by Thomson for his arrest. Thomson took this step most unwillingly, he said, but felt he must see justice done his old friend. No denial on John's part made the slightest impression on the minds of the excited people. They wanted an immediate trial, but were compelled to wait a few weeks for court to convene, and after a brief preliminary hearing, John was taken to the county jail.

Jane Heath, when the first suspicion of her lover was made public, declared her faith in him, and told him she would stand by him and eventually would see the criminal punished. No one could shake her faith in John, and her friends regarded her as little short of demented when she declared she never would forsake John Barrows. No one else had the slightest faith in his innocence. Even his mother, though not expressing her opinion, was prostrated by the grief and the disgrace, and refused to see her son. She believed him guilty, and could not bear to see the son who had killed another son equally dear.

When the case came to trial there was little evidence in behalf of the accused. Old neighbors, ready to believe in his guilt, testified unwillingly of his previous good character, but took every possible opportunity to impress on judge and jury that circumstances were mightily against John Barrows. These old neighbors of John had been his friends and were not really malicious, their action being merely the result of the well-sown seeds of distrust scattered by Malcolm Thomson. John was adjudged guilty of murder in the first degree.

Jane Heath vowed she would move Heaven and earth to free her lover, and through her efforts he was granted a short respite by the governor of the state, and he was to remain for few months in jail before the execution. With renewed hope, she determined to prove his innocence and save his life. She insisted that there was no proof whatever that Andy Berrows was dead, and that all the evidence was purely circumstantial; and she so earnestly persisted in her theory, and cast so much doubt on the guilt of John, that she finally prevailed upon the governor to commute his sentence to life imprisonment.

Soon after the trial of John Berrows, Malcolm Thomson determined to leave that neighborhood. Before doing so, he called on Miss Heath and talked to her most consolingly. But Jane was suspicious, and his professed solicitude caused her to believe his declarations of sympathy and friendship were not genuine. His talk looked sincerity. Jane made up her mind to watch him, if possible to do so, as she believed he held the key to the mystery of Andy Barrows's disappearance.

Two years later—years in which Jane Heath, though not inactive, had accomplished practically nothing toward the release of her lover—a young soldier returned to northern Vermont from the south on a furlough. From him Jane learned that Thomson was in New Orleans. She decided to go to that city, making the long journey as did Evangeline—not to find her lover, but to accomplish his freedom. Travel scarcely realize that the handsome youth was in reality a refined young woman.

Not long after this Miss Heath reported to me that she had discovered Malcolm Thomson, and was sure he was engaged in some kind of crooked business. I sent a skilled man to the neighborhood where Thomson was living, with instructions that gentleman's acquaintances. Soon he discovered Thomson was carrying on a thriving business in smuggling goods across Lake Pontchartrain into the Confederacy. Also it was found out that Thomson was greatly afraid of detection by the federal authorities. Like all crooks he deemed everyone else crooked, and was seeking an alliance with someone who could "fix" the ruling powers. This timidity led him to take into his confidence the detective in my employ, Colonel Moncoosus.

Moncoosus easily arranged a partnership with Thomson, after convincing him of his—Moncoosus's—great influence with the federal authorities and his ability to obtain the necessary permits for taking out goods and bringing in cotton. Thomson was to furnish the money, while Moncoosus was to take charge of the little schooner employed, and manage the authorities. There also was a third partner in the scheme, a man named Hopper, who was located at Mandeville, just across Lake Pontchartrain and inside the Confederate lines. Colonel Moncoosus wished to meet this partner, to whom he was a stranger, and Thomson furnished him with a photograph of the man, that there might be no trouble in identifying him. Moncoosus brought the photograph to me, and I left it on my desk without thinking much about it. Miss Heath happening in soon after, saw the photograph and recognized it as a picture of Andy Barrows. The mythical scheme that had been planned by Thomson for the purpose of entrapping the Scotchman, on suspicion that he was an enemy of the government, had unintentionally become of paramount importance. Steps were taken at once to bring Andy Barrows before Miss Heath, and compel him to confess his part in the miserable scheme to spoil the lives of his brother and his brother's sweetheart.

A small schooner was procured and loaded. It was planned to capture Andy Barrows-Hopper, and bring him to New Orleans. General Butler, when consulted, said the plan was a crazy one, but Moncoosus declared he could carry it out. It did seem a difficult undertaking, but Moncoosus was willing and anxious to take the risk and the Butler consented.

"When the little boat arrived at Mandeville it was unloaded and taken to a few miles distant across a bayou for the purpose of taking on bales of cotton. "Hopper" was there to superintend the delivery of the cotton. When the schooner was ready to sail he came on board, with two other men, supposed to be his friends. Mandeville as the schooner passed on its way to New Orleans. The wind was blowing heavily that day, and about when the host pointed toward Mandeville it would be over where she was headed across the bay toward New Orleans.

"Hopper's two assistants were perched upon a cotton bale with their legs hanging over the windward roll of the vessel. Colonel Moncoosus put the helm down hard and let go the main sheet. The boom swung over with great force, the boat gave a sudden lurch, and the two men sitting on the cotton bale were knocked into the bay.

"Heave her to," shouted Hopper, at the same time drawing his revolver. In an instant he was lying on the deck. A bullet had pierced his side from the forward part of the schooner, and now was headed directly for New Orleans before a ten or twelve knot breeze. When the schooner arrived and was hauled up out of the lake into the new basin, I was awaiting its arrival and went aboard. A surgeon had been sent for to care for Hopper, but had not arrived. Hopper was badly wounded, and seemed to realize that the end was near. He appeared to be a man of some education and refinement. His high cheek bones, his coarse features and pale blue eyes, however, were indicative of his wicked nature. The tightly drawn lines about his mouth showed inflexibility of will and iron nerve to carry out whatever he undertook.

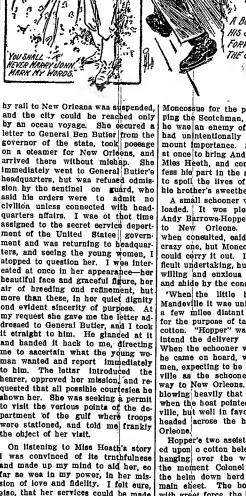
When I went forward to speak to him I recognized Hopper as a man who had been tried and convicted for passing counterfeit money at New Orleans several months before. He had been sent to the penitentiary at Baton Rouge, but had escaped during a battle of that point in which the prison was partially destroyed. He made his way across the Atmy lines over into the Confederacy where, by standing in with the commanding Confederate officer at Mandeville, he was enabled to handle and ship out cotton.

I seated myself beside the wounded man and took his hand, and never will I forget the ghastly stare with which he regarded me as I endeavored to impress upon him the desperateness of his condition and the duty incumbent upon him. My urgent appeal had its effect. Hopper admitted that his mind was burdened with a great crime, which he was willing to confess. I had set him down as a scoundrel, but was not quite prepared to be brought face to face with one whose heart was so inhuman as deliberately to plan to hang his own brother.

"A few years ago," he said, "I, with my younger brother, lived with our widowed mother on a little farm in northern Vermont. There lived near us a most estimable young woman. I paid her some attention, and in time became deeply in love with her. When I supposed I had won her affections I asked her to marry me. She refused me, and did not deny that she loved my brother when I charged her with that being the reason for her refusing me. She was not to blame. She had made no promises. I had merely mistaken her easterly regard and kindness to me for affection. I alone was responsible for the error."

Here he paused for a moment as if to gather courage for what was to follow. Up to this time he had met my eyes frankly, but now he shifted his gaze, and continued:

"When she told me she could not marry me, and made no denial of her regard for my brother, I was filled with unutterable rage. Calling her a heartless flirt, I seized my hat and left her. I was furious, desperate, and determined to be revenged. While my heart was filled with rancor and my mind with spiteful thoughts, I confided my troubles to Malcolm Thomson. He always was an evil counselor, but a cunning one. He dissuaded me from my plan for immediate revenge, and advised me to appear friendly with my brother in order better to carry out a plot which he revealed to me.



"Soon after this my brother announced his engagement to marry Miss Heath, and I wished him well with bitterness in my heart. Plans were made for the marriage, and I seemed to take an interest in them, and to have forgiven my brother and his fiancee my fancied wrongs. But I was only biding my time.

"When the time was ripe for executing the plot we had arranged, I managed to be at work with my brother in a field on our farm. On the previous night Thomson and I had placed the body of a man about my size in a hogstead, which stood near our work, and were at work repairing a fence. Thomson had obtained the body from a negro's burying ground on the Canadian side.

"My brother left the field that day just before dark. I remained for the purpose of completing the work. When the sun had set and it was dark, I punctured a small vein in my arm, and let with the blood besmeared the left of the ax we had been using. I cut off a lock of my father's head—it was on the bloody blade, and then pitched the ax into the grass. Reaching behind the body in the hay I deposited in my pocketknife and bunch of keys. Then I set fire to the stack and hurried to John Thomson, who was standing near by with a horse and buggy. We drove rapidly away, and I soon was on my way to New Orleans, where Thomson was to join me in a few weeks.

"It was agreed that Thomson should first return to the village and stir up suspicion, which would result in a search for me and the disappearance of the burned body. Everything turned out thus far as we had planned. My brother was accused and arrested for the murder.

"It was my purpose, when my rival should be out of my way, to return home, and after a time renew my attentions to Miss Heath, but I put off going from time to time. I could not face my old friends and neighbors. Through Thomson I learned that my brother's sentence was commuted. I was thankful for that. No one knew, now that I was promptly issued, and she was given the well-earned privilege of carrying it to the lover whose innocence had been established by her faith and untiring devotion.

WHERE FIGHT RAGED

Trask Rock Marks Historic Maine Battleground.

Was the Landing Place of American Troops and Is Named for a Drummer in the War of 1812.

Portland, Me.—Popular os o summer resort, and teeming with interesting bits of historical matter, bordering on Penobscot bay waters, is the little town of Castine, Me. It was once surrounded by water, by reason of the trenchee dug by the British, while the territory was in their hands in 1815, but it is now part of the mainland.

The town bee relics and historical bits of interest, forts of French, British and American build, and on old blockhouse, all of which interest the traveler. One of the most interesting of these old sites is "Trask rock," once called "Hinckley's rock." It is situated on the western shore. It was the landing place of the Americens at the time of the Penobscot expedition, when they made an attempt to secure possession of the island.

Trask rock to of o peculiar whitebess. It is large and shelvy, made conspicuous by a background of bowlders and a precipice. It is situated about half-way between the point where the blockhouse was located during the war, and the present site of the lighthouse on Dyce's Head. This side of the island being weakly protected in 1812, the Americens were enabled to make a successful landing.

The landing took place on the night of July 28. The weather was damp, and a slight swell tossed the vessels so they moored along the coastline just beyond the reach of the British musketry on shore. About three o'clock in the morning preparations were made for a landing. In the screen of o low-hanging fog about 400 marines and militia landed on and near Trask rock.

A section of the landing force was under commond of Captain Hinckley, who, landing on the Trask rock as the British opened fire, urged his men on up the steep bank. He was killed in the rush by a shot fired from a force of the enemy on the rock which long bore his name. As "Hinckley rock" it was known until after years, when o Mr. Trask, who was a drummer in the Americen ranks, visited the town.

Trask Rock.

He had played martial airs all through the fight and the name was changed to Trask rock in commemoration of his bravery. Trask at the time of the war was a boy of fourteen, and long after the war he visited the site of the rock ood the battle and told the story. It is said that more than 100 lives were lost on the American side in that fight out of about 400 engaged.

In the year 1828 Dyce's Head lighthouse was built on the north side of the town to the harbor, being named after the first settler in that part of the town. It was originally a wood and was very shobbily constructed. It became so much in need of repairs and so unsafe that in 1858 it was torn down and another one built in its place. The head was properly named for John Jacob Dyce, who owned it in 1775.

WONDERFUL MEXICAN ESTATE

Great Farm Which Is Said to Have No Equal in Size and Value.

City of Mexico.—The splendid estate of Don Luis Terrazas, in the state of Chihuahua, Mexico, is probably without equal. Terrozas is said to own the greatest farm in the world. His estate has 5,000,000 acres of fertile land and extends 150 miles north and west and 200 miles north and south. On its eastern side through its valleys roam over 1,000,000 cattle, 1,000 sheep and 100,000 horses, theee being tended by a force of 2,000 horsemen, herdsmen and sheep shepherds. Each year or to least 150,000 head of cattle and 100,000 sheep are slaughtered, dressed and packed, this product etote and five reservoirs, which cost $500,000, and 30t wells, which cost over another $500,000. Don Luis Terrazas is a scientific farmer, and raises every kind of grain in his great fields. His homestead is described as the finest farmhouse in existence. It is capable of accommodating 500 guests at a time, and was erected at an expense of $1,000,000. It is e veritable country palace. On the homestead alone are employed over 100 male servants.

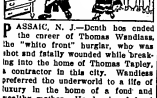
HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Match-Making a Dangerous Business

NEW YORK—Phosphorus matches kill and maim the men and girls who make them. The working men and girls who are engaged in the manufacture and the packing of the ordinary match run a heavy risk of contracting phosphorous necrosis, and those who get this disease generally die a horrible and lingering death. These facts are brought out in the report of the United States bureau of labor, which recently investigated the match industry.



Phosphorous necrosis, or match poisoning, attacks the teeth and jaws. The teeth become loose and fall out and the bone of the jaw becomes porous and decays. It is necessary then to remove large parts of the bone, and frequently the entire jaw. One man who worked in a match factory in Wisconsin had to have his whole upper and lower jaws removed, so badly had the disease attacked him. Then he lived for months, taking occasional nourishment through a tube.

Another case reported by the bureau of labor was that of a girl of 14 who went to work packing matches. The poisonous atmosphere of the place affected her teeth, and when she went to a dentist he found her whole lower jaw honeycombed by the phosphorous poisoning. Abscesses followed and the child was unable to eat. She slowly starved to death.

Many other cases are cited in the report. No one who works in these factories apparently is immune from the disease, and sanitary precautions which have been taken in some of the larger factories have been ineffectual. The atmosphere must of necessity contain the fumes of phosphorus, and they are deadly.

Not all the men and girls who are poisoned die, of course. Some of them check the disease early by a radical operation, having lower jaws removed. Those who are not willing to be maimed in this way generally die as a result of absorbing the poisons generated by their own decaying teeth and bones.

Death Comes to 'Dress Suit' Burglar

PASSAIC, N. J.—Death has ended the career of Thomas Wandiass, the "white front" burglar, who was shot and fatally wounded while breaking into the home of Thomas Tapley, a contractor in this city. Wandiass preferred the underworld to a life of luxury in the home of a fond and wealthy mother. He developed from a sort of "angel child" to a desperate criminal. Paralysis of his vocal organs shortly after his capture kept the police from obtaining any corrected account of his amazing career.

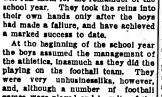
Jean Mitchell, aged seventeen years, who called herself his "chicken stall" and assisted him in 23 burglaries, has pleaded guilty and will receive sentence. She declares she is eager to get back to her home in the New England states as she has had enough of travel and more dresses. She built a "trod by Wandiass when she consented to become his accomplice.

The police call Wandiass a "super-duper worker" and a "dress suit burglar." He called himself a "white front" burglar and was fascinated by the danger of robbing a house while there were many persons about. Often he would stop to listen to the dinner chatter before breaking his escape. Generally he selected a dark or dimly lighted parlor, jimmied the window and climbed in. During the months that the girl worked with him he relied upon her to "spill a fabt" as she called it, and draw the crowd while he made his escape.

Wandiass, was about thirty years old. His mother, Mrs. Augusta P. Berner, is a woman of wealth and refinement in Brooklyn, N. Y. Her first husband, Wandiass, was a hotel proprietor and well to do. He left a comfortable fortune, and when he died his son, Tom, was a spoiled youngster and a great church worker.

Just when he became transformed into a "dip" does not seem to know, but he ran away from boarding school at seventeen and the next his mother heard of him was that he was a member of a gang of thieves. He was arrested, but when he called a Raffles, except that he dressed well and committed most of his burglaries while clad in evening clothes.

Theatrical Censors in Kansas Towns



TOPEKA, KAN.—There are 800 organized cities in Kansas, and every one of those cities and towns has a theatrical censor, especially charged to watch the moving picture shows. The legislature has passed a law naming the mayor of each city, or some person appointed by him or by the council or commissioners, a moving picture censor.

When the bill came up there was a question as to how it should be determined whether or not a picture came under this classification and who was to determine the question. It was suggested that the mayor and two ministers should be a censor board in each city, but a number of ministers protested that they did not care to attend moving picture shows for any purpose and had no interest in seeing whether or not the pictures were proper. Then a committee of the mayor and one layman and one minister was suggested, but this, too, was unsatisfactory, and it was finally decided that the mayor of each incorporated city or town should be the censor unless he named another for the work.

The censor's word is law. If he says a picture is calculated to be injurious to the morals of the citizens or to offer evil suggestions to children, the pictures must be stopped. It is provided that the moving picture man may collect damages from the film exchange that sent him the pictures if his show is stopped.

Girls Make Good in Managing Sports

COLUMBIA, MO.—The girls of the Columbia high school have taken charge of the school's athletics and will run them for the remainder of the school year. They took the reins into their own hands only after the boys had made a failure, and have achieved a marked success to date.

At the beginning of the school year the boys assumed the management of the athletics, inasmuch as they did the playing on the football team. They were very enthusiastic, however, and, although a number of football games were played and in spite of the fact that the football season is usually a financial success, there was a deficit of $35 at the close of the season.

J. L. Colonius, instructor in physical culture, was disappointed with the management of the boys.

"They think too much of taking a few trips away from home in order to have a good time, and too little of where the expense money is to come from," he said.

At the beginning of the basket ball season Colonius initiated the plan which put the girls in control, and now the treasury has enough money in it to wipe up the football deficit and leave $75 on deposit. At his suggestion, a new athletic association was formed, to which girls were admitted upon payment of the "two-bits" initiation fee. Next badges were given to the members and the girls of the basket ball squad conducted an enthusiastic campaign with the result that there are as many girls in the association as there are boys.

The girls are now managing both the boys' and girls' basket ball teams and will arrange the schedule for the boys' track and baseball teams.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

IMPRISONED FOR SMUGGLING

Major Hill of the English army.

To defraud the government of the United States of its customs coming here from the old world has been the darling wish of many women ever since Americans have been able to indulge in the luxury of an ocean voyage. Miss Multimillionaire, secure in her social position, did not like to be held up on the dock and made to pay large sums for being caught trying to swindle the government. But when one is caught finally the chafes under her treatment, but society stands by her and that encourages others to follow her example.

To remove this prop from the fashionable woman the authorities have decided to jail those caught in defrauding Uncle Sam of his dues. This penalty, it is thought, will prevent reputable women from engaging in the business.

The first to suffer the imprisonment and the odium which attaches to it is Mrs. Roberts G. Hill, divorced wife of the leading military figure in a sable coat and jewelry valued at $6,000, pleading in extenuation that she was ignorant of the law. Judge Martin in New York fined her $2,000 and sentenced her to serve three days in a cell in the Tombs. It became operative when imprisonment was added to fine. She is a daughter of Morris Menges, a horseman of Brooklyn. Mrs. Hill is given to the romantic. At sixteen she married Halsey Corwin of Brooklyn, but she soon after divorced him.

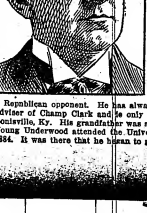
MOUNTS HIGH IN THE ARMY



April, 1906. In Cuba, 1906-07, he acted as financial advisor of the Cuban government, his services being greatly valued.

Another step in his steadily upward career has been taken by Col. Enoch H. Crowder, whose available army record is one to stimulate ambition. Gen. George W. Davis, judge advocate general of the army, was retired on account of having reached the age limit, and to the vacancy thus created Colonel Crowder has succeeded in the ordinary course of promotion, as he was the senior colonel in the judge advocate division.

Colonel Crowder is a native of Missouri, where he was born April 11, 1859, the son of John Herbert and Mary (Weller) Crowder. He graduated from the Military academy in 1881, and in 1886 he received the degree of LL. B. from the University of Missouri. Crowder served in the Philippine islands in 1898-1901. During the war between Japan and Russia he became an observer as an observer of the field maneuvers, being with the Japanese army from April, 1904, until

His grandfather was a colleague of Henry Clay in the senate. Young Underwood attended the University of Virginia, graduating in law in 1884. It was there that he began to get his Democratic ideas.

One of the figures of the Sixty-second congress will be Representative Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama, selected by the Democratic caucus to head the all-important ways and means committee. Mr. Underwood will be the Democratic floor leader, succeeding in that position Representative Sereno E. Payne of New York, and will give his name to the new tariff bill which the Democrats propose to put through.

Mr. Underwood never held an office or was a candidate for such a position until 1894. Then he ran for congress, the entire issue being the tariff, and he had a bitter fight. Speaker Crisp came into the district to help him and when the votes were counted he had won by 1,000. Since that time he has never had an opponent for the nomination. He has been elected to congress eight times, three times without

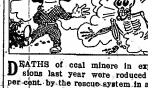
Oratory in the House Comes High

WASHINGTON.—The craze for statistics has invaded the most sacred of precincts. It has attacked, assailed, indicted and convinced the most parlous of statisticians themselves—the members of congress.

Proof, by statistics furnished right on the floor of the house, that the speeches there cost more than the total amounts of many of the items under discussion has left the entire aggregation in chronic terror that, when their most flowery orations are being speeded on their way to the morgue of the Congressional Record, some treacherous antagonist may arise; reverse his cuffs and read off evidence that the honorable gentleman's silence would be golden.



Like the famous discovery of dry farming in the west, because of the footprint of a mule, the economy of words in congress was precipitated by horseshoes.

The state department had an item of $237.66 for horseshoeing. Missouri representatives declared they were from the "show me state." The secretary of state couldn't show the shoes, which had been worn out. There was a quarter of an hour of oratory when up rose a representative from Pennsylvania. "Gentlemen," he said, "it costs $10,000 an hour to run this house, and we have already spent $2,500 worth of words trying to skin a $237 item. Let's quit."

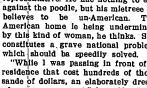
The total of the year's appropriation for the upkeep of the house was $4,567,824.18. Actual working days number 90, and the average time of a day's work is five hours. The normal 2,160 hours in 90 days would make the house expense run into $2,114.73 per hour, on a 24-hour basis. But allowing only five hours of honest work per day, the expense amounts to $10,573.65 per hour.

The salary roll of the members amounts to $2,989,050. Their mileage is $154,000. The clerks cost $598,500 for the members who are entitled to messengers, and $133,800 for clerks of committees. There are a number of minor items, among the the saintly of $1,200 that goes to the chaplain who prays for congress's wisdom. He is about the poorest paid of all, considering the size of his job.

Mine Rescue Squads Reduce Deaths

DEATHS of coal miners in explosions last year were reduced 25 per cent. by the rescue system in augurated by the federal government.

For many years the rescue work was left to the different states and was but indifferently done. As the death rate grew about ten per cent. annually, the federal government decided it was time to take charge of this work itself.



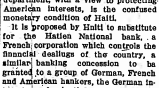
Six rescue stations have been established. One of these is at Trinidad, Colo., another at Rock Springs, Wyo., and others in various parts of the coal mining country.

These stations are old Pullman sleeping cars, in which four men spend all their time, night and day, never going further than a few minutes' walk from the car. In charge of the party is a mining engineer. The others are a practical miner, a hospital attendant capable of giving first aid to the injured and a cook. The car is equipped with rescue apparatus ready for immediate use and there are sleeping apartments for the men.

When news comes of a mine disaster an engine is attached to the car and it is rushed to the scene.

Upon arrival, the mining engineer in charge of the government rescue squad and apparatus takes charge of the affair and from the gasoline manager down to the mule driver, all obey his orders and do it on the jump. He examines rescue apparatus, equips each man with an oxygen helmet enabling him to withstand any kind of poisonous gases for two hours. Then, with his helmeted squad behind him, the mining engineer enters the mine and begins a search for dead and dying miners.

Dog in Arms Rouses a Congressman



THE idle rich woman, who fondles her poodle dog, leaving the care of her children to servants, has been delivered a stinging slap by a western representative. He has nothing to say against the poodle, but his mistress he holds to be un-American. The American home is being undermined by this kind of woman, he thinks. She constitutes a grave national problem which should be speedily solved.

"While I was passing in front of a residence that cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, an elaborately dressed woman came out," he said. "She carried in her arms a costly poodle dog, and as she stepped into her carriage two of her servants, wearing high silk hats, bowed almost to their knees. One assisted her to enter the carriage while the other draped her dress about her feet. A moment later a negro servant came out wheeling a baby carriage, and I crossed the street to find out that the baby carriage held the woman's little son. The thought of the woman holding the poodle dog, where the child should have been, while she gave the animal its morning outing, seemed inhuman to me, when I thought of the child being taken out by the servant.

"But, finally, I decided that the poodle was more to be pitied than the child. It was in worse company. But the sad part about the whole incident was that a mother could go smilingly away from her baby boy, while she cuddled and patted the insignificant little dog at her side. Poodles are all right as pets for children, and, incidentally, for older people. But there they are allowed to take the places of children in our homes, I would rather see every poodle in the nation drawn and quartered."

Protest Made at Hatien Bank Move

ANOTHER financial situation in Latin-American affairs is seriously engaging the attention of the state department, with a view to protecting American interests, in the confused monetary condition of Haiti.

It is proposed by Haiti to substitute for the Haitien National bank, a French corporation which controls the financial dealings of the country, a similar banking concession to be granted to a group of German, French and American bankers, the German interests predominating.

Some time ago the United States protested against the proposed arrangement on the ground that American interests were not properly protected. Since then the Haitien government has made some modifications in its original plan, but the changes have not been sufficient, in the opinion of the state department, to warrant the withdrawal of the American protest.

In connection with the national bank concession Haiti is trying to float a loan to fund its interior debt. The course which will be adopted in regard to Haitien bonds in this relation is of interest to the United States government because many American creditors of Haiti have been paid in bonds of that government. So if such bonds are sealed down the people who received them on the basis of their former value, in the opinion of the state department, will have grounds for a claim in equity.

The possibility of American bankers participating in the loan also causes the state department to believe that it is the moral duty of this government to scrutinize closely the transaction to see that no contract is entered into which cannot be backed up by the United States in case at some future time Haiti fails to fulfill her obligations.

HUSBANDS AS PROPERTY.

Considerable satisfaction will be felt by mankind generally at the argument advanced by a married woman in a suit involving another woman that her husband is property to a wife and a family, and to win him away is nothing short of stealing." So it is the husband and not the wife that is the "bumae chattel." The admission controverts the theory upheld throughgcs cratices of feminist protest against the sordiom imposed by man on his domestic partner through neequal marriage laws, says the New York Herald. The honest confession that the contrary is the case has been secured at last, but at a cost to feminine consistency which may be expected to bring its proper rebuke from every woman's club in the land. The fair plaintiff to secure her own ends has proved false to one of the cherished principles of her sex. But the truth is out. It is man who is the chattel, possession of whom is gained by the marriage ceremony and the right, title and leterest to whom has been established in suits for noe-support or for abadeonment during marriage as well as in alimony proceedings afterward. His status as matrimoeial property has, to be sure, loeg been a mattar of court record.

Here is high velotry and variety with a vengeance! A roomdcrs in upcome palace hotel tells of a palace revolution that double discounts a jerked-beef mutiey in Rio Janeiro, says the New York Press. He says: "The valets and maids we got here are far more difficult to deal with than their masters and mistresses. Most of them insist upon having rooms with privato baths and turn up their noses at seything elac. It bes happened at times that the servents' rooms were all occupied and we had to put a valet or a maid ieto a room with a beth, a regular guest room, charging the regular sorvent rate. The result is that every 'gentleman's gentisman' that comes here now demands a 'beth' as his ieallenable right."

The comieg generation, in our cities at least, is likely to have a more lively appreciation of the value of fresh air then the one that has preceded. Withie the past three years nearly fifty cities have established open-air schools for the benefit of tuberculous children, says the Boston Transcript. Providence began it and other municipalities have followed on, though not all have developed the idea to the same extent. Boston, for instance, might profitably carry it farther than she has. Pawtucket, R. I., not only has e fine opse-air school, but proposes to beve at least one open-air room in every school building in the city, where delicate children can receive the tonic influence which neture so bouetifully provides.

A woman surgeon is attached to the Williamsburg hospital in New York city, having been appointed because she possessed all male assistants in a competitive examieatioe. She had been an ambulance surgeon only a few hours when she had her first case, a men who had run, and the experience was aeything but agreeable, but the lady doctor was equal to the emergency and took excellent care of the patient. And she says she has learned jiu-jitsu and is not afraid of "drunks" and D. T. victims. That energetic lady appears to be abundantly able to accomplish what she wishes without going into the suffragette business.

The Nawfoundland government has refused permiasion to American fishermen to buy herring for the purpose of filleg contracts. The request was made because of a poor season which prevested the Americans from obtaining what they wanted in the waters accessible to them under the terms of Tha Hague decision. Newfoundland is within its rights in taking such a stand. Still, it is not indicative of the best or most neighborly temper, and the action seems to show that the result of the fisheries arbitration has not been accepted in the proper frame of mied.

A jury in New York, in the case of a young millionaire who had killed her husband, brought in a verdict of manslaughter only. Perhaps they felt that in the summary taking of ot partners now so fashionable in domestic circles, tha woman ought to bave soma show.

PARCELS POST DEAD

PLAN FOR AN EXPERIMENTAL TRIAL IS RULED OUT IN SENATE.

TARIFF BOARD BILL HALTED

Measure Is Temporarily Blocked by Democratic Filibuster—Four Big Supply Bills Passed—Extra Session May Convene March 20.

Washington.—A point of order raised by Senator Bailey of Texas Thursday killed the plan for an experimental parcels post. Mr. Bailey insisted that the amendment to the post office appropriation bill which authorized the postmaster general to conduct an experimental parcels post system for one year, beginning April 1, 1911, was new legislation. He pressed his point vigorously and the amendment was eliminated from the bill when Vice-President Sherman ruled that Mr. Bailey's point of order was well taken.

March 20 is the date now tentatively fixed for the assembling of the extra session. A conference to be held between now and Monday will definitely fix tha date. Thet the extra session is certain is the firm conviction of all the Republican leaders.

Representative John Dwight, Republican whip of the house, who all along has insisted that a special session would not ba necessary, bes ceptiuoted and confessed his belief that it would be unavoidable.

Following a filibuster that lasted many hours, intended to emphasize the Democratic objection to the proposed enactment of the tariff board bill, the senate behind at noeamure now they were fighting against the inavitable and withdrew it for the time being.

Immediately the consideration of appropriation bills was bagun and within twenty minutes four measures carrying an aggregate expenditure of $163,000,000 were passed.

This relieved the congestion in the senate only a trifle and did not remove a slegia one of the seags that still are in tha way of ndjournment with the entire administration program carried out.

The measures thus ecated were the pension bill, carrying $153,668,000, tha fortifications hill, the consular and diplomatic bill and tha bill for the support of the military academy.

The Bullowey sension bill, which would have added $50,000,000 to the annual appropriations, it is claimed, was offered by Senator Scott as an ameedment to the pension bill and ruled out on a point of order made by Senator Lodge.

GORE CHARGES TRUE

COMMITTEE FINDS THAT SENATOR WAS OFFERED BRIBE.

Body That Investigated Alleged Indian Lands Graft Case, Finds Improper Proposal Was Made.

Washington.—The special committee of the bousa appointed last summer to investigate Senator Gore's charges of attempted bribery in connection with J. W. McMurray's Indian attorney contracts in Oklahoma made its final report to the House.

The majority of the committee finds that Jake L. Hamon actually did, about May 5, 1910, make an improper proposal to Senator Gore respecting the McMurrey contracts; and that about June 16, 1910, he approached Representative Charles F. Creager with an improper proposal on the same subject. The committee finds no evidence, however, to show that Hemon was acting "by authority of or with the consent or knowledga of McMurrey."

On this ground the committee exonerates McMurray of any connection with an attempt improperly to influence members of the house or senate. It does find, however, that he used more then "undue influence," to secure the support of Chief Green McCurtain and his son, D. C. McCurtain, in getting tbesa contracts, by transferring a contingent interest of $35,000 in the contracts to D. C. McCurtain.

against the accused man during the months of January and February by Senators Bailey, Beveridge, Borah, Brista, Burkett, Burrows, Crawford, Cummins, Davis, Flatcher, Gallinger, Gamble, Hayburn, Johnson, Jones, Lodge, Nelson, Root and by Mr. Lorimer himself. Mr. Cullom also spoke, but was noncommittal as to his colleague. He defended himself and the state of Illinois.

Efforts were made daily by friends and foes of Mr. Lorimer to influence the votas of the senators for or against him, and during the last two weaks Mr. Cullom received an avalanche of letters and telegrams no large it was feared his health would break under it.

The Lorimer fight has been one of the most sensational in the history of the upper house. When the committee on privileges and elections reported a report declaring that no evidences of bribery having influenced the legislators in the election of Mr. Lorimer had been found, it was considered that he was amply vindicated and that his senate post was secure.

Then came the report of the subcommittee and was this outcome of an exhaustive investigation both at Washington and Chicago, in which the charges of bribery at Springfield were thoroughly gone into.

TREASURY SHOWS A SURPLUS

Month Has $58,000 Compared With January Deficiency, of $3,000,000.

Washington.—February closed with the condition of the treasury practically improved as compared with a month ago.

There was a surplus of $58,000 for the month on all accounts, against a deficiency of $3,000,000 in January. The total deficit on the fiscal year changed very little and still stands at $21,000,000, compared with $45,000,000 at a corresponding time a year ago.

The balanca in the general fund increased slightly to $85,000,000, but tha working balance dropped off about $2,000,000 and the month closed with it at $28,000,000.

Richard, aged 12, Warburton, aged 14, and Gordon, aged 10, were discussing what they would do with a million dollars.

Richard said: "I would buy e motor boat."

Werburton said: "I would spend my million for music and theater shows."

Gordon, the 10-year-old, sniffed at them derisively. "Humph!" said he, "I'd buy an automobile, and spend the rest in fines!"—Harper's Bazar.

Eve or Eva?

The first show thet littla Willia ever attended was "Uncla Tom's Cabin." When he returned home after the play pepe asked him how he liked the show. Willie said it was ewful nice.

"Now, Willia, if you will be a good boy, I will taka you to one next week," said pepe.

Little Willia and pope sat down in the orchestra circle. Willie seemed to enjoy the play very much. When they returned home Willia's mamma asked him how he liked the show? Willia replied, "It was a lot nicer than the first one I went to. Whet do you think, mommer? All the little Eves had on union suits."—Judge.

Give a Woman a Chance.

Compulsory military service for man, urges e German femala advocate of women's rights, should be offset by compulsory domestic service for women. On the theory that life in harrack and drill is the master of arms heve benefitted German manhood, she seks, why will not life in the kitchen and exercise in the parlor and pans similarly raise German womanhood?

If Germeny ever organizes a standing army of cooks it may force all Europe to follow its lead. Culinary conscription is a serious measure, but when enforced in Germony other nations might be expected to start it. There would be more reason in doing so then in following Germany's lead in militarism. There is a real need of cooks the world over than of soldiers. It is possible to get along without fighting, but not without eating.

HONEST CONFESSION
A Doctor's Talk on Food.

There are no fairer set of men on earth than the doctors, and when they find they heva been in error they are usually apt to make honest and manly admission of the fact.

A case in point is that of a practitioner, one of the good old school, who lives in Texas. He plain, unvarnished tale needs no dressing up:

"I had always had an intense prejudice, which I can now see was unwarrantable and unreasonable, against all mechly advertised foods, and never read e line of the many 'eds' of Grape-Nuts, nor tested the food till last winter.

"While in Corpus Christi for my health, and visiting my youngest son, who has four of the finest, healthiest little boys I ever saw, I ate my first dish of Grape-Nuts food for supper with my little grandsons.

"I became exceedingly fond of it, and heve eaten a package of it every week since, and find it a delicious, refreshing and strengthening food, leaving no ill effects whatever, causing no eructations of wind which I was formerly much troubled), no sense of fullness, nouse, nor distress of stomach in any way.

"There is no other food that agrees with me so well, or is as lightly or quickly digested by my stomach as this does.

"I am stronger and more active since I began the use of Grape-Nuts than I have been for 15 years, and am no longer troubled with nouses and indigestion." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, March 2.—Specific charges against George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, relating to alleged irregularities in the letting of contracts and incompetency in the construction of state ditches in upper Minnesota were made to the house investigating committee by Representative C. H. Warner of Aitkin.

It was the first meeting of the special committee made up by C. T. Knapp, C. E. Fowler, Donald Robertson, Ralph C. Crane and J. J. Horiskey. George A. Ralph, the state official under fire, and his attorney, D. A. Stuart, of Wadena, were present at the preliminary hearing.

C. H. Warner, as chairman of a subcommittee appointed by the standing house committee on drainage, presented evidence relative to state ditches numbers 86, 96, 42, 58 and 64, in Aitkin, Red Lake and Pegs counties. The charges were made that every ditch work was begun and in ons or two instances completed before the contract was let, that the ditches were not due according to specifications and that the state paid for the work before it was completed.

The house committee on corporations recommended for passage the W. I. Nolan bill giving the state the authority to regulate the rates of public service corporations.

The Minneapolis bill extending the saloon patrol limits so as to allow the sale of liquor in the dining rooms of the Hotel Radisson and Hotel Dyckman was introduced by John G. Lennon. It was referred to the committee on temperance, which is expected to report it out early next week.

Several labor bills extending the powers of the state labor department to improve the conditions in factories and among working people were introduced by the committee on labor and labor legislation. The labor department is given authority to inspect the machinery in all factories and to condemn any machine not considered safe. The department is authorized to make recommendations to the manufacturers tending to minimize the danger and is authorized to post n pieced reading: "This machine is unsafe" on all machinery which is not considered up to standard.

A new initiative and referendum bill fathered by Representatives Campbell, Spooner, W. T. Stone, J. N. Johnson, Hillman and Kelley was introduced in the house. It is the result of a conference held by the initiative and referendum advocates at which the 44 members, who had originally introduced bills, agreed on a measure which they will support. The proposed bill increases the percentages provided for in the old Campbell bill to meet the objections of the more conservative house members.

It raises the per cent of voters required to bring about the initiative from 8 per cent to 10 per cent of the total number of voters, while the requirement that 7 per cent of the voters in at least three-fifths of the counties of the state must be signers. It raises the per cent for the referendum from 5 to 7, with the same requirement as to the number of signers from each county.

St. Paul, March 4.—

The establishment of n special corps of investigators to work direct from the office of the governor that the Hennepin county, in the gathering of evidence and the investigation of all complaints presented by citizens for the purpose of being brought before the grand jury, is the object of a bill of Senator Wilson, which was introduced in the state legislature.

"I want men whom I can rely upon to investigate matters in the way I want them to and return reports direct to me," said County Attorney Robertson, who had a hand in the drnubbing of the bill. "The police department and the sheriff's office are capable of investigating some cases, but in a number of instances, the county attorney's office is in need of men capable of investigating a complaint in any class of society or business.

Tax For Bachelors Urged.

A bill providing for the taxation of bachelors over 30 years, unless they could prove they were not of "good moral character, or some other good reason against marriage existed, the proceeds to go toward the relief of needy spinsters, has been introduced in the senate.

Senate Contest Is Costly.

Legislative contests have cost the state of Minnesota something like $21,000. The three senatorial contests which were before the senate this winter are not just beginning to show a financial aspect.

Acting upon precedent, the contestants, successful and unsuccessful, are putting in bills of expense. There is no known law for the allowance of these bills, but they are allowed and then in the past. The salaries of the three senators, plus the expenses of the contest, make up the $21,000. The expense bills in detail are as follows:

John Baumstad, for defending contest filed by A. A. Stephens	$2,818.26
A. D. Stephens, for prosecuting contest against John Baumstad	2,770.45
S. J. Proshong, for defending contest instituted by Ray Farrington	2,844.50
Ray Farrington, for prosecuting contest against S. J. Proshong	1,370.49
S. D. Works, for defending contest instituted by Benjamin Taylor	2,617.66
Benjamin Taylor, for prosecuting contest against S. D. Works	1,264.61
J. J. Aluiston, for defending suit instituted by H. J. Emmel	775.00
Total	$15,451.01

St. Paul, March 6.—Bills extending the Minneapolis petrol limits to allow the sale of liquor in the dining and guest rooms of the Hotel Radison and Hotel Dyckman and extending the saloon closing hour to midnight were reported without recommendation by the tri-county committee of the house.

An effort was made to send both bills back to the house with a favorable recommendation, but it lost in each case by a vote of 11 to 11. It was finally decided to allow the bills to be placed on general orders as the fight will ho on the floor of the house, anyhow. Several members who voted for this announced that they would oppose both measures.

The Hennepin delegation met early in the day and decided that it would favor this procedure. W. I. Nolan, F. L. Palmer, and W. A. Campbell were the only members dissenting, but they agreed not to send in a minority report. When the hotel license bill was brought up, John G. Lennon moved that it be reported out without recommendation. The motion was put to a roll call without discussion. L. A. Leland, F. L. Palmer, J. A. A. Burnquist, W. A. Campbell, W. I. Nolan and W. I. Nolan vote no.

The midnight closing bill brought on the liveliest discussion. T. J. Greene moved that it be recommended to pass. Several members were absent and the motion won by a vote of 11 to 9, tha only Minneapolis members favoring it being John F. Nash and P. J. Thielen. M. J. Sullivan, W. D. Wneburn, Jr., Leanon, Campbell, Nye, Palmer, Lydiard and Nolen opposed the motion. Mr. Nolen then asked the privilege to make minority report.

New Referendum Measure.

A new initiative and referendum bill was introduced by Albert Pfaender as a substitute for the measure submitted several weeks ago. The house meda the bill a special order for next Thursday morning to be considered with the bill fathered by Representative Spooner, W. T. Stone, Campbell, Kelly, Hillman and J. N. Johnson.

Investigation is Asked.

Excessive and unnecessary expenditures of state money to the amount or nearly $100,000 in the state insurance department are charged by Commissioner of John A. Hartigan, former commissioner, covering a period of four years, is charged by Representative Campbell in a resolution which he introduced in the house, calling for a legislative investigation.

He professes to have conducted a personal examination of the books of the department and contends that the former commissioner spent money illegally in sending experts through the country examining books of insurance companies and in personel trips he made himself while attending the national convention of insurance commissioners.

"U" Plumbing Criticised.

"Fifteen plumbing houses in Minneapolis have better and more sanitary plumbing than the University of Minnesota, and the plumbing in the new university building is no better than in the old ones," declared former Plumbing Inspector Mullane, of Minneapolis, before the senate committee on public health and safety and food. He called on Senator Proshang to confirm all his statements regarding unsanitary plumbing at the university, and Senator Proshang agreed with him.

Free Rides Bill is Favored.

The senate committee of the whole, recommended for passage the Rucha bill, permitting street car companies to grant free transportation to policemen and firemen. The bill was recommended, by a vote of 31 to 24.

Senate Dodges Primary.

Senate Mooman's statewide primary bill stirred up'an lively an impromptu debate as the senate had seen this session. The bill was made a special order two weeks ago, but was sent back to the elections committee on its request. Senator Mooman at the time charged the committee with doing this in order to present a like measure of its own. Senator Heycroft has since introduced the measure which will be presented to the senate Tuesday.

CROWD SHOUTS AT HAREM SKIRT

Then the Wearer at Mount Vernon Place Halts a Taxicab.

Baltimore, Feb. 28.—A comedy woman wearing a "harem skirt" created a stir on fashionable Mount Vernon place, near the Washington monument. A crowd followed the wearer of the skirt and her escort for several blocks, when the couple hailed a taxicab and were hurried away from the shouting spectators.

BILL TO ABOLISH THE DEATH PENALTY PASSES BY VOTE OF 95 TO 19

BY THE MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

Life Imprisonment May Be Severest Sentence—Fate of Martin O'Malley Hot a Bearing on Action of Lower Body.

St. Paul, Mian. — Though his name was not mentioned, the fate of Merrin O'Malley of La Sueur county hung in the balance in the Minnesota house of representatives. By a vote of 95 to 19 the house passed the McKenzie bill abolishing capital punishment in Minnesota.

It was because of this pending bill that Governor Eberhart refused to fix the date of the execution of O'Malley who had been given the death sentence for the murder of his two step-children. Because of the governor's refusal to set the grand jury of La Sueur county had asked the legislature to investigate the governor because of his failure to act.

The fact that a human life was at stake made the debate relative to the discontinuation of legal execution in the state more pointed than it would have been otherwise.

Some Opposition Raised.

As few voices were raised in defense of the old time system but the argument was in favor of its abolishment. When the vota was finelly taken only 19 representatives went on record in favor of legal execution and the bill received 95 votes against it.

If the bill passes the senate it will leava life imprisonment as the only punishment for murder in the first degree. Some objection has been made to abolishing capital punishment, as the convicted murderer can be paroled by the state board of pardons. This objection will be allmisated by the Kenzie bill taking away from the board tha power to pardon men sent to prison for life.

CEMENT MEN ELECT OFFICERS.

Northwestern Dealers Completa Their Annual Convention.

Minneapolis. — Completing the second day of its convention, the Northwestern Cement Products association elected officers for the year as follows:

President, W. S. Kingsley, Faribault; secretary, J. C. VanDoorn, Minneapolis; treasurer, J. M. Hughes, Minneapolis; vice-presidents, H. E. Kingsby, Manitowoc, Wis.; C. H. Atkinson, Brookins, S. D.; A. G. Peterson, Hankinson, N. D.; D. L. Ball, St. Paul; C. E. Anderson, Owatonna.

When next year's convention is held, either here or in St. Paul a cement show will be a part of tha program, provided a suitable place can be secured. The proposed coliseum, if it is then completed, will probably be used; if it is not, a building large enough will be sought in St. Paul.

Papers were read by Charlee E. Sims, of Worthington, Min., on "The Manufacture of Cement Brick Tile," and by C. A. P. Turner, of Minneapolis, on "Cast Stone Work." Capt. George W. Freeman, United States engineering office, cama over from St. Paul and described the work on the 30-foot dam in the Mississippi river near Minnehaha park. W. E. Martin gave a demonstration of cement paint and told how it was made.

GROCERS AND BUTCHERS WAR.

Retail Dealers Cut Prics on Foodstuff to Consumers' Benefit.

Faribault.—The grocers and butchers of Faribault are up in arms and each other. Some time ago there arose a war on to the finish. The trouble started over the fact that the butchers have been selling that the grocers have been cutting in on their trade by handling salt pork, hams, lard, etc.

Accordingly, the butchers have all put in a line of groceries at a cut rate and will supply their customers with all kiads of canned goods, flour, and almost everything that is handled in the regular grocery stores.

The result of the war locally may be that the people here generally will be benefited by the cut prices.

Mayor Sees Things Ahead.

Minneapolis.—Mayor Haynes talked before the Architect club on the future Minneapolis. He pictured flocks of aeroplanes sailing over the city, like tha geese did in the early days, within 10 years. He said that in the plans of the Civic Commission for an entrance to Minneapona should be included a landing and starting place for air ships. W. V. Crubbs, Minneapolis representative of the Indiana Quarries company, gave a lecture on the stone cutting industry.

ANGRY BULL KILLS MAN.

Based Hoils and Trampies on Farmer —Death Relieves Suffering.

East Grand Forks. — Being struck in the back by an angry bull, after which he was rolled on, no one knows how many times, August Worden, a prominent farmer living at Ryeland, about 10 miles from here, received internal injuries from which it was impossible to recover, death relieving him at his suffering a few hours later. Conclous to the last, Worden was able to give details of the awful accident.

While walking through the pasture he was suddenly struck in the back and thrown to the ground. The beast then laid on the man, holding him prisoner under its great weight for a short while, after which it would get up and repeat the performence. Aged 60 years, Worden was unable to do anything to save himself and finally had to lie on the ground and be rolled around at will. He was finally rolled under a fence, where he lay, unable to get up or summon help from home, about 30 rods away, until his brother discovered him. He leaves a large family.

"PROHIBS" QUIT OPTIONISTS

"DRYS" IN ANNUAL BANQUET DECLARE THEY WILL GO IT ALONE.

Defeat of Option Cause in Legislature Said to Be Result of Action.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Parting of the ways of the county optionists and the members of the Minnesota Prohibition party came at the fifteenth annual banquet of the party, held in the courthouse assembly hall. The split between the adherents of county option and of statewide prohibition was forced by the failure of the county option bill at this session of the legislature, and the last tie binding the two factions of the enemies of saloons and the liquor traffic together was cut when Charles W. Smith, Los Angeles, speaking authoritatively for the executive committee of the party in Minnesota, announced to the 500 Prohibitionists in the audience that from now on the county optionists would receive no help from their party and that the two bed parted, never to be reunited in this state again.

The announcement of Mr. Hall, made after consultation with W. G. Calderwood and J. D. Engle, delegates to the national convention from Minnesota, brought great applause from his auditors. While it was received with some surprise, different members of the party declared that such action had long been contemplated by the leaders of the party.

Option Defeat Behind Decision.

The defeat of the county option bill, supported by all Prohibition members of the legislature, settled the matter definitely at the time of the roll call on the bill in the legislature, two weeks ago.

From now on the strength of the party will be concentrated on a constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of liquor. To that end over $3,500 was subscribed by members of the party. A direct fight to every county of the state will be made la the campaign to be waged in 1912. No-body from the optionists will be asked or given.

W. G. Calderwood presided at the banquet. Over 500 men and women filled the hall and scores were turned away. Rufus P. Morton, state representative, was toastmaster.

Miss Rosatte Hendrix, late president of the W. C. T. U., followed Mr. Hall with an address on "The Woman's Way," outlining the work of that branch of the anti-liquor fight. H. J. Burgstahler, University of Minnesota, spoke on "Young Men for War," and I. M. Kahnes, editor of the Starbuck Times, spoke on "The Prospect." J. H. Hector, negro prohibition lecturer and member of the G. A. R., Fort Snelling, closed the meeting with an address on "The Conclusion."

PASTOR IS TRIED FOR CONTEMPT.

Rev. S. G. Smith, St. Paul, Accused of Jury Tampering, Given Hearing.

St. Paul. — Argumenta in the contempt proceedings against Rev. Samuel G. Smith, pastor of the People's church, St. Paul, who is accused of having attempted to influence Thomas L. Wann, a member of the grand jury which brought a no indictment against Dr. Eugene Hubbell on a charge of manslaughter, took up two hours before Judge Orr Tuesday. Former Senator E. S. Durmest, counsel for Dr. Smith, contended that the affidavit charging the minister was not sufficient to constitute the charge of contempt. He held that the mistake two attorney, contended that public officials and jurors alike should be protected from being approached with a view of influence in the discharge of their duty.

Judge Orr admitted it was a question whether the charge of contempt against Dr. Smith came within the meaning of the statute and suggested that tha entire matter might ba a proper one for certification to the state supreme court to be finally disposed of. Tha case was referred to the supreme court.

SUFFERED FOR YEARS.

Kidney Trouble Caused Terrible Misery.

D. G. Taylor, 705 E. Central Ave., Wichita, Kan., says: "For years I suffered from kidney trouble and was often confined to bed. Every exercise while working the pain was so severe I was helpless and had to be carried into the house. I found no relief and was in terrible shape when I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me completely, no sign of kidney trouble having shown itself in years. I have recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to at least one hundred people."

A Woman's Letter.

Women, it is generally admitted, write better letters than men.

M. Marcel Prevost has discovered the reason for this superiority. "The obvious meaning is never that one should read into a woman's letter. There is always a veiled meaning. Woman makes use of a letter just as she employs a glance or a smile. In a way that is everything sweet, and with an eye to effect. And, after all, does a woman's hat serve to cover her head? Does a woman's parasol keep off the sun? Why, then, should a woman's letter serve to convey her real thoughts to the person addressed, just like the letters of some honest grocer, who writes, 'I send you five pounds of coffee,' because he really does send you five pounds of coffee."

It is more disgraceful to distrust than to be deceived.—Rochefoucauld.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 26 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Anyone to look at the person al property tax list published from Thief River Falls would be led to the conclusion that the county seat of Pennington county was paying a few taxes, themselves.

The Hikkok farm in Red Lake County consisting of half a section of land, and bought in 1899 by D. L. Hikkok for $850. was sold this week for $16,000. Hikkok will quit farming and dispose of all his stock and farming implements. Dairying is probably the secret of the increasing prices of farms.—Thief River Falls News.

President Taft has called a special session of congress to meet April 4th, to try to force the passage of the Canada treaty The call has a number of whereases in it, but we hope when he gets the U. S. Senate together that they will say: "Whereas we are interested in the prosperity of the American farmer we must decline to pass this law." The farmers will have their turn at the bat if old Taft is a candidate for reelection in 1912.

Look over our bargains in farms published in an other column. If you want a farm on the eleven towns we will sell you one cheaper than you can contract one. These farms was taken for speculation when this reservation was opened, and are all fine farms, but the owners have got their homes in other states and want to sell the farms they have here.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette, says it's Pennington county. The first time they practically said the same thing was last fall, when they made the announcement that the county division fight was the farmers fight. Had Red Lake Falls got into the fight at that time, instead of out of it, there would not have been any Pennington county to day. We do not blame the Gazette editor, as he undoubtly voiced the sentiment of his city, but that is the first time that we ever heard a city making a public announcement that they were not in a fight when their vital interest was at stake. This is something that we never would have mentioned if results had been different, but as the cat is dead she may as well be let out of the bag.

There are two things that will not mix anymore than water or fire. And them two are the passage of that reciprocal treaty with Canada and the running of Taft for President on the republican ticket in 1912. The farmers are not hasty in politics. But they can tell when there is a big reduction in the price of their farm products as well as the next man. When they begin to inquire for the cause, and that they are loosing from 15 to 20 cents a bushel on the price of their wheat and other raw material from their farms in proportion, and that the price of all manufactured products remain at about the same price they will begin to look for the cause and if it spells T a f t, reciprocal trade, he will have to look some where else for his vote, than to the Minnesota farmers. Wheat to come in free from Canada, and a duty of $1.00 a barrel on flour. Can you see the point Mr. farmer?

A DIFFERENT PROPOSITION.

The Nonresident that allow his seven years to run out before he tries to make final proof on his land will find that he has the other fellow to deal with instead of an over indulgent government. Suppose a contest is filed on your land besides your seven years is out, and you go and employ a lawyer to defend your rights, and he tells you that there has never been a law passed by congress granting a homestead settler over seven years to make his final proof on a homestead, We have a right to 80 acres more land on this reservation and we do not propose to let all the land go to strangers but shall try and land one 80 ourselves, for we have certainly got as good a right to it as a stranger and if a man that we get in favor as we say that we advised him to let his seven years run out, before he mode his final proof.

CONTEST NOTICE.

Department of the Interior. United States Land Office Crookston Minnesota February 10th, 1911.

A sufficient contest affidavit having been filed in this office by David Stahl contestant against homestead entry No. 430, made June 29, 1904, for S. W. ¼ Section 26 Township 153 N. Range 41 W., by Gustave L. Rehnhjelm Contestee, in which it is alleged that said entryman has wholly abandoned said tract; that he has changed his residence therefrom for more than six months last past, since making said entry; that said tract is not settled upon and cultivated by said party as required by law; said parties are hereby notified to appear, respond and offer evidence touching said allegation at 10 o'clock a. m. on March 20, 1911, before Stephen Singer, a Notary Public at Kratka, Minnesota (and that his hearing will be held at 10 o' clock a.m. on March 21, 1911, before) the Register and Receiver at the United States Land Office in Crookston, Minnesota.

The said contestant having, in a proper affidavit, filed Feb. 10, 1911, set forth facts which show that after due diligence personal service of this notice can not be made, it is hereby ordered and directed that such notice be given by due and proper publication.

J.H. SANDERS,
P. O. Box 5, Rockaway, N. J.

Few medicines are of any benefit for rheumatism, but Mr. Sanders tells plainly what Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine did for it. Composed of salicylate of soda added to one bottle of Nervine makes an excellent remedy for rheumatism, which is now known to be a blood disease and therefore subject to the influence of a medicine that acts through the nerves, as does

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Sufferers from rheumatism seldom fail to find relief in the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine, with salicylate of soda.

Judges' Wigs.

The wig is only worn by English barristers, to give them a stern, judicial appearance, and not because that it fails in this respect. The custom was instituted by a French judge in the seventeenth century when, beginning to don a marvelous wig one day, he found it gave him such a stern and dignified appearance that he decided to get one for himself and wear it at all times in court. This he did, and the result was so satisfactory from a legal point of view that not only judges, but barristers also, took up the custom. Judges in Scotch Courts wear

A Writer's Indoor Experience on a Cold Night in Bordeaux.

What beautiful sunshine we had at Bordeaux, and how nice and warm it was in the daytime! As long as the sun kept out it was lovely; but, oh, when the sun went down!

They gave me a beautiful, large, lofty room at the hotel with doors and windows all over it. After dinner I went up to it to write, and then I found that Siberia had come again. I put great logs of wood upon the fire and blew them. Then I blew all the flames inward into the chimney, but still I shivered in the huge blasts that blew through every crevice. I put on my blanket, I dragged the blankets from the bed, I felt stoves about the room and heated the Indian clubs with a heavy portmanteau by each hand, but still I felt my head beginning, and the horrors of the early morning came back again.

In this dilemma my compatriot's usual experiences stood me in good stead. His was with Gordon in the expedition of 1875-6. He took my trembling sticks and limbs plus, and with these and the blankets and the rugs he rigged up a kind of comfortable tent in front of the fire.

Shillaw in this tent in our big room was at last got warm, and my fingers were able to hold a pen.—George H. Sims in Pageant Annual.

Four Hundred Years Before Peary.

The north pole is the place of profound dignity in the world, and the people who dwell near it have a wonderful exactitude and an exceeding perceptive alert all millions of the earth. How blessed we must think the nation to be for their pre-eminent light and science which darkness unutterly by the benefit of twilight and full moons, as the learned in astrology have very well known, which people if they have the notice of their dignity by the comfortable light of the gospel, then are they blessed and first of nations most blessed. Why then do we neglect the search of this excellent discovery, against which there can be nothing said to hinder the same?—Fridtjof Nansen's Voyage (Sixteenth Century).

An Ill Fated City.

The ill-fated Sicilian city of Messina was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake in 1693 and greatly damaged by another in 1783. In 1743 the plague carried off nearly half of its inhabitants. In 1784 the city was visited by a terrible quake and tidal wave, which finished its destruction. In fact, it would be difficult to find anywhere a city with a more unfortunate history than Messina, which has been practically destroyed twenty-two times during the past 3,000 years.

WAR IN SIGHT.

Washington, March 7.—In answer to the charges that the United States is not prepared for warefare, President Taft issued orders for 20,000 troops and a fleet of war ships, one fourth of the army and a large part of the navy, to be mobilized within five days days along the Mexican border, the departments of Texas, and on the coast near Galveston, Washington D.C., March 7.—Mystery surrounds the sudden issuance of orders during the night to various army posts to mobilize both cavelry and infantry for service along the Mexican border. At least 3,500 coast artillery men have been ordered together at Galveston, Texas, and it is estimated that nearly 6,000 men in all will be rushed to the vicinity of Mexico.

The officers genneraly confess ignorance of the plans of the war department. Troops at Fort Snelling are included in the orders. —Crookston Morning Times.

The above will not be much of a surprise to the readers of daily papers, who are aware of the fact, that them Mexican greasers have been busy all winter stirring up a row, and as they are getting rather near our coast line Uncle Sam will give them a little touch of big life in the far west, that they won't forget for the next hundred years.

A Disguised Toast.

At one time the officers under Lord Howe refused to drink his health at their mess, for, though a splendid admiral, he was not popular in the navy on account of a certain sternness and want of tact with those about him. The chaplain, who was a protege of his lordship, was mortified at this and determined that the officers should drink to Lord Howe. When called upon for a toast one day he said, "Well, gentlemen, as I think of nothing better at this moment than to ask you to drink the first two words of the Third Psalm, for a Scriptural toast for once may be taken from one of my cloth." The toast was drunk. Not one of the officers indicated by look or look that he was ignorant of the words alluded to. On referring to the Bible it was found that the Third Psalm begins, "Lord, how are they increased?"

Haroun-al-Raschid to Charlemagne.

The only sovereign of the time who could compare with Charlemagne was the famous Haroun-al-Raschid who as the head of the Moslem world sent the keys of Jerusalem to the head of the Christian world, besides a striking clock, an ape and an elephant—things which impressed the imagination of those times as typifying that Charlemagne had been invested with the sovereignty of Jerusalem and the splendor of the world.—T. The Fire Bag.

Every whaler and sealer that sailed the seas in the days of wooden ships carried a fire bag. This was a tarpaulin bag about a foot long and six inches wide lined with waterproof material, with interlinings of oilcloth and thick flannel. Into this was placed the flint and tinder box for kindling fire, and the bag was then securely fastened with double laps and tied to keep its contents dry. It was the special duty of the second mate to look after the fire bag and in case of shipwreck to attack it at once to his person by means of stout straps provided for the purpose. Thus if officers and crew were cast away on some deserted shore in the desolate arctic circle the means of obtaining a fire to warm themselves by and to heat food and drink would not be wanting as long as the precious fire bag was safe.

The steam whalers and sealers of the present day still carry a fire bag stowed in the lifeboat with the bread and water, but now it is of rubber and contains half a dozen fire boxes of matches. —New York Press.

Hanged the Clavar Forger.

Of curious petitions against the death penalty being enforced one recalls the eighteenth century case of William Lyhand, who was sentenced for forging a bill for £111 on the East India House. The forgery was a work of art. No less than thirty signatures were imitated, and at the trial not one of the victims could swear that the signature was not his own. However, with the help of the paper manufacturers, Lyhand's guilt was brought home. Then came the petition of his friends. So clever a man ought never to be hanged, they pleaded. His craftsmanship should save him. It gained him a respite. He was allowed to finish a fine engraving he had begun, but nothing more. Though the engraver was a favorite of George III., that king quite failed to see how a forgery could be excused on the ground that it was a clever forgery.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE YOUNG BRIDE'S FIRST DISCOVERY

Their wedding tour had ended, and they entered their new home to settle down to what they hoped to be one long uninterrupted blissful honeymoon.

But, alas! the young bride's troubles soon began, when she tried to reduce the cost of living with cheap big can baking powders.

She soon discovered that all she got was a lot for her money, and it was not all baking powder, for the bulk of it was cheap materials which had no leavening power. Such powders will not make light, wholesome food. And because of the absence of leavening gas, it requires from two or three times as much to raise cakes or biscuits as it does of Calumet Baking Powder.

Thus, eventually, the actual cost to you, of cheap baking powders, is more than Calumet would be.

Cheap baking powders often leave the bread bleached and acid, sometimes yellow and alkaline, and often unpalatable. They are not always of uniform strength and quality.

Now the bride buys Calumet—the perfectly wholesome baking powder, moderate in price, and always uniform and reliable. Calumet keeps indefinitely, makes cooking easy, fine, and is certainly the most economical after all.

The OLD CITY of PANAMA

by WILLIAM E. W. YERBY

TOWERS OF THE OLD CHURCH AT OLD CITY OF PANAMA.

RUINS IN THE NEW CITY

National Geographic Magazine

RUINS OF THE CATHEDRAL OF OLD PANAMA.

WHITE HOUSE of PANAMA.

VIEW OF NEW CITY of PANAMA.

NO visit to the Isthmus of Panama, nor to the canal, is complete without seeing the historic ruins of the Old City of Panama. In the day and time it was as important a city of the Americas as Venice was in Europe. The ruins are located some eight miles out from the New City of Panama—but new only in name, for it was founded nearly 300 years ago—before the Pilgrim fathers set foot upon the rock-bound coasts of this continent.

The vehicle in which one will make this eight-mile journey will speed along over a fine macadamized road for a distance of five miles, and then turn abruptly across the fields—up hills and down, through hollows, over rocks and had roads for a distance of two miles, and then will come to a halt, being unable to proceed further on account of the roughness of the remainder of the way. We alighted from the carriage, trudged up a rocky eminence, went down into the valley, and then came to the beach of Panama bay. The tide was far out, leaving the white sand glistening beneath the rays of the sun that was shining from a cloudless sky. This sand was soft and yielding under foot, and made walking hard and tiresome. But on up the beach we went, and came to the old sea wall that had been built there centuries ago to keep back the waves when winds were at war with the waters. Soon the frowning walls of what once served as a Spanish prison came to view, and climbing high up over the rocky embankment we entered the old dungeon, and as we stood therein we thought of the broken hearts and sighs and cries of agony that had, in the far distant past, ascended to heaven from within this cruel enclosure—how that hope had gone out of the human heart, and death had come as sweet relief to the prisoner here in this dark and direful place—and how that the gay world had gone on outside, forgetful that he had ever lived and suffered and passed away.

Leaving this prison of the old time, we went further on up the beach and came to the ruined old castle, standing there on the seashore like some grim, silent sentry, pointing backward and whispering to one of the days that are buried in the depths of the long ago. Here the governor of all the territory had resided—a Spanish nobleman in whose veins flowed the proudest blood of old Castile. In this very place he was surrounded by his numerous courtiers and bands of soldiers with clanging arms and trumpet calls; and proud lords and lovely ladies met here in nights gone by, and to the strains of sweetest music danced the hours away. But now, all is as quiet and noiseless as the stillness of death—only the soft breezes that pass gently through the foliage of the royal palms and the evergreen trees, and the faint murmur of the distant waves of the sea disturb the deep and solemn silence.

The great stones that form the castle walls, towering many feet high, with their barren windows and frowning portholes commanding a view of the blue and restless waters as far as the eye can see, are the only tokens that man once resided here—for the ruler and his courtiers and the bands of soldiers—proud lords and lovely ladies of that far-off time, have all, all gone, and not one left to tell of their greatness and grandeur—their very names being blotted from the memory of man.

Only a short distance from the ruins of this silent old castle stands the wreck of the once beautiful cathedral, roofless and barren. Its walls are of gray sandstone firmly cemented together.

In the ancient cathedral, that was built nearly 400 years ago by hands that have long since been idle, may yet be seen the baptismal font where, in ages past, innocence was christened into religious life.

The chancel, where once stood the priest and ministered spiritual comfort to his flock, may yet be seen. All its former gaudy trappings, and the beautiful mural paintings have disappeared, and in the above where, where was once the statue of the Crucified One, only the barren stones of the temple look down upon you in mute blankness and eternal silence. Everything in and about this wrecked old cathedral speaks of departed splendor.

Yet it is still held in reverence, for to this good day the simple, childlike natives of this land of eternal summer bring their dead here, and within the enclosure of these old walls they commit their bodies to the earth and garland their graves with the flowers of the tropics. The bleak old walls throw their shadows across many of the last resting places of these natives who have laid life's burdens down and crossed over to the other side.

It was with a feeling of sadness and reluctance we left this place, so redolent of memories of a bygone time—but there were other things to see—so, with a sigh of regret, we passed out, and forever, from the portals of this once glorious cathedral and went forth into the tropical jungle. Here are to be seen the remains of the foundations of the residences and business houses of the people who once inhabited Old Panama. The friendly vegetation seems to be endeavoring to cover over and hide from the memory of the world these remaining evidences of the cruel and heartless deeds of the men of a distant age, who brought wreck and ruin to this erstwhile magnificent city.

And how came it about that this city was destroyed? Long, long ago, Sir Henry Morgan, an Englishman—the most noted buccaneer of all time—gathered together all the pirates that infested the Caribbean sea, to the number of 2,000 and sallied forth in quest of gain. First he attacked Old Providence, an island that lots abruptly out of the waters of the sea—and the place where many of the terrible West Indian hurricanes are born—and after much hard fighting conquered the people and took what they had. Thence he and his thieving band went to Porto Bello and robbed that city; and then, after they had squandered their ill-gotten gains in riotous living they went forth once more with the conquest of Old Panama in view. At the time it was a populous place, and said to have been the richest city in all the world—these riches having come from the gold fields of Peru and been stored there by the Spaniards.

And so it came to pass that Morgan and his band of bold buccaneers fought a great battle with the Spaniards who inhabited Old Panama and the surrounding country, and won the victory—though at a fearful cost. Hundreds of his men were slain, while it is recorded that 6,000 Spaniards perished on the field. After this victory Morgan and his men took possession of the city, robbed the people of all they could find, and then set fire to the houses. It is said that the conflagration lasted an entire week. Not a house was left standing—only the blackened walls of the once splendid castle and the wreck of the old cathedral remain to tell the story of the frightful havoc that was wrought by these murderous pirates of that distant day.

The old city was never rebuilt—the former inhabitants who escaped the sword of the invaders moved eight miles further down the coast and located on the spot where the populous Panama City of today is standing.

In the quiet hush of the late afternoon we left the place where once stood the rich and prosperous Old City, and as we returned to its successor, the New City of Panama, we looked back and could still see in the distance the grim old castle lifting its gray turrets skyward high above the surrounding country; and—well, it stands there today as it has stood through the centuries gone, silently testifying to the barbarous and inhuman conduct of the boldest and most daring buccaneer of all the ages.

Homely Face Her Fortune

There are lots of instances where beauty is invariably beaten to the job when freckles may defy the massage parlor grade of complexion.

How shont the commercial demand for the undecorative? It is even very great, the agents say.

The stenographer of one of the busiest managers of a large manufacturing concern in Chicago supplies at least a partial answer to these queries. She is sallow and sandy, freckled and spectacled. Each eye is watery and shows a tendency to peer in through the windows of the others soul. She's got a scrawny, neck and a stringy figure. She has bony knuckles. She goes in where she should go out, and out where she should go in.

Her employer regards her as the apple of his eye. You couldn't loosen his hold of her with a clasp knife. For a long time his attitude was a mystery to his friends, who were all enabled to become humorists through the inspiration of his stenographer. Then he proceeded to explain:

"You see," he said, "I am in business for business, and I hire my stenographer for exactly the same reasons as I hire my foreman—because I figure them both out to be thoroughly efficient. When I was younger I hired many pretty girls because I like to have 'em around. But listen to this—I've never found a pretty girl who was really efficient in a business office. They think a good deal upon the subject of themselves and only a little bit on the work.

"Every visitor who comes into the office, too, is continually rubbering and gives that stenographer a better idea of herself than ever. She's always pulling down her shirt waist or combing shont her hair or rubbing chamois skin on her nose or taking a look at herself in her little hand mirror. She counts a good deal upon her good looks to hold her Job—and very often she counts right.

"You'll take bad punctunion from a pretty girl when you would never stand it from a plain one."

"And not only that," he went on, "she not only wastes her own time but that of everybody else in the office. The boys are always peeking over the glass windows at her.

"No," concluded this man, shaking his head, "from a business point of view your pretty girl is a failure. She's a bad speller, a time waster and a disorganizer. Now, your homely girl," he went on, "is right down on to her Job. She knows that if she doesn't nurse that nothing will save her. She can't think of her face, because that's fierce. She can't think of her shape, because she hasn't got any. She does think of her spelling, because that's her only hope. So usually your homely girl is a pretty good stenographer."

INFLAMMATION AND PAIN

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Creston, Iowa.—"I was troubled for a long time with inflammation, pains in my side, sick headaches and nervousness. I had taken so many medicines that I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. A friend told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it restored me to health.

WHEN SHAW WAS SECRETARY

Statesman Preferred Lunch of Apples in His Room to Dinner in Hotel Restaurant.

Leslie M. Shaw, formerly secretary of the treasury, is in Washington for a few days visiting his old friends at the capitol and in the departments.

"Shaw," said a cabinet officer, "was one of the mysteries of the Roosevelt administration. From the time he become secretary of the treasury until he went into the banking business we were unable to decide whether he was a second Rameses Sage in the matter of personal expenditures. I ran across Shaw in a big western city, and for the sake of spending a pleasant evening together we got a suite of rooms at the same hotel.

"At lunch time I proposed that we go down to the dining room, but Mr. Shaw could not be induced. He said he thought he would eat in his room. Thereupon the secretary of the treasury opened up his traveling bag and extracted a couple of apples. He offered me one, but I declined and hastened to the restaurant.

"Cabinet officers who served with Shaw discovered that it was a regular habit with him to fill his bag with apples before starting on a journey."—Washington Times.

Reason Enough.

The Failure

By ANNIE HINRICHSEN

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

A girl rushed suddenly from a room.

"Will you come in?" she asked excitedly. "Come in and help me—quick. I don't know you—except as the man who lives across the hall—but you are perfect. You are exactly what I want and I'm in such a hurry—"

With two steps Treadway was in the room.

"Send where you are," commanded the girl. "Face this way. That's right. Chin up—the way you always carry it. Figure close. Splendid pose of a successful and healthy young business man."

She stopped behind an easel and began to sketch rapidly. Bowlderment held Treadway's tongue. He stood immovable, staring at her.

"Eyes a little to the left, please." Her voice was quiet, cool and impersonal.

"May I ask," he ventured, "if this is an inspiration?"

"No. Advertisement. Chin a little higher."

"Are you—"

"Face in repose, please."

In the line of his eyes was a curly, red-brown mass of hair, pieced, as closely as its crinkling would permit, to a small head. Whoe she tilted her head back in her abstract, impersonal scrutiny of him there came within his vision a creamy white face with dark, intense eyes, a firm, square chin and a dimpled, rosy, contradictory little mouth.

For a long time he stood motionless, his eyes on the red-brown crinkles of hair. At last he shifted his body with ostentatious weariness and drew a long, audible sigh.

The abstraction left the girl's face and genuine interest and concern flashed into it.

"Oh," she deplored, "I'm so sorry. You are wore out. I did not realize how long you had stood. Forgive me."

He relaxed his rigidity and dropped into a chair. The girl left her easel and sat down near him.

"Hey! cxplexy!" she asked with a gracious, gentle dignity. "I owe you a detailed explanation eed meey apologies. am se srried. I am neither a good nor a successful one.

She Slapped Behind the Easel.

I am, indeed, almost a failure." There was no regret nor complcint in her voice. She was stating a fact the truth of which she had accepted. "This morning I received a request from a packing house for a picture to be used as an advertisement. The subject—a young, handsome, athletic, well-dressed man, the embodiment of health and prosperity. 'I Eat Bessing's Baked Beef.' It is my first order. Can you understand what it means to me? You are e perfect type. The order meant everything to me. So—the result."

A week latsr Margaret Weston showed him a check from the packing company. "My first," she announced proudly. "Isn't it beautiful, wonderful? It isn't mere money. It is the symbol of success."

"You will draw many pictures of bear eaters and I shall have regular employment as a model. But I shall not be jealous if you draw my Aunt Melinda. She is my housekeeper and cook. She was my mother's maid and my nurse. She ought, however, to pose for you in my apartment."

The girl looked around her room. The walls and the floor were bare, the windows were uncurtained. A few plain chairs and tables, an easel and a cot were the only furnishings. The chill of its dreariness was as definite as the chill of bitter cold.

"Yes," she said slowly, "Aunt Melinda should pose in your rooms. They are warm and bright and rich and luxurious. A stately, old family relative needs such a setting. This room is too poor and barren—"

"Your room is extremely artistic. I love it. I suggested that you draw Aunt Melinda in my rooms because I like to think of your presence there. I can away nearly all the time and—"

"I won't do it," she said sharply.

"Why?" he asked, surprised.

"Not tonight." Her voice was harsh and he did not hear the tremor.

"I shall not intrude where I am unwelcome," he began stiffy.

"You are always welcome," she said wearily. "But tonight I am very tired and I must rest."

"You need a long rest. You are worn out with the struggle for your ert. You belong in a home of your own with a husband to take care of you and Aunt Melinda to take care of us both. Margeret, dear, won't you let me—"

"No."

"Mergaret the path you have chosen is bitterly hard. You may win success in your work, but you will pay a price—"

"A price I am willeg and glad to pay."

"I shan't let you."

"You can not prevent me. I care nothieg, absolutely nothing for you. Do you think," she asked with a hard, little laugh, "that I shall give up my heloved art for a man to whom I am indifferent?"

He whirled about, threw open his own door and slammed it behind him.

"Mr. Dick, I wish you'd marry that poor, little lamb across the hall."

"She won't have me, Aunt Melinda."

"You haven't looked at her for a month, and since the night you slammed the door so hard that my pans rattled ie the kitchen. You haven't looked at her and seen thet she is starveing to death."

"She is sot."

"She hasn't sold any pictures for a long time. Those heef people bought a few and then turned her down. She's worn out her shoes going around trying to sell pictures that nobody wants. She's so poor now that she is takieg le serig."

"Great heavces—no!"

"She was sewieg sad starveing the night she wouldn't let you call on her and you slammed the door. And you are eetieg good, hot victuels and speediog more."

Five minutes leter some one touched his shoulder. Margaret Weston, holdieg a letter in her hand, was standieg heside him. Her face was radiant with joy.

"I've come," she laughed, "to propose to you. Please, Dick, won't you marry me and take care of me?"

"Will I?" The words caught in his throat, but his answer blazed in his eyes. "My dearest—my own—"

"Wait a mieute; don't kiss me yet. Read this letter. The Beesley Eeksed Beef Company offers me the position of illustreior of their advertisements. Three thousand dollers e year! Isn't that glorious? She leid her heads on his shoulders and drew his hend down to hers. "Dick, I'm awfully glad to give up now and he taken care of—by you."

February Suggestions.

The average pegilist born in February is quick-tempered and is not likely to return a kiss for a blow. It is, therefore, advisable never to do with of these eave in a dark spot, where you have ample provisions for getting away neoheerred before he recovers and discovers your identity. The February-Born should marry those born in August, not because they are tempermentally better suited to each other, but for economicel reesons. It comes easier buying the family birthday presents if there is considerable interval in between the days you celebrate. If a child born in Fehruary hits a hackman born on the 17th of Merch in the back of his neck with a sleuhy snowhall at any time between January 23 and April 9 it is a sign of trouble for the child. Either mother should scold or at the rear depends entirely upon the temperamental peculiarities of the hackman.—Harper's Weekly.

English Women's Hands.

When Paris decrees the benishment of gloves wo have either to resort to the nailed fist or meekly throw down our snedes. The gloveless mode, however, is one which women in this country are still approach with diffidence. Gloves are something more to them than hand shoes, for a whole code of signals is confained in the art of glove wearing.

But there is another reason why we should not rashly strip our hands. If was a foreign observer who declared that English women did not know how to "wear their hands," and it is perfectly true that a gloveless condition still causes many women to feel all thumbs.—Lady's Pictorial.

of floor, as the channels will carry the water to the gutter easily and quickly, thus keeping the bedding perfectly dry at all times.

The floor is laid in the usual manner, with a proper slant toward the gutter. When finishing the top of the concrete, a straightedge is laid from gutter to manger and with the point of a trowel, grooves or channels are cut the entire length. These should be three inches apart and not over half an inch deep, says a writer in the Popular Mechanics. With such a depth there will be no danger that a sharp-shod animal might wrench a limh by catching the shoe-calks in the grooves when turning around. This floor will give the animals greeter comfort and save much labor in grooming them.

Cost of Feeding Calves.

Connecticut Station Bulletin No. 63 contains general information on raising calves, and reports the result cost of feeding five heifers from birth until two years old. The average cost of the feed the first year was $32.24, and for the second year $27.25. The leher, interest and other items to build make the total cost ehout $71 for the two heifers, from which should be deducted $5 for the value of the manure. The cost of the feed was raised as follows: New milk, $2 per 100 pounds; skim milk, 25 cents per 100 pounds; hay, $12; silage, $4, and grain, $20 per ton.

Feeding Heifers.

When heifers have reached an age when they will thrive without milk they should have the best hay, that the farm affords, and some form of succulent food such as ensilage or roots. Oats are the best grain food to use as a part of ration in feeding young heifers from the time they are taken from the skim-milk ration until they are to be bred. There is no other grain food superior to ground oats for developing the organs of digestion. Avoid overfeeding, as fat heifers are

Professor Munyon has just issued a most beautiful, useful and complete almanac. It contains not only all the scientific information concerning the moon's phases in all the latitudes, but has illustrated articles on how to read character by phrenology, palmistry and birthmarks. It also tells about card reading, birth stones and their meaning, and gives the interpretation of dreams. It touches beauty culture, manicuring, gives weights and measures and antidotes for poison. In fact, it is a Magazine Almanac, but you get the valuable information, but will afford much amusement for every member of the family, especially for parties and evening entertainments. Farmers and people in the rural districts will find this Almanac almost invaluable.

HEAD SOLID MASS OF HUMOR

"I think the Cuticura Remedies are the best remedies for eczema I have ever heard of," says a mother. "A child who had a rash on its head when it was real young. Doctor called it baby rash. He gave us medicine, but it did no good. In a few days the head was a solid mess; a running sore. It was red, the child cried continually. We had to hold him and watch him to keep him from scratching the sore. His suffering was dreedful. At last we remembered Cuticura Remedies. We got a dollar bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, e box of Cuticura Ointment, and a har of Cuticura Soap. We gave the Resolvent as directed, washed the head with the Cuticura Soap, and eppiied the Cuticura Ointment. We had not used half before the child's head was clear and free from eczeme, and it has never come back since. His head was healthy and he had a heeutiful head of hair. I think the Cuticura Ointment very good for the hair. It makes the hair grow and prevents falling hair." (Signed) Mrs. Francis Lund, Plain City, Ohio, Sept. 19, 1910. Send to the Potter Drug & Chem. Work and Marriage.

In the New York courts recently a girl, aged 1', on being told by her mother that she was old enough to go to work, replied: "Work, I will not; I prefer to marry." Whereupon she was married before night to a young man earning $8 per week. That is of a piece with the reasoning of another girl who, being interrogated by a friend, "Wlere are you working now, Minnie?" answered promptly, "I ain't working; I'm married."—Boston Herald.

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glycerine extract, compounded from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Red Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhea and other Intestinal Derangements, Dr. Pierce's "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

BAD TEETH VS. GOOD HEALTH

BY J. J. McCARTY, M.D.

COPYRIGHT BY PEARSON PUB. CO.

THERE are in this country eight factories devoted to the manufacture of artificial teeth. Last year the manufacturers sold over 60,000,000 of these teeth and this year they expect to sell between 75,000,000 and 80,000,000; and every one of these teeth goes to replace a natural tooth which, if given proper care and attention, should last out one's lifetime. Unclean mouths and teeth are responsible for these conditions, for it is a fact fully established that less than eight per cent. of the American people use a toothbrush or make any effort to keep their teeth and mouths clean. In order to have good health we must have sound teeth. Yet we are permitting our teeth to decay at a pace that is alarming, which, if unchecked, will lead to a nation of broken-down, dyspeptic men and women.

The first of the permanent teeth, the first molar, usually appears about the sixth year and for that reason has been designated as the "sixth year's molar." These molars are by far the most important of the permanent teeth, performing the duties of grinders of all foods that enter the mouth. From the seventh to the eighth year the incisors appear and perform the functions of dividing the food. The bicuspid teeth begin to make their appearance between the ninth and tenth year and the canine from the twelfth to the fourteenth year. Around the twelfth year the second set of permanent molars appears, followed by the third or wisdom teeth, whose appearance varies from the seventeenth to the twenty-fifth years. These teeth, assisted by the muscles of mastication which control the movements of the jaws, perform the important function of preparing our food for proper assimilation by means of the saliva of the mouth, which contains a ferment called ptyalin, that has the property of changing carbohydrate foods, such as vegetables and cereals, into starch. By a thorough mastication with this ferment the food is prepared so that when it reaches the gastric juices of the stomach digestion can be more readily advanced, and certain portions given off to supply the daily needs of our marvelous system with proper nutrition.

THE "BOLTING OF FOOD" IS ONE OF THE MOST SERIOUS CONDITIONS OF OUR MODERN LIFE

ACLASS DOING TESTED FOR INCREASED MENTAL EFFICIENCY AFTER TEETH HAVE BEEN PUT IN GRAIN

During the days when baby is wrestling with his first teeth the young mother seeks aid in such contrivances as rubber rings and pacifiers, permitting the little one to chew them ad libitum, believing that they promote nature's efforts and assist the child during the dentition period. Her good neighbors have told her all about these adjuncts to teeth cutting and the wonderful results that they have obtained through their use. The mother does not realize the fact that these contrivances are dangerous to the health and well-being of her child, often being the means of introducing some serious contagious or infectious disease of a most dangerous character. It has been found that rubber rings or pacifiers are bacteria carriers, being loaded with germs of a most virulent type. Even if cleaned and sterilized, there is another reason why they should never be used. They deform the mouth. The dental tissues of the infant are soft and yielding and the use of rings and pacifiers often distorts the mouth and gums, frequently resulting in what is known as mal-occlusion of the teeth, a condition where the upper and lower sets do not properly meet.

The sixth year molar is the most important of all teeth. It is often lost because parents frequently think that it is one of the temporary set. This error is due to the fact that it is cut while most of the first set of teeth are in the mouth. When this tooth is lost nature makes an attempt to close the space, with the result that the entire articulation is destroyed. The space thus created between the teeth is difficult to keep clean, due to the food particles being forced into these spaces. Decay is also one of the chief causes of irregularities of the other erupting teeth. It is the belief of the entire dental profession that the early loss of this tooth is responsible for more misplaced teeth and ill-shaped jaws than any other condition of the mouth.

Every mother should become familiar with the location of this important tooth. Beginning at the center in front and counting backward on either side, above and below, it is the sixth tooth cut. The mother should carefully watch for any defects found in this tooth, and if cavities are located they should be repaired at once in order that the usefulness of the tooth can be saved.

The great American habit, the "bolting of food," is one of the most serious conditions of our modern life. Dr. Osler has said that the American nation could be divided into two classes, bolters and chewers, with the bolters feeding by a large majority. Dr. H. C. Sexton of Shelbyville, Ind., at a meeting of the Indiana Dental association, delivered an interesting address in which he deplored this habit, and advised that a national movement should be organized to be known as the "chewing movement." He said: "The education of the average man, woman and child has been sadly neglected. They have not been taught to use their teeth. When we bolt our food we ignore one of the most important ferments, ptyalin, in our saliva, that has much to do in the process of digestion. But the American habit is to spit, and Americans are the greatest spitters of the world. Between meals they will spit out the invaluable saliva, then when they eat they wash down every unchewed bolus of food with copious draughts of water, coffee, or in summer iced tea. What a foolish, disgusting habit it is and more than foolish, more than disgusting, it is killing in its buriflness.

It has been stated that fully 75 per cent. of the people of this country bolt their food. This habit is mainly acquired during the early years of childhood and carried on during one's whole life.

It should be the duty of all parents to make their children eat slowly and chew their food properly. Nature has placed these teeth in their mouth for a purpose, a very valuable purpose, too, and if we neglect to properly use them we are inviting conditions that seriously threaten our health and general welfare.

Diseases of the nose and mouth have a great influence upon the dental arch of the mouth, particularly adenoid growths in the nose. If the nose is filled up with these adenoids the free passage of air along the nasal membranes becomes obstructed and results in the child becoming what is known as a "mouth breather." In this change from the normal physiological nasal breathing the dental arch is deformed and irregular teeth is the result. Many of these cases are deplorable, for it not only impairs the ability of the individual to masticate food properly, but it interferes with the voice and changes the whole facial appearance of the person. Another deplorable condition due to these nasal growths is the effect they may have on the mentality of the child. They become stupid, forgetful, inattentive and lack the power of mental concentration. This is caused by these growths obstructing the lymphatic circulation of the brain, preventing the proper supply of nutrition as essential to its development. These adenoid growths not only affect the dental arch of the mouth, but they are the frequent causes of deafness in children. Dr. W. A. Mills of Baltimore, discussing this subject at a recent meeting of Washington dentists, said, "one-half our idiots and insane in our institutions today are so as the result of deformed dental arches due to adenoids in the nose."

Is insanity in many cases due to defective teeth? That is a question that has aroused much interest in the profession due to an interesting series of experiments made by Dr. Henry S. Upson, professor of neurology in the Western Reserve Medical school, Cleveland, Ohio. He found among the insane in the asylums of Cleveland and Columbus many cases of dementia preox and melancholia, these patients all showing dental imperfection of the teeth. Taking nine of these unfortunate creatures, Dr. Upson had them operated on dentally and the results obtained were astonishing in the extreme. Six of these have fully recovered, two much improved and one showed no mental change at all.

The common cause of all our dental troubles is decay of the teeth, known technically as dental caries. It is a disease known to have existed for centuries. In the British museum is a skull of a mummy dated 2800 B. C., showing evidences of well-marked caries. Dr. L. M. Waugh of Buffalo, quoting from Guerin's "History of Dentistry," calls attention to a collection of Egyptian writings dating back to 1550 B. C., in which are mentioned a number of remedies for this disease. Decay or caries of the teeth is largely due to neglect or failure to keep the mouth and particularly the teeth properly cleansed. If food particles lodge between the teeth and are not removed they eventually ferment. During this fermentation process the mouth bacteria acting on the carbohydrate foodstuffs produce acid fermentation. These acids dissolve the lime salts of the teeth, exposing the dentine to the action of microbes which rapidly destroy the tooth structure. It is the general supposition that teeth always decay from the outside, as a matter of fact the change takes place from within outward and often rapidly until there is quite a large cavity. Frequently toothache or extreme sensitiveness to hot or cold food or drink are the first indications that decay has taken place. Sometimes there is no pain at all and a chance examination discloses the cavity in the tooth.

These tooth cavities are ideal incubators for all kinds of bacteria. Many of the pathogenic bacteria require heat and moisture for their development and the mucous mouth and teeth offer all these conditions. It is not uncommon to find the pus-producing organisms, the bacillus of diphtheria, and tuberculosis, in these tooth cavities.

The cases of mouth-sick mouths are legion; not only among children, but among adults. It is estimated that only eight per cent. of the people in this country take care of their teeth.

In a recent paper read before the Society of Medical Inspectors of New York, and commenting on the condition of children's teeth, Dr. Merritt said: "It may be said without fear of contradiction that if the teeth of the coming generation are to be saved it must be done during their school life. In the city of New York there are in this year of 1910 over 800,000 school children, a very large percentage of whom are in need of dental treatment. Few of them ever make use of a tooth brush; their mouths are filthy beyond belief, and most of them have one or more decayed teeth."

Dr. William H. Potter of Boston, at the solicitation of the school board of Brookline, Mass., recently examined the mouths of the school children in that exclusive suburb of Boston and found that 58 per cent. of the children had diseased and defective mouths and teeth.

The school inspectors of Cleveland, Ohio, examined 30,000 children last year and discovered 77 per cent. of them to have defective teeth. It has been estimated that there are over 9,000,000 children in the United States who have defective and diseased teeth and mouths with enlarged glands and 7,000,000 with defective breathing, due to adenoid growths in the nose.

Dental caries frequently originates during pregnancy and should receive immediate attention. There is an old and true saying, "A tooth for every child," but this can be avoided if the prospective mother will follow the instructions of her physician and her dentist.

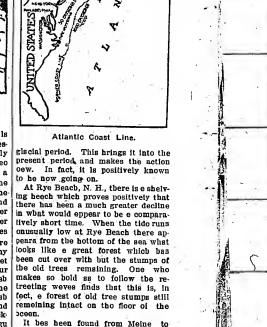
The teeth should never be neglected. It is as essential to keep them clean as it is necessary for us to eat. They should be thoroughly brushed with a medium bristle brush three times a day. Most people brush them in a very perfunctory sort of way, applying the brush horizontally. This does not remove the small particles of food between the teeth and fermentation and decay results. The proper way is to first rinse the mouth with water that has been slightly warmed. This washes away many of the food particles that adhere to the teeth. Next use the brush without any powder or paste to dislodge any food that may still remain on the teeth; then apply your powder or paste by means of the tooth brush and thoroughly use it along the teeth with the cross motion usually applied with the brush to the teeth. You must also brush upward and downward, inward and outward, then backward and forward. In this way all foreign substances are removed. In order to be sure that no particles remain even after this treatment, it is necessary to pass silk dental floss between the teeth. Very frequently if the floss becomes ragged or breaks, it is a guide to some defect existing in the tooth surfaces. In selecting a tooth paste or powder be sure to secure a product free from acid or grit.

In order to obtain a clean mouth and have good teeth and health it is necessary that you should have your dentist look over your teeth at least twice a year. You are not able to locate small cavities with your hand mirror and your dentist has every appliance for doing so. Do not think that because a tooth has decayed it cannot be saved; the roots of teeth do not decay, and the dentist, with the aid of fillings and crowns, can repair these structures and give you much comfort. Missing teeth greatly impair the proper chewing of food. It is here that the dentist can be of important service to you.

Many mothers think that it is useless to take care of baby's temporary teeth, but this is a grievous error. Their permenent teeth have begun formation up in the gums during the temporary period and are ready to make their appearance at the proper physiological time. If care is taken with the temporary set the permanent ones will appear with some regularity and be formed to produce correct occlusion. Mothers should clean the baby's teeth every day with a weak solution of boracic acid; a soft cloth dipped in this solution should be gently drawn across the teeth and gums at least twice a day. When a child reaches the age of five years it should be examined by the dentist. This is done to insure that the teeth and gums are in good condition.

OUR COASTAL CITIES

Greedy Atlantic Said to Be Slowly Engulfing Them.



Government Geologist Declares That in Time Coast Cities From Boston to New Orleans Will Be Under Water.

Boston.—The time will come when that coast line of the United States which boasts such cities as New York, Boston, Baltimore, Washington and Galveston will be 200 miles out to sea and those cities will have been submerged. The whole Atlantic coast is slowly sinking into the ocean. So replete is the sinking that evidences of it and measurements of it within the last decade are now to be had. That the rate of the sinking is being accelerated, and that it may be much faster in the future than it has been in the past is the claim made by C. A. Davis, government geologist, who has of late been piling up masses of evidence in this connection.

He holds that there is no need on the part of the residents of the coast cities to scramble to the housetops today or tomorrow. But, as sure as the geologic tendencies which have gone on unchanged for hundreds of thousands of years and are now at work continue, the people of the nation's great eastern cities will be gradually pulled beneath the water level.

Geologists have long recognized the fact that the Atlantic coast line was once much farther out than it is now. There is a line from 100 to 200 miles off the present coast of which the water suddenly gets much deeper. Out to that distance the water is generally some 300 feet deep. Then it plunges suddenly and becomes ten times as far to the ocean bottom. The men of the coast survey have found this line throughout the length of our coast line and find it similar all along. The geologists say that the continent once reached out this far and that here was the coast line. But a gradual decline through the ages has caused that line to retreat until now it is where we know it.

From a geological standpoint this has happened in comparatively recent times. It has all been done since the glacial period. This brings it into the present period and makes the action new. In fact, it is positively known to be now going on.

At Rye Beach, N. H., there is a shelving beach which proves positively that there has been a much greater decline in what would appear to be a comparatively short time. When the tide runs unusually low at Rye Beach there appears from the bottom of the sea what looks like a great forest which has been cut over with but the stumps of the old trees remaining. One who makes so bold as to follow the retreating waves finds that this is, in fact, a forest of old tree stumps still remaining intact on the floor of the ocean.

It has been found from Maine to Florida that at a level of from ten to twenty feet down there was originally the bed of a forest. Stumps of pine trees still in a reasonable state of preservation are found at these depths.

The original mouth of the Hudson river is now 200 miles out to sea. The ships follow its old channel in leaving port even now. Geologists have proven that New York cannot endure. In the ages that are to come there will be an aquatic Fourth ave. out from the coast and the port of New York will be somewhere up toward West Point. Likewise will Boston be submerged. Baltimore will disappear about the same time, and great portions of Washington, the nation's capital will have kept pace with them.

The great Mississippi is bringing down deposits to to raise its delta and counterbalance the decline. But man is fencing off these waters and preventing the overflow of the lands surrounding, and the river will gradually become a dyked stream above the housetops of the people on the farms and in cities. So low is New Orleans that it will be one of the first of the cities to sink below the sea level and be a municipality high walled against the enemy, the sea. Subsidence has already felt the encroachment of the waters and been forced to build itself a sea wall, and the decline of the land level may have played no small part in the devastation of the waters during the Galveston flood.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

VOL. X. SUNBEAM, PENNINGTON COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MARCH 17, 1911. NO. 51.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

The Bryces and Gould-Decies Wedding

WASHINGTON.—Somebody with a nose for a "scare story" precipitated the tale around Washington that as the Ambassador Bryces did not go to the Gould-Decies wedding, while the terribly swagger military attaché of the embassy, Capt. Sowerby, and his equally swagger compatriot and diplomatic colleague, Lord Eustace Percy, did, why, therefore, and consequently, there must be a sure enough "mad" ce between the Ambassador Bryces and the Decies, or the Goulds, or both.

As a matter of record, almost every time there is a big international wedding on the tapis, the head of the embassy of the country represented by the bridegroom, duty and property puts on all his ambassadorial good clothes and thus fittingly equipped with all the "atmosphere" of his high office as personal representative of his majesty-of-whatever-country, duty attends the wedding. This time the Bryces did not observe the custom, so there was a thrilling "now what" whispered all over Washington, when, after the wedding was over, the Dowager Lady Decies and her daughter, Hon. Mrs. Wilkerson, born down upon the capital for a nice little visit with the former naval attaché of the American embassy at London and Mrs. Gibbons.

When the visitors arrived they were promptly and fearfully feasted afternoon and evening—at the homes of smart society, at the country clubs, and, incidentally, over to the White House they journeyed one pleasant afternoon and drank five o'clock tea with Mrs. Taft. Next thing everybody knew the Dowager Lady Decies was dined over at the British embassy.

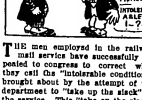
Now the story goes that the ambassador didn't go to the wedding because he isn't fond of wearing his gold-laced clothes. Mrs. Bryce, who has a naively frank sejoyment of the glamour and glitter of ambassadorial prominence and such internationally glorious international events as the Gould-Decies wedding, likes nothing better than to get properly "fixed up" and be among "those present," and she was pleased a bit when the ambassador shrugged his scholarly shoulders and, thinking how much more comfy he would be sitting at home with a nice well-thumbed book on his knee, stopped pat in Washington.

Statehood Advocates Invade Capital

WASHINGTON was invaded recently by an army of leading politicians and business men from Arizona and New Mexico, who came to urge congress to take favorable action on statehood for these territories.

It had been supposed this action could be taken by the president and statehood accomplished by proclamation, in case congress should adjourn without acting. But the statehood boomers found that Attorney General Wickersham held differently. He says the enabling act contains an alternative clause making approval by joint resolution necessary.

To the constitution submitted by New Mexico the principal objection offered came from those who wanted a state-wide prohibition article incorporated. The objection raised against the Arizona constitution has been that it contains a sweeping recall provision applying to the judiciary as every other elective office.



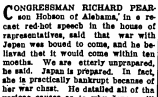
Under the Arizona constitution the people can recall the judges of any court and the provision is said to offend those who are sticklers for upholding the dignity of the judiciary.

The Arizona men say a good judge who doesn't become involved with corporation and trust microbes has nothing to fear from the recall, but that the official life of a judge who lases away from the law might be shortened by the recall provision, and it was to provide for such cases that it was made applicable to the judiciary as to all other offices.

The gist of the Arizona argument to a cordered congressmen was:

"After our recent election 80 per cent of the people voted to approve the constitution. We know what we voted. We know what Arizona needs. Why don't you let us have the constitution we made and approved? Let us attend to our own affairs—we are plenty able to do it."

Railway Mail Clerks Make a Protest



THE men employed in the railway mail service have successfully appealed to congress to correct what they call the "intolerable conditions" brought about by the attempt of the department to "take up the slack" in the service. This "take up the slack" order was issued about six months ago. The object of the order was to obtain greater uniformity in the average hours of work a day by the railway mail clerks. According to representatives made both to congress and to the postmaster-general the order has caused great demoralization in the service. In some sections of the country the railway mail clerks have threatened to quit in a body unless relief was afforded.

The controversy has hung on the question as to what shall constitute a working day in the railway mail clerks. The burden of the complaint has been that a large majority of the men on road duty were sent, prior to the issuing of the "take up the slack" order, makin the hours now required.

Official notice has now been given to the clerks that on the lines where their work is heavy continuously for six days each week, the standard of the service hours shall be considerd as six hours. It is announced also that credit for overtime will be given to clerks who do terminel work at either end of their runs, or extra work that requires them to remain on duty beyond the standard number of hours.

Hobson Again Predicts War With Japs

CONGRESSMAN RICHARD PEARson Hobson of Alabama, in a recast red-hot speech in the house of representatives, said that war with Japan was bound to come, and he believed that it would come within ten months. We are utterly unprepared, he said. Japan is prepared. In fact, she is practically bankrupt because of her war chest. He detailed all of the various causes as to why Japan will make war on us. Once the war is on, he said, the European nations will try to stop it and our moneyed men will cry for peace, but the nation in its pride will persist and the struggle will last for years and will become one simply of endurance. He argues for an increased navy as protection.

Japan and the United States will go to war in the near future. The conflict will begin in less than ten months. The war will last five years, perhaps ten. The Panama canal will be destroyed, and in the end this nation will carry the war to Japan and conquer the kingdom. These are a few of the predictions made by Representative Hobson, who used to be an officer in the navy.

"We will be struck," he declared, "and when we are—gentlemen may differ with me as to the time, but I firmly believe it can be counted in months on the fingers of my two hands—we will find ourselves practically powerless. The nations of the world will call on us to give up the war and not continue to disturb the peace of the world, just as we did with Russia in her war with Japan. Our own financiers will demand that we end an apparently hopeless struggle.

"But we will not give up. We will fight on, angered and humiliated, until it becomes a mere question of resources."

PROMINENT PEOPLE

MEXICO'S WEALTHIEST MAN

Not unlike the mighty estates of the old patrons, who used to own tremendous tracts of land around New York and whose sway was more powerful than that of the most puissant feudal baron in Europe, is that of Don. Luis Terrazas, "boss" of the state of Chihuahua, owner of more than half the land included within its wide boundaries and the richest man in Mexico. His wealth is estimated at not less than $25,000,000 gold and many estimate it much higher. Terrazas is of interest at this time, for many people are saying that he and his son-in-law, Enrique Creel, are responsible for the rebellion in Mexico.

Gen. Don Luis Terrazas has lived all his life in Chihuahua. His parents were small landowners before the invasion of Mexico by the French. When Mexico began to try for freedom from the foreign invaders Terrazas, then a young man without influence, starting with a small body of valiant followers, built up a force sufficient to drive the French out of the northern part of Mexico. Later when the French were defeated in the south and the empira overthrown with the death of Maximilian, Terrazas took charge of the portion of Mexico now comprised by the state of Chihuahua.

Later came Diaz, and Terrazas lent his aid in subduing and forming the republic, receiving his reward "to have and to hold" the state of Chihuahua. Nominally he was elected governor. Really he was made the boss of the state, and while he has not held office consecutively he has dictated the election of every one who has been chosen and mostly the mantle has fallen on the shoulders of some member of his own family. Therein lies the cause of the present rebellion.

PASTOR TO HAVE BIG CHURCH

Rev. Charles F. Aked, who talked seriously of resigning the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church—the Rockefeller church—in New York city because of the supposed failure of a pretentious building project on which he had set his heart, seems to have won his point. As a result Oldam is likely to have the greatest church on modern institutional lines in the world.

John D. Rockefeller has a plan under consideration for presenting his Fifty-fourth street home and his adjoining realty holdings as a site for the new home of the congregation. The trustees of the Fifth Avenue church have for three years been looking for a selection. Mr. Rockefeller has recently purchased a number of plots surrounding his home and it is believed that he is sounding out his holdings so that they may become available for the new church site if the trustees fail to find one more suitable.

MEMBER OF COMMERCE COURT

The successor in the interstate commerce commission of Martin Knapp, who was recently appointed to the new commerce court, is Prof. Balthasar Henry Meyer, one of the most prominent educators in the country and an authority of note on political economy and sociology.

Professor Meyer is a native of Wisconsin, a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and one University of Berlin, and has been an educator since 1884, when he taught a district school in his native state. He has been a member of the Wisconsin railway commission and the new federal railway security investigating commission and has written many important articles on railway legislation and administration and other economic subjects.

The professor also served as expert special agent for the bureau of the census and interstate commerce commission.

WOULD SAVE ROADS BIG SUM

Mr. Brandeis is a Kentuckian by birth and received his education in that country and in Europe. He has been a practicing lawyer in Boston since 1879 and has made a special study of public franchises and insurance matters. He has been active in many movements for the benefit of the public.

No man has been more in the public eye of late than Louis D. Brandeis, who not long ago declared that the railways could save $1,000,000 a day by proper and efficient management. Mr. Brandeis first came into prominence in 1903, when as the head of the Public Franchise league of Boston he was involved in the struggle over the reorganization of the Boston gas companies. Largely through his influence legislation was put through which permitted the unification of the gas companies on a unique principle. The total capitalization of the new company was made the same as that of the valuation of the securities of the consolidated companies. The price of gas was set at 90 cents a thousand feet. On that basis the company was allowed to pay seven per cent on its stock and one per cent extra for every reduction of five cents a thousand feet in the price of gas. The plan worked successfully.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Bad Influence of Cheap Candy Shops

NEW YORK.—Meeting halls, candy shops, cheap theaters, moving picture shows, dance halls and academies, and even street gangs, in their relation to child life in New York was one of the subjects set forth graphically by the child welfare exhibit, given at the Seventy-first Regiment armory. In this section there is one saloon for every 294 persons, with no playgrounds for the child.

The candy shop and its effects on the young ranks in importance in the work of the committee. In many congested districts the candy shops and stands far outnumber the saloons. In the exhibit a model of a typical candy shop, with its pool cards, dime novels and soda water, es well as its candy, was shown. Samples of candy have been purchased and analyzed by the health department.

The development of the moving picture show se a form of social entertainment was also a part of the exhibit. There are 250 of these shows in Manhattan, which reach two million people weekly, and at least a half-million children. Their undesirable features have been taken up by the committee and suggestions made as to their improvement. Low priced theaters, the vaudeville, burlesque and melodrama and the cheap music hall have been made a special study because of the number of children undersixteen that attend them; even the high priced theatere heve been investigated.

A very exhevstive study has been made of the dance places, chiefly in Manhattan. Dancing academies in Manhattan, the committee says, are teaching annually some one hundred thousand persons to dance, and of thiees 45 per cent. are under sixteen and 90 per cent. under twenty-one. Thus practically the entire population between fourteen and twenty of the clerical and working classes is taught annually. These figures become probably significent when it is known that about half of the dancing academies are rated as undesirable places for young women.

Pig's Testimony Wins Case in Court

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—Quindaro, a suburb of this city, has a justice of the peace with nerve enough to reverse his own decisions without waiting for some other court to do it for him. It was a pig case in which Justice Pfaff performed this acrobatic judicial feat. The final session of the court was held in the feed lot of Henry Shaw, plaintiff, against whom the court first decided, but he aims at the last trial after convincing testimony had been furnished by the pig itself.

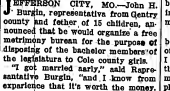
Shaw bought a small pig, supposed to be merely deed with "blind staggers," paying 25 cents for it. He cut a small hole in the fence for the pig to pass through into the adjoining cow yard and fed the little hopeful warm milk twice a day and he got well. A pan was rattled in the cow yard to summons the pig when the milk was ready. The pig soon learned the signal and responded on a run.

Last June the pig, grown large and strong, disappeared. A few weeks ago, on the farm of Mike Evans, five miles away, Shaw saw a big hog with peculiar spots on his leg that he recognized as belonging to the sick pig of last spring, and he claimed him. Evans refused to give up the pig and suit was brought. The court decided in favor of Evans.

Then Shaw asked a rehearing of the case and proposed to take the hog into his feeding lot, where there was a large number of other hogs. He proceed to go into the adjoining cow yard and rattle a tin dish. The ownership of the hog was to be decided on whether it made a dash for the hole in fence to the small one now to admit of its passing through.

At a signal from Justice Pfaff Shaw rattled the tin pan. The pig let out a couple of kicks in his tail and started for the hole in the fence on a run. The hole was barely big enough for the hog to insert his nose, but he struggled to get through and go to his old feeding place in the cow yard. There was a cheer from the crowd, even the Evans faction joining, and Justice Pfaff promptly reversed his previous ruling and awarded the pig to Shaw.

Michigan Man Is a Marvel in Figures



BATTLE CREEK, Mich.—The village of Vicksburg in the home of a man who is a "marvel in figures"—C. B. Manigold, the "lightning calculator." In instantaneous calculation he is a prodigy.

Recently he was tested by a party of gentlemen. One gave Manigold the figures 4,898 to be multiplied by 67. The answer was instantaneous, 328,166. The man gave his age as thirty-two. Manigold as quickly gave the number of seconds in his life as 995,328,000. The man laboriously reduced thirty-two years to 11,520 days and down to 995,328,000 seconds.

Suppose I were ninety-nine years old?" Almost before the man had ceased speaking. Manigold said 3, 079,286 and three ciphers. Or thirty-two years and six months old? In a second he replied 101,088 and four ciphers.

Mr. Manigold is conscious of performing these lightning calculations. He always closes his eyes when he is doing, but the answer is announced so quickly that it seems impossible for him to have done any calculating. Manigold's mind works with incredible swiftness and in one second he says that his mind can travel back over the events of a long time. When numbers are given him he can see every figure on his mental blackboard.

Would Give Away Missouri Bachelors

JEFFERSON CITY, MO.—John H. Burgin, representative from Gentry county and father of 15 children, announced that he would organize a free matrimony bureau for the purpose of disposing of the bachelor members of the legislature to Colo county girls.

"I got married early," said Representative Burgin, "and I know from experience that it's worth the money. The man who plods along without a wife ought to be arrested as an undesirable citizen. And the girl who can charm a young man and fails to wed him is not worthy of a husband.

"Now, I have made two matches, and every one turned out just as ordered. I am one of the happiest men to be found in this country, and it is just because I had brains enough to get married. I have 15 children, and am not too modest to admit that it is the best brood of its size I know of.

"Now, about this bachelor business again. If I had my way I'd make every bachelor marry. And there ought to be a way to punish those girls who toy with the affections of men. This not only takes up a fellows time, but it has a tendency to make him lose faith in women, and that is the cause of much of this terrible bachelorhood.

"I think I will soon have every bachelor in the legislature married off. I don't propose to quit work until I have put an end to the nuisance in this city. I won't charge a cent for my work. It is just a little bit of philanthropy on my part."

If it comes to pass that in Mr. Burgin's research he finds a bachelor or a set of bachelors who spurn the hand or hands of a girl or set of girls, then he proposes to take the matter up with the legislature. He wants a law taxing bachelors, whether in the legislature, or without, and will tack a clause on to the measure which shall impose a prison sentence should the imposed tax be unpaid.

A BLOW TO TIPPING.

The tipping evil has been dealt a crushing blow in the place where, above all others, it has flourished rampantly in this country. In New York, where every personal service, no matter how slight and well paid for, calls for a gratuity, the discovery has been made that the real beneficiary is not always the person the gift is intended for, but a kind of small trust which has been formed to rake in this easy money. In many places of public resort in New York, free checkrooms are provided. From the majority of those whom no screws each check boy receives a tip. A concern came to the front not long ago and contracted with the proprietors of many of these places to take charge of the check rooms. The rest was easy, says the Cleveland Leader. The boys were paid two or four dollars a week for their work, and ordered to turn in all their tips. They were provided with pocketless uniforms and were under the eye of other employes, who acted as cashiers and monitors. Each boy was expected to collect at least five dollars a day. Of course, now these checkrooms will have to go. But New York and all the rest of the country has again had its attention drawn to the fact that tipping is a European custom, born of servile conditions and entirely out of harmony with American pride, self-respect and independence.

According to figures prepared by the coroner's office, 185 homicides occurred in this city in 1910. One hundred and eight persons were shot to death and practically all the other killings were due to the leniency with which the public looks on the vicious habit of carrying concealed weapons, says the New York Tribune. It is a melancholy fact that the restrictions placed on the sale and use of deadly weapons are practically all in effect. Any purchaser with the price can arm himself with a revolver, the favorite tool of the criminal about to commit a burglary or other crime of violence, and of the paranoiac about to resent an imaginary grievance. Instead of compelling the buyer to show a license, present references of good character and otherwise establish his responsibility, the community permits him to equip himself and roam at large as a potential taker of life.

Reports from the Cooper hospital in Camden give satisfactorily gratifying results to the treatment of insanity. Within the past month, it is said, three patients who had genuine cases of lockjaw had been cured. Two of these were children and the other a man of forty-four. In the latter case the disease had reached the state where the man's jaws were locked and his whole nervous system was temporarily paralyzed, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. The treatment used is an anti-tetanic serum which is said to act very quickly and leave no harmful results. This disease is one that has baffled medical science for centuries and it is possible has been discovered one of the most insidious and most serious menaces of life has been overcome. It has been often said that medical science is not progressing with the same rapidity as its allied branch, surgery, but there seems reason for believing that experimentation will in the near future be of no such wonderful use.

ON THE JOB ONCE MORE

BALLINGER RESIGNS

SECRETARY OF INTERIOR PRESENTS RESIGNATION AND TAFT APPOINTS WALTER L. FISHER.

GIVES ILL HEALTH AS REASON

Retiring Official Bases His Request Entirely Upon His Condition and Receives Warm Praise in Letter From the President.

Washington.—Richard A. Ballinger's resignation as secretary of the interior was accepted by President Taft and Walter L. Fisher of Chicago was Tuesday appointed as his successor.

Mr. Ballinger tendered his resignation in a letter on January 19, being on the condition of his health. The president replied at once, expressing his confidence in Secretary Ballinger, his reluctance to accept his resignation, and requested the secretary to remain in office until the close of the session of congress. Immediately on the adjournment of congress Secretary Ballinger renewed his request.

Tuesday President Taft, in a letter, formally accepted the resignation and Mr. Fisher was appointed as his successor, his commission being signed immediately by the president. Mr. Fisher will take office immediately.

The correspondence between the president and the secretary is not voluminous, but displays beyond question the confidence which Mr. Taft has reposed in Mr. Ballinger throughout the long siege and the indignation with which he has viewed the attacks on the secretary's personal and official integrity.

"I have had the fullest opportunity," the president says in his letter accepting the resignation, "to know of your high standards of service to the government at the public, to know your motives, to know how you have administered your office and to know the motives of those who have assailed you.

"I do not hesitate to say that you have been the object of one of the most unscrupulous conspiracies for the defamation of character that history can show."

And in the conclusion of his letter the president declares that "every officer of my nature rebels against such hypocrisy" (referring to the attacks on Ballinger's character) "and nerves me to fight such a combination and such methods to the bitter end, lest success in this instance may form a demoralizing precedent. But personal consideration for you and yours makes me feels that I have no right to ask for a further sacrifice."

"The president goes on to declare it evident that he has been himself the ultimate object of the attack, and says that to insist on Mr. Ballinger's remaining in office "with the prospects of further efforts against you, is selfishly to impose on you more of a burden than I ought to impose."

Ninety Burned to Death.

St. Petersburg.—Ninety persons, many of them children, were burned to death and forty others injured in a fire that destroyed a moving picture theater at Bologoie Monday.

In the stampede that followed the first appearance of the flames forty or more persons were burned and crushed. Many of these are expected to die. The toll of death may reach 125.

STARTS ON LONG TRIP

ROOSEVELT TO TOUR THE SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST.

Will Participate in Many Important Events During the Next Two Months.

New York. — Former President Roosevelt left Wednesday on a two months' tour of the south and southwest. A $10,000 dinner, a reunion of the Rough Riders, a day spent in presiding over ceremonies to be held in the town of Roosevelt, Ariz., to mark the opening of the Roosevelt dam, one of the greatest engineering feats in the west, and long hunting and fishing trips in and about the Rockies are some of the things which will enliven the peregrinations of the former president.

In Birmingham he addressed a Child Labor Commission. New Orleans entertained the ex-Rough Rider with a $10,000 banquet given under the auspices of the Commercial club of Louisiana. The annual convention of "Cattle Raisers," one of the most powerful organizations in the state of Texas, was addressed by the Colonel at San Antonio. The next stop in the itinerary was Albuquerque, N. M., where the ex-Rough Rider spent two days among his old friends of the saddle. From there he went to Grand Canyon, Ariz., where a short address was delivered. Then on to Phoenix for the opening of the Roosevelt dam. In Los Angeles, Colonel Roosevelt will speak at the invitation of Governor Johnson of that state.

San Francisco, the termination of his trans-continental trip, will receive some ten days of his time. Here he will divide his time between the University of California, at Berkeley, where he will deliver the Earl lectures, six in number, and his headquarters in the city where he will receive visitors from the Pacific slope.

No definite arrangements, other than a personal promise to be present at the opening of the new Y. M. C. A. building at Reno, have been made, though it is probable that he will visit friends in Oregon and Nevada for an intermediate period, after which he will visit Seattle and Spokane. No speeches to be delivered in those states are yet announced; nor is the length of his stay. At the conclusion of his visit he will probably go to some place in Idaho, thence to Sand Point, Montana, and home through the north and middle west.

SEVEN INDICTED FOR FRAUD

Alaskan Development Company Officials Accused of Using 200 Citizens to Make Local Entries.

Detroit, Mich.—Government investigation into alleged Alaskan land frauds involving approximately 150,000 acres of land, valued at more than $50,000,000, resulted in the issuance Monday of an indictment by the local federal jury, charging seven persons with conspiracy against the United States. The defendants are Wilbur W. McAlpin, Albert H. Hoskins, George W. Ross, Robert E. Andrus, Arthur Holmes and McCurdy C. Le Beau, all of Detroit, and John M. Bushnell of Chicago. The defendants are officials of a company known as the Michigan-Alaska Development company.

U. S. WILL STOP WAR

SECRECY ABANDONED AS TO MOVEMENT OF TROOPS TO MEXICAN BORDER.

STATEMENT FROM TAFT PARTY

American Soldiers Will Stop Filibustering and Smuggling of Arms Across Frontier—Situation in Lower California Causes Anxiety.

Washington.—A correspondent, who is accompanying President Taft on his journey to Atlanta, Ga., declares in a dispatch received here Thursday night that the administration has decided to no longer hold back its reason for the sudden assembling of American troops in Texas along the Mexican border.

"The United States government proposes to see that the Mexican revolution comes to a quick end and peace be established in the republic. The dispatch asserts that all old possible for the United States government to give to Diaz will be given. Other moves in Washington take an opposite view and declare it is the intention of this government to overthrow the Diaz regime.

Conflicting reports are still being received here as to President Diaz, some asserting he is dead, others declaring him to be alive and well.

One report received declares that Mexico City is hemmed in by rebels and will be cut off from communication with the outside world March 1.

The dispatch referred to, dated Charlottesville, Va., through which place the president's train passed, follows:

"All doubt as to the purpose of the government in sending 20,000 troops to the Mexican border has at last been swept away.

"The United States has determined that the revolution in the republic to the south must end.

"The American troops have been sent to form a solid military wall along the Rio Grande to stop filibustering and to see that there is no further smuggling of arms and men across the international boundary.

"It is believed that with this source of contraband supplies cut off the insurrectionary movement which has disturbed conditions generally for nearly a year without accomplishing anything like the formation of a responsible independent government will speedily come to a close.

"President Taft, on his way to Atlanta and Augusta for a ten days' vacation, appeared well satisfied with the situation.

"There is a general belief that the rapid movement of troops into Texas and southern California will so speedily accomplish the purpose that the net results in the end will constitute a valuable lesson in quick mobilization of an effective force that will prove a revelation to the country at large, to the critics of the army in particular, and a justification for the diplomatically worded explanations that have been given out from time to time to the public.

"There no longer is reason to doubt that the sudden move on the part of the American government is the result of other unofficial representations of foreign governments regarding the situation in Mexico or the intimation that several of the European powers were sounding each other as to the possibility of making representations to the United States at an early date. At any rate, the United States has up to the culmination in such a way as to call for the quickest sort of action. The necessity was there. The little doubt in the minds of these officials that the true meaning of the 'maneuvers' soon would be known and the logical interpretation so quickly put upon the movement of the troops unquestionably disconcerted the administration officials, from President Taft down.

"There is no telling at this time how long the big army sent to the Mexican frontier will have to remain there. It will not be withdrawn until the revolution has been crushed out and until conditions in Mexico are much more stable than they now are believed to be.

"The situation in lower California is said to have caused more concern to the United States than that in any other point. It was reported that the revolutionists were exceptionally well armed and threatened to set up a government independent of either that of Diaz or of the revolutionists. So also was a filibuster aid on the part of John Hays Hammond, the special ambassador to represent President Taft at the coronation of King George V.

Iowa Rejects Oregon Plan.

TELL OF PROGRESS

SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONGRESS OPENS AT ATLANTA.

Presence of Prominent Men From All Sections of Country Adds Dignity to Gathering.

Atlanta, Ga.—The presence of President Taft, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, Secretary of War Dickinson, Woodrow Wilson, governor of New Jersey, all together with all the governors of the southern states and some of the foremost business men of the nation at the opening of the Southern Commercial congress here Wednesday added dignity to a convention whose importance to the country at large and to the south in particular will be second to none. Coming as it does just fifty years later the division of the states in civil strife, it exemplifies the great commercial unity that has sprung from the ashes of a dead revolution to bind the North and the South firmly in the bonds of mutual interest.

Three men of world-wide reputation occupied the attention of the convention with addresses of much interest. Secretary Wilson delivered a speech on agriculture in the South, George Westinghouse spoke on "Electricity in the Development of the South," and George W. Perkins addressed the convention on "Business Efficiency in Southern Progress."

During the three days o fthe convention many speeches were delivered. These discourses were headed by a speech from Senator Duncan U. Fletcher of Florida on "The Southern Renaissance." The second speech of national importance will be by Senator Money of Mississippi on "The Obligation of the Panama Canal." The third national utterance was from the lips of Former Senator Gordon of Mississippi, who brought a message "From Yesterday to Today." He was followed by Dr. Clarence J. Owens, commander-in-chief of the United Sons of Confederate Veterans, who spoke on "Today and Tomorrow." Colonel Roosevelt was the fifth speaker. President Taft made the closing remarks of the convention, taking for his topic, "A Greater Nation Through a Greater South."

TARS FACE DEATH ON TUG

Craft With Men From the Fleet Goes Ashore and the Sailors Pass Eight Hours of Terror.

Norfolk, Va. — For eight hours one hundred enlisted men on route from the American battleship fleet in Cuban waters were in momentary danger of losing their lives when the tug in which they were making two miles south of the Rip Raps, near here.

The supply ship Celtic arrived from Cuba with a big draft of men whose enlistments have expired or will expire shortly and the Texas was dispatched from the Norfolk navy yard Friday night to meet them. When the tug started back to Norfolk, despite the fact that the channel is but eight or nine feet wide, only 200 feet off the course and hit the beach.

Finally the vessel floated, but only after eight of the sailors' boats, which distress whistles were blown and rockets and revolvers fired continuously, had been launched by the tug on several occasions nearly capsized.

Brought the Tears.

An unusual incident marked a recent fire in New York. The fire started in the cellar of a five story tenement and before it was extinguished the 18 families in the building were all the occupants were crowding copiously from inflamed eyes. In the cellar many bags of onions had been stored. The chief fireman allowed the tenants to remain in the building, assuring them that the fire was confined to the cellar. They did not recover, however, when the onions had got well afire.

EDITOR BROWNE
Of The Rockford Morning Star.

"About seven years ago I ceased drinking coffee to give your Postum a trial.

"I had suffered acutely from various forms of indigestion and my stomach had become so disordered as to repel almost every sort of substantial food. My general health was bad. At close intervals I would suffer severe attacks which confined me in bed for a week or more. Soon after changing from coffee to Postum these indigestion ebbed, and in a short time ceased entirely. I have continued the daily use of your excellent Food Drink and assure you most cordially that I am indebted to you for the relief it has brought me.

"Wishing you a continued success, I am Yours very truly,
J. Stanley Browne,

Of course, when a man's health shows he can stand coffee without trouble, let him drink it, but most highly organized brain-workers simply cannot.

The drugs natural to the coffee berry affect the stomach and other organs and thence to the complex nervous system, throwing it out of balance and producing disturbances in various parts of the body. Keep up this daily poisoning and serious disease generally supervenes. Then man or woman finds that coffee is a smooth but deadly enemy and health is of any value at all, there is no alternative.

It is easy to find out if coffee be the cause of the troubles, for if left off 10 days and Postum be used in its place and the sick and diseased conditions begin to disappear, the proof is unanswerable.

Postum is not good if made by short boiling. It must be boiled full 15 minutes after boiling begins, when the crisp flavor and the food elements are brought out of the grains and the beverage is ready to fulfill its mission of palatable comfort and renewing the cells and nerve centers broken down by coffee.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

St. Paul, March 9.—The state drainage commission whose members are Governor Eberhart, Julius Schmahl, secretary of state, and S. G. Iverson, state auditor, has had only a nominal existence during the past three years according to the testimony of Mr. Iverson before the house investigating committee. George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, was really the whole thing. He appointed his assistants, fixed their salaries, made estimates, ordered ditches and let the contracts for the thousands of dollars worth of construction work done by the state in northern Minnesota. The board simply took him at his word and approved all his actions.

Election Contest Bills Up.

Election contests according to the bills which have already been received by the senate, will cost the state of Minnesota, if all the bills are allowed, $15,636.16, of which two-thirds, or $10,-890 will go for attorneys' fee.

Senator Wonne and his opponent Benjamin Taylor, may be deprived of all reimbursement, on the ground that there is no precedent to pay expenses in contests that are settled before they reach the senate. Senator Rockne, chairman, warned these claimants that their cases would be materially strengthened by finding some precedent for payment of such bills.

Senator Sangstad, in pressing his claim for reimbursement, threw the blame on his opponent, former Senator Stephens, for the size of his expenses. "Any reasonable man could tell after the recount that Stephens had no chance," he said. "It was after the recount, before the senate, that the heaviest expenses were incurred."

Senator Scholler introduced a bill providing $150,000 for a girls' gymnasium at the university.

St. Paul, March 10.—

Senator Elwell introduced a university appropriation bill making a total of $2,537,200. For the university building and chemistry building, $162,-000; chemistry building and laboratory, $105,000; new pathology building, $240,000; dormitory for women, $100,-000; biology building, $250,000; fireproofing old chemistry building, $102,-000; alteration of medical science building, $25,000; change of Millard hall to college of pharmacy, $7,000; equipment of Folwell hall, $5,000; maintenance of Elliott hospital, $150,-000; law library, $10,000; care of campus, $6,000.

Winston, millionaire employer of labor, characterized the O'Brien bill as "worse than the Mercer bill" which as deserving to be labelled on "an invitation to all who wished to end their lives to come to Minnesota, get a job and end all. In the assurance that their right to incompetence and sweetness would profit financially by their death." Mr. Winston also indulged in a general ball debate with labor representatives present.

But even while he was bitterly attacking the O'Brien bill he supported his auditors by nominating, possibly facetiously, Judge O'Brien for the next governor of Minnesota.

"Judge O'Brien is the best citizen I know and I should be glad to vote for him for governor."

Ten O'Clock Closing.

To 10 o'clock closing for saloons except in the cities of the first and second class, including Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and Winona, is provided in a bill introduced in the house by Representatives J. F. Lee and Putnam. Another bill is said to be coming providing for 8 o'clock closing.

St. Paul, March 11.—

The senate committees ground out recommendations for a good deal of important legislation.

The committee on university and university lands, Senator Elwell, of Minneapolis, chairman, recommended for passage both of the general appropriation bills bill for the university and the girls' gymnasium bill, appropriating $150,000 for a new girls' gymnasium.

Good Roads Amendment Approved.

The good roads amendment to the Minnesota state constitution, drawn by Representative R. C. Dunn, providing a one-mill tax for roads and bridges throughout the state, passed the senate by a unanimous vote.

An amendment by Senator Sageng, taking away from the state highway commission control over the disposition of the funds was adopted. It leaves with the legislature the right to name a body to exercise the money dispensing powers.

By a vote of 61 to 21 the lower house refused to investigate the state central committees of the Republican and Democrat parties of this state. Several members voting against the bill said there was no evidence of any irregularities in the handling of campaign funds.

The committee on general legislation recommended for passage the John P. Nash bill which creates a state department of weights and measures and the Power bill regulating automobile traffic.

Intoxicant is Defined.

A bill to define what constitutes an "intoxicating beverage" was introduced by Senator Rustad. It provides that any beverage containing one-half of one per cent alcohol by volume at a temperature of 60 degrees above zero Fahrenheit, shall be classed as an intoxicating beverage.

St. Paul, March 13.—Initiative and referendum on an ultra-conservative basis, the Democratic idea as set forth in the bill introduced by Senator Fleschner of New Ulm, passed the lower house of the Minnesota legislature by a vote of 63 to 59. It grants to the people the right to vote on legislation by popular ballot but contains restrictions which purport to safeguard the interests of the state against the apathy of the voters on questions of law.

It received the vote of 17 of the 24 Democratic members of the house and those opposing it explained that they did so at the request of the people of their own districts. It received the vote of all the conservative Republicans and enough of the radicals to permit its passage. Many of those who voted the redicol Campbell bill explained that although they did not favor the Fleschner measure they believed it to be better than nothing. Others pronounced it worthless. G. W. Brown, in opposing the bill, said it was a disgrace to the state of Minnesota, and that he did not propose to be held responsible for its passage. J. N. Johnson, P. N. Converse, R. L. Palmer and Rufus P. Morton, in opposing the measure, said it was not worth the paper it was written on and that it had been so complicated by emendments that they were not sure of its contents.

Campbell Bill Differed.

The Campbell bill, which was defeated Thursday, only provided petitions signed by 10 and 7 per cent of the voters to bring about the initiative and referendum. It required only a majority of the votes cast on any measure to carry it and it allowed the people to initiate a vote on constitutional amendments.

Senators Take Issue Over Bill.

Brawery interests were said to favor a bill introduced in the senate by Senator Klein, who indignantly denied the charge and stated the reasons for thinking his bill a good one.

Senator Putnam, a county optionist, was the man who brought the charge. It was a bill to give 100 people a right to incorporate a village. The present law requires at least 200. Senator Putnam charged the bill was framed to permit the saloon men of men to incorporate and establish a saloon, against the wishes of a majority of those in surrounding territory. It developed, on the spur of moment, one of the hottest fights of the session. The bill was voted on and lost, 31 to 29.

An institution to reform "tramps, vagrants and wife-deserters by humane and scientific course of teaching and instruction," was provided for in a bill introduced by Senator Boyle of Duluth. The cost of the institution is to be $100,000.

A companion bill provides that any one who "deserts his wife in need and necessitous circumstances, or his children, shall be liable to a workhouse sentence." The second bill provides for methods of teaching them to love their own wives and to return to them and to live happily ever after.

Good Roads Bill Passed.

R. C. Dunn's good roads bills as amended by the senate passed the house by a unanimous vote. They need only the signature of Governor Eberhart to become lowe. The bills contemplate state aid and supervision for the building of good roads through Minnesota. One bill authorizes a vote to be taken on a constitutional amendment which would levy an annual tax of one mill for the building of good roads. The other bill appropriates $150,300 a year for the maintenance of the state highway commission. This bill contemplates the placing of a large force of competent road engineers in the various districts to superintend all road building.

SMOKE LAW GOOD

CITY ORDINANCE PLACING LOCOMOTIVES UNDER BAN IS SUSTAINED IN DECISION.

OF THE STATE SUPREME COURT

Prohibition of Soft Coal Inside Minneapolis Limits Declared Binding—City Authorities Pleased At Finding.

St. Paul. — Minneapolis has obtained from the state supreme court what it long has waited for, a decision upholding the city in its insertion of police power in regulation of the smoke nuisance. The decision is rendered in the case of Minneapolis vs. the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad. The company was prosecuted because its engines, burning soft coal, emitted great clouds of smoke.

The railroad held the city had no right to prevent use of soft coal in its engines, nor to distinguish between locomotive and stationary engines. The decision, this morning gives the city the right to do both.

It means, according to City Attorney Fish, that the city now can proceed to frame and pass the new smoke ordinance, the regulations of which are more rigid than those in the present ordinence now upheld. The principal change in the new ordinence would lessen the burden of proving responsibility and will probably regulate the class of coal to be used in stationary engines.

"It is the best thing that has happened to the city in many months," said Mayor Haynes. "It gives us police power and right to regulate the coal used in both locomotives and stationary engines. We now will proceed with our new ordinance. Without question we can regulate the clouds of smoke that have been regularly present in Minneapolis will have disappeared for good."

Following is a syllebus of the decision:

1. The validity of a provision in a city ordinence, expressly authorized by the legislature, does not depend upon the expediency or public policy of its enactment, but upon its being within the legislative power of the state.

2. The emission of dense smoke by yard and switch engines, being caused by the use of soft coal therein, a prohibition of such use within a populous city is substantially related to and directly tends to the prevention of a nuisance—the emission of dense smoke —and is an exercise of the police power of the state within constitutional limits.

3. Where there is a substantial difference in the condition or situation of individuels or objects with reference to the subject embraced in a law, an appropriate classification based on such difference in the application of the law does not make such legislation inerties.

4. The fact that a prohibition of the use of soft coal in locomotives does not apply to stationary engines, does not make such prohibition partial legislation, there being obvious difference between the two classes of engines in respect to the tendency that burning soft coal has to cause a smoke nuisance, and other appropriate classification having been enacted by the city to prevent the emission of dense smoke by stationary plants.

"I am glad," said Smoke Inspector Allen, "the supreme court has officially end for good pleced emoke in the nuisance class and given us police power of regulation. It is excellent also that the court allows us to regulate separately for locomotive and stationary engines for the same rules can not be applied to both.

"Police regulation will also give us authority, I believe, to make the railroad companies take out a license or permit for each locomotive. This is not to gain money, as the fee would be but nominel, but to make it possible for us to fix responsibility by simply taking the number of the engine. In granting licenses the number end owner of our lesses would be taken and kept a city record which would stand in the courts. It means that our hands no longer are tied."

"The decision, the syllabus of which I have read, seems to give the city reasonable police regulation power," said City Attorney Fish. "Smoke Inspector Allen, Chairman Ziemer of the council on smoke commission and myself now can get together on the new ordinance with a knowledge of just how far we can go."

John Crosby, chairman of the citizens' anti-smoke commission, was immensely pleased in hearing of the decision. He declared a meeting of the citizens' commission would be held next week with the decision in hand the commission would work with the council in on endeavor to make every possible use of the authority confirmed by the court.

TROUT FRY FOR MINNESOTA.

3,000,000 Hatched in St. Paul, to Be Placed in Streams.

St. Paul.—There are 3,000,000 trout fry at the St. Paul hatchery, which will be placed into the streams of the state commencing this week. More fish were hatched at the St. Paul institution this winter than ever before. The springfed streams in the southern part of the state are now open and E. W. Cobb, superintendent of hatcheries, says he will be able to begin stocking the streams.

MANKATO PIONEER CALLED.

W. W. Paddock, Last "First Settler" of Blue Earth County, Dies at 83.

Mankato.—W. W. Paddock, the last surviving first settler of the city, died of heart failure.

He was born in New York, November 4, 1828. He was the only survivor of the first settlers of Mankato. Paddock went to St. Paul in 1851 and in February, 1852, joined a party there to make the first trip to the mouth of the Blue Earth river to found the present city of Mankato.

The party left St. Paul on February 15 and after eight days' travel reached the mouth of the Blue Earth on February 23, and made camp there for the night. The next day his party proceeded to build a log shack, the first white habitation erected in Mankato.

The present site of Mankato was occupied upon the arrival of the party by Little Crow and his band of Sioux Indians.

Just Misses Massacre.

The day before the great Sioux massacre began, Paddock was at the lower Sioux agency, and it was only a chance chance that he happened to be away at the time of the attack by Little Crow and his warriors. Meeting Louis De Moreau, the French pioneer who had in 1853 carried Paddock and his party from St. Paul to Mankato, at the Robinette trading post on August 17, 1852, he was induced to accompany him to New Ulm to get a load of goods.

The next morning, hearing of the terrible tragedy, Paddock induced Joseph Roberts of St. Paul, who had just reached New Ulm in advance of Paymaster Hatch with two horses to let him ride back to Mankato to warn the residents of the hostilities of the Indians.

Roberts and Paddock rode with all speed until they reached Nicollet, warning all the settlers on the way of the approaching danger. At Nicollet Roberts continued on toward Fort Snelling on the old Fort road while Paddock left them and went on foot with the first news of the awful outbreak.

When Paddock reached Mankato the sun was just setting and the residents were sitting in front of their homes with the news of the fate of New Ulm which had occurred that day at New Ulm.

Was Good Horseman.

Immediately upon learning of the attack on New Ulm the village bell of Mankato was rung and the men in once gathered and formed a company to go to the relief of the beleaguered village.

Paddock was an excellent horseman and subsequent to the outbreak of the Indian war served as mail dispatcher between army officers stationed at Mankato and New Ulm. "For a number of years he was engaged in various mechanicol occupetions and also held many public offices in this city and Blue Earth county, both of which he had retired from active life. His was a lifelong friend of L. A. Larpenteur of St. Paul.

NEW DITCH CONTRACT.

Improvement Work in Beltrami and Marshall Counties.

Thief River Falls.—Last week the county auditors of the counties of Beltrami and Marshall entered into a contract for the construction of Judicial Ditch No. 12 in these counties to the Northwestern Construction company of this city at 13 cents per cubic yard.

This ditch has some 826,427 cubic yards to be excavated and the contract will amount to the sum of $87,600, approximately. The dirt, when excavated will be used to be leveled into a boulevard, and the company will receive $120 a mile for the work. The ditch is about sixty miles of splendid highway through this system, and all of it lies just north of the present Red Lake Falls-Thief River Falls road.

The easter portion in in Beltrami county and in the wooded portion of the state. The fact that it is a judicial ditch and under the absolute control and direction of Judge Grindel guaranteee the completion of the job according to specifications every particuler. Forty per cent of the digging must be completed this year and the remainder not later than the following season.

These great drainage projects are bringing into the state a great deal of prairie and semi-wooded lands, which are the very best kinds for the ordinary settler, and the latter is a pioneer merketa, and with the splendid highways, which are a part of every ditch proposition, the settler is assured transportation facilities and access to reach his postoffice, church and school.

Teems are busy day and night hauling supplies from the spur, and the roads are all theese great ditch digging territories. The roads leading northeest from Thief River Falls are lined with heavy teeme ell hoeling in the same direction. As soon se the break-up comes in the spring, the big camp tractors are through getting in supplies until the following fall when the frost comes.

Mr. Hoffman will give prominence to the compensetion bill, Child Labor bill, occupational diseases, including the anti-tuberculosis bill, and all bills dealing with the exploitation of immigrants and illiterates.

RIVER BOATS TO START EARLY

STEAMER PURCHASE TO BE IN COMMISSION EARLY IN MAY.

Statement Made That Packets Hitherto Have Been Run for Benefit of Railroads.

Wisconsin—Captain William McCreary, owner and pilot of the steamer Purchase, which is kept in the excursion business out of St. Paul, predicts a good stage of water on the upper river this season and a busy summer. He returned from St. Paul, where he booked a large number of excursion dates for the next season.

McCreary declares he will take his boat from winter quarters at Fountain City early in May. It has undergone extensive improvements, and will be one of the finest small excursion crafts on the upper Mississippi when it resumes the trade at St. Paul this year.

McCreney, who is one of the oldest pilots on the river, hells with delight the announcement that the steamboat interests have come into possession of the Diemond Jo boats. He says it means packet service all season instead of only for a short period in order to keep other boats out of the field.

Says Railroads Controlled.

It is the belief of many rivermen that the sale of the Jo boats was prompted by the announcement that Captain Their would put into service on the upper river, between Davenport and St. Paul, the magnificent steamer Morning Star. During the past few years, they say, the Diemond Jo company rent their boats to the best interests of the railway companies along the river. The cry of low water end inability to run furnished an excuse to pull the boats off.

Several of the oldest men in this section say the big packets could have run earlier and have their best trip last year. They hold the river business is a nutshell, if he declared, end prevented competition. This year Captain Bleir realized the situation and proposed investing the Diemond Jo upper river field. The result will the sols of the Diemond Jo boats and live competition for business will keep the boats in running until octuel adverse conditions compel them to tie up.

The time of the fast river boat has passed into discard, and experience has taught that speedy packets, edhering closely to schedule, are money losing propositions, according to McCreary. The steamers must operate slowly and be prepered to welt et various docks for passengers and freight if they are to realize well on the investment.

WILD DUCKS FOR DECOYS.

County Official Has Two Which Provide Abundant Game.

Fergus Falls.— Judge Middlecroft of Duluth presented J. T. Kidder, clerk of court of this county, with two wild ducks. Ducks are alive and tame as the temest domester fowl. Judge Middlecroft does considerable hunting in this county each fall, and Kidder hunted with him at Otter Tail lake last autumn, the ducks being used as decoys. A steel cage was built and a hole punched in it wes fastened around their feet, and to this was attached twenty feet of line. Every now ever, wild ducks appeared the decoys would begin calling and would fly up to the length of the line, thus attracting the attention of the wild birds. They seemed to heve wonderful eyesight and would detect the oncoming flocks of ducks long before the hunters could see them, and their calls brought down a abundance of game. They are the most effective decoys that hunters here have ever seen, and Kidder is very much pleesed to receive them.

W. W. MAYO IS LAID TO REST.

Simple Services Mark Burial of Venerable Rochester Physician.

Rocheeter. — The funerel of the late Dr. W. W. Mayo wes held from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. D. M. Berkmen, Rev. F. W. Fowler, of the Episcopal church officiating. The services were simple and attended by the immediate friends of the family end older residents of the city.

The casket was open to the public from 3 o'clock end remained open for visitors celled at the home. Flege in the city were at half meet and all business was suspended during the hour of the funerel.

Minneapolis.—The Bijou announces for a week commencing with Sunday Matinee, March 19, the first production of Chas. A. Selton's The Cot and The Fiddle, e musicel extravegsnce of great popularity, e beautiful chorus, twenty pege hits, and, in all an attraction that should be a big "go" at this popular theatre.

Elevator is Burned.

Mankato.—An elevator owned by Byrnee Bros. of Wells, was burned, as a result of a gasoline explosion. Manager S. H. Grannis started a fire under the cylinder of the gasoline engine, and, after warming up the engine, thought he had put out the fire. He then poured gasoline into the engine, but five coals caused an explosion. Mr. Grannis' clothing was set on fire, and he was slightly burned. When he ran out with his clothing blazing, workmen buried him in a sand pile and saved his life.

RAILROAD MAN WRITES REMARKABLE LETTER

In 1903 and 1904, I was a terrible sufferer for about five months with kidney and bladder trouble. I could not sleep nights and was obliged to get up ten or fifteen times to urinate. I passed mucus and blood continually. One day said I' was going into consumption and gave me up to die. Had two other doctors but received no help from either of them and am sure I would have been in my grave had I not seen your advertisement in the "Daily Eagle Star." After taking several bottles of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root I was entirely cured.

In the last two years I have been a railroad fireman and have passed two examinations for my kidneys necessary, so that I know that my kidneys are in excellent condition now as a result of your great preparation, Swamp-Root.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE KENSLER.
1422 Mary St.
Marinette, Wis.

Personally appeared before me this 28th of September, 1909, George Kensler, who subscribed the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

FAMILY PRIDE.

Daughter—Work—And how are we getting on with our studies, Ernestine? Heve you been promoted to the flyclass yet?

Little Miss Quecker—Oh, no, professor. Mother has decided that I shall not take that course. She says anybody can fly—but only the best families take to water naturelly.

WOULD LIE AWAKE ALL NIGHT WITH ITCHING ECZEMA

"Ever since I can remember I was a terrible sufferer of eczema and other irritating skin diseases. I would lie awake all night, as my suffering was intolerable. A scaly humor settled on my back, and being but a child, I naturally scratched it out. It was a burning, itching sensation, and utterly intolerable, in fact, it was so that I could not possibly rest or shut it. It did not take long before it spread to my shoulders and arms, and in a few almost every inch a square of raw flesh on account of my scratching to get relief. Such a condition thet my hands were tied.

"A number of physicians were called, but it seemed beyond their medicel power and knowledge to cure me. Having tried numerous treatments and receiving no good or benefit from them, I had given myself to the mercy of my dreadful melody, but I thought I would try the Cuticure Treatment as a lest resort. Words cennot express my gratitude to the one who created 'The Cuticure Miracles,' as I have named them, for now I feel as if I never suffered from even a simple. My dreams are haunted by Cuticure Soap and Ointment, and I shell never cease prolsing the wonderful merits they contain. I will never be without them, in fact, I can almost dere my skin diseese to attack me so that I can see it disappear like needles in the house. I hope that thle letter will give other sufferers en idee of how I suffered, and also hope that they will not poss the 'Cuticure Life Saving Station.'" (Signed) C. Louis Green, 922 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pe., Aug. 29, 1910.

TAFT THE TRUSTS TOOL,

The Minnesota farmers and consumers have a staunch opponent in that Taft reciprocity agreement, in our Senator Clapp. He has written a letter to the Duluth council giving reasons for opposing the bill in which he says: "This bill enables the meat trust to bring cattle into this country and sell the beef from the vantage ground of a protective tariff."

"It reduces the duty of raw material, subjects the producer to competition and does the consumer no good.

I could not vote for the pending bill unless it is amended so as to recognize the rights of the American consumer. More than that, I think it ought to be dismissed. I do not think we should rush a far reaching tariff bill like this through congress without discussion. If it should reveal the strength of the bill, well and good, if it should reveal its weakness, so much more need for discussion."

If this bill is defeated it will be through the efforts of men like Senator Clapp who are loyal to the interests of the common people. The bill is gotten up by the trusts and president Taft is simply acting as their tool to try to pull it through congress. There has never been a measure before congress that has stirred up the people so much as this treaty, and yet we have a republican president that is trying to rush it through without giving congress any opportunity to discuss it. Who in bi-appointed old nussy cat Taft for great czar of this United States? A man who betrays the interests of the American farmer into the hands of the meat trust, and the Millers Associations. But we hope that there will be enough loyal American senators to head Taft and prevent him from creating a stampeed of the American farmers to Canada. So far as Taft is concerned, "he has shot his wad", and is surveying his last term as president, for if the trusts get power enough to nominate him the people will put him out of business at the ballot box.

The Department of the Interior has announced that all vacant lands on the eleven townships will be opened for settlement on April 15th, and for the fileing of homestead entries on May 15th, 1911. There is some fairly good land left that will make homes after it is drained

The Prohibitionist have deserted the county optionists, which would lead one to the conclusion that they have as much sense as a wharf rat that always deserts a sinking ship. Now that they are safe on shore they had better stay there for that county option craft has been scuttled, and will soon sink, to rise no more.

Pennington county will receive $1,883 as their share of the income from the state school funds at the spring allotment, according to the figures verified to the state auditor by O. J. Schultz, state superintendents of public instruction. There are four counties in this corner of the state that receive a smaller amount than this county, and as the money is apportioned on the basis of $1.00 for each pupil in the state Pennington is not the least if it is the youngest county in the state.

Willing to Be Martyrs.

Some years ago a French tradesman noted that his wheel to be pulled used instead of a refurbisher who had been condemned to death. Of course the guillotine declined to do as he wished, but his went away vowing that he would give his life for some one else later on.

A Russian peasant who was noted for his jokes jokily offered to be shot in order to start a revolutionary fire was awaiting the carrying out of the death penalty. This, he said, was not done out of any sympathy for the accused, but merely to show his disapproval of the principle of taking lives of criminals.

Probably the most extraordinary case on record was that of a Quebec citizen who passed himself off as a murderer for whom the police were searching. When the matter was investigated it was found that the self-accused man had nothing, whatever to do with the crime. "No," he said, "you're right. I'm not the murderer—but my wife tells me such a miserable life at home that I thought I would escape from matrimonial wretchedness by getting the government to hang me." — Pearson's.

"I had been given up to die by three of our best doctors,

I could not stand it to lie on my feet and I was so swelled in the abdomen I could hardly breathe.

But thanks to Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine I am able to be about the streets, a walking advertisement of the curative qualities of your remedies, although I am 70 years old."

JOHN R. COCHRAN,
Lewistown, Ill.

Better than any statement we could make regarding the value of Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy are these words of Mr. Cochran. He speaks from experience, the highest possible source of knowledge. If you have any of the signs of a weak heart, such as pain in the left shoulder or arm, fainting and hungry spells, shortness of breath, smothering spells, fluttering or palpitation of the heart, you need which for over twenty years has been recognized as the best preparation of its kind to be had.

Joy For Johnny.

Johnny's mother was telling Johnny stories from Bible history. And Johnny for a long time was very silent. At last he sighed and looked up quesitioningly into his mother's face.

"When I get to heaven shall I know every one?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," answered his mother. "Napoleon, and Samuel, and George Washington, and Solomon and—and David?" persisted Johnny.

"Certainly, dear!"

"Well, then, mother, if I'm very good—if I'm ever so good and ask him ever so nicely, do you think that David will let me have a few struggles—just once?"—Philadelphia Times.

A Famous Parlor Maid.

Sydney Smith, the famous author and wit, in describing his early married life to a Yorkshire parsonage told how he made a butter out of a village girl:

"A mannerwort was too expensive, so I cought on a little golden girl made like a milestone, christened her Bunch, put a napkin in her hand and made her my butler. The girls taught her to read, Mrs. Sydney to wait, and I undertook her morals. Bunch became the best butler in the county."

But Bunch was not merely butler—she was valet too. A visitor thus describes her:

"Coming down one morning, I found Bunch pacing up and down the passage before her master's door in a state of great perturbation.

"'What is the matter, Bunch?'

"'Oh, ma'am, I can't get no peace of mind till I've got master shaved, and he's so late this morning!'

"This feeling master shaved consisted in making ready for him with a large pattent's brush a thick lather in a huge wooden bowl as like as Mr. Hetherington's helmet, which she always considered as the most important avocation of the morning."

When the Danes Were Skilled.

In the year 1000 the Danes used to boil up the mouths of the English rivers to pillage the churches. When they were about to leave they cut off and their skins nailed to the door of the church they attacked, in course of time all the exposed corpses would rot off, but that covered by the nail would be protected, and thus bear for ages to the reign of the ancient Englishmen. In the London College of Surgeons may be seen three specimens of human skin bearing beards such as this: "Portion of human skin said to be that of a Dane from the door of a church at Hadelscli, in Norway." A second specimen is from Croyland, in Essex, and a third from the north door of Worcester cathedral. Such fragments of sacrilegious beards have been found on doors in Westminster abbey.

The north pole is the place of greatest dignity in the world; and the people who dwell near it "have a wonderful excellency and an exceeding prerogative above all nations of the earth." How blessed we may think this letter to be, for they are in perpetual light and never know what darkness meaneth, by the benefit of twilight and full moons, as the learned in astronomy do very well know, which perhaps, if they have notice of their eternity by the comfortable light of the prophet, then are they blessed and all of nations most blessed. Why then do we neglect the search of this excellent discovery, against which there can be nothing said to hinder the same?—From Hakluyt's Voyage (Elizabethan Century).

An Ill Fated City.

The ill fated Sicilian city of Messina was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake in 1693 and greatly damaged by another in 1783. In 1848 the plague carried off nearly half of its inhabitants. In 1864 the city was visited by a terrible cholera and total ruin, which finished its destruction. In fact, it would be difficult to find anywhere a city with a more unbroken history than Messina, which has been practically destroyed twenty-two times during the past 3,000 years.

Death.

Death, the dry polpint, spares neither the rose nor the thistle, nor does he forget the solitary blade of grass in his distant waste. He destroys thoroughly and unceasingly. Every where we look we see how he crushes in dust plants and beasts, men and their works. Even the Egyptian pyramids, that would seem to defy him, are trophies of his power, monuments of decay, graves of primeval kings.—Heinrich Heine.

Scottish Names.

No country has experienced the difficulty arising from the commonness of one surname in a greater degree than by than Scotland. With a whole vicinity-side populated by Cunninghams, Frasers or Gordons, some more distinguishing nomenclature had to be found. And no doubt that was the chief reason why at the time they were always known by the name of their estate or farm. Deep Stanley resemblance of old rendered it far less always know as Boggs. His real name was really Anderson, but he had once owned a wretched farm called Boggendreep, and he was Boggy to the day of his death.

A West Philadelphia man who was severely injured some months ago when his horse took fright at an automobile and bolted, upsetting the carriage, has only recently been released from the hospital. He is well now and in the best of spirits notwithstanding the fact that several operations were necessary in order to save his life.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY PIONEERING

BY GEORGE SHERMAN

COPYRIGHT BY FIELD AND STREAM

THE creative genius and the constructive ability of Robinson Crusoe, as portrayed by the vivid imagination of Defoe, have been paralleled in the real life of the pioneer, even during this final period of frontier reclamation. It is satisfying to undertake to verify the proverbial ingenuity of our forefathers in a story that tells of what is being done in this very day by a few industrious homesteaders in Uncle Sam's remaining wilderness. "Fifty miles off the railroad," in either direction, describes but a few isolated spots that may be pointed to on a very modern map of the United States. One of these is in Arkansas, among those extremely southern rugged spurs of the Ozark mountains. It is of the very little territory yet remaining to be taken up under the homestead laws. Its boundary is Hot Springs to the east, Mona to the west, Guda to the south and Weldron to the north. In the heart of this territory, in a jumble of the Brushy Range, you may still build a house and boast of your isolation, for, indeed, it is possible to reside from eight to ten miles distant from your nearest neighbor. If you should so choose to settle, among a group of steep-and-downs, quite removed from a wagon road, a little nearer to a trail, and yet a greater and laborious overland distance from a sawmill, it is obvious that you will have to depend, to a great degree, upon your own resources and upon your ability to create with your own hands from those things which nature has provided in a well-wooded country.

Imagine yourself placed in one of these valleys or upon one of these foothills, with no greater amount of hegggage, tools and provisions than could be conveyed over a country of this character with a yoke of oxen. Then, to be commanded, "Hero is the forest and all it contains; go, prepare for yourself your future abode."

This is a story of home making under such conditions. The purpose of the work is illustrated and in its completion no other than the raw materials of the forest entered into the structure or its furnishings, save a small amount of hardware and incidentals forming a portion of the initial supplies brought in as a settler's outfit. Two young men, homesteaders, both city bred, completed the entire work, unassisted.

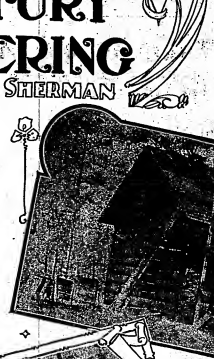
Of the tools used the double-bitted ax performed the greater portion of the heavy work. It followed in the wake of the cross-cut saw after the felling of the trees, and, from then on was the chief implement of construction. With it every duty of preparing the logs for raising them into their positions in the building was most adequately performed. First it scared the logs lengthwise, on two opposite sides, ready for wedging and splitting into semicircular halves. Then it followed as the tool for hewing the flat surfaces of the half-logs, which, completed, formed the smooth inside walls of the dwelling. After each log had been raised into position came the task of "notching down," which required even more skill in the use of an ax. Those few of the native inhabitants of the forest who are most proficient in making the dovetailed notches which are necessary in completing a perfect set of interlocking timbers are known as "corner men." How well this part of the work was done by two young men totally unaccustomed to pioneer life is better illustrated in the series of photographs which shows each successive operation of preparing the logs and raising the framework of the structure.

In going on to the flooring, shingling, window framing, partitioning, lathing and furnishing you would know how it was all accomplished in the absence of the products of a saw and planing mill or any of the manufactures so essential to building construction and home making.

Five very common tools constituted the boardmaking outfit. This primitive substitute for a sawmill included an ax; two or three steel wedges and as many hand mauls of hickory, ir row, with hickory handle, the blade made of a section from iron tire; a mallet and a maul, each cut from unseasoned hickory timber.

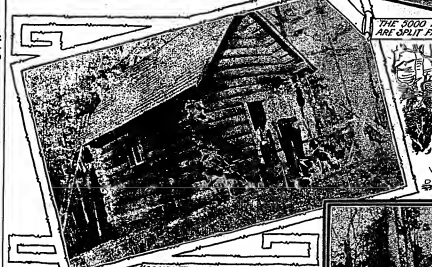
The selection of perfect "hoard trees" is a genius work to a degree, as practiced by the settlers. Out of every four trees chosen by the woodsman's system of identifying marks, usually only one is perfectly adaptable to board making by the method of splitting with mallet and frow. The most reliable way to select the right kind of timber is to observe the general trend of the crevices in the bark. The course of these lines should be nearly perpendicular with the trunk. Another good method of judging a straight-grained trunk is to note the distribution and the general design of the scaly, turtle-shell patches of bark. These scales should be long and narrow, and their design should show a reasonable amount of regularity. Too trend of these patches of bark scale should deviate but slightly from the perpendicular. It is impossible to split a perfect board from a log in which the markings and bark scales are inclined to encircle the trunk like a corkscrew. Nor is it always possible to make perfect boards, even if the markings of the bark are in accord with governing rules. Native intuition, difficult to define, aids considerably in selecting the best trees. This practica of "chipping" is a final test. In the most remote forests, many miles from a railroad, it is difficult to find an area, even on the crest of a mountain, that has not been penetrated by the pioneer in search of splitting timber. Far from the nearest settlement, in the depth of a virgin forest, the intrepid hunter frequently observes these notchings for board trees, even when there is entire absence of other signs of advancing civilization.

Out of 21 trees selected and chipped, while observing these rules, 17 were discarded. The remaining four supplied all the lumber necessary to complete the building operations and a sufficient quantity of choice boards for the mission furnishings. After sawing into eight and ten foot lengths the logs were rolled into position for splitting. Then followed the scoring preparatory to splitting with mallet, maul and wedges. In the diagram of a cross-section of a piece of pine board timber the entering wedge points the line of the first seam which separates the semi-circular halves. The timber is then quartered and again split the third time. An 18-inch log will produce eight well-shaped bolts, the most practical and convenient size for splitting with a frow. Each of these bolts is placed upright into an oak crotch, which is raised firmly to the ground to act as a support in prying. The cutting edge of the frow blade is the lower side of the tool when the handle is held upright with the blade resting across the V-shaped end of the bolt. The heart is waste, which is split from the bolt with a wedge. When the cutting edge of the frow blade is placed across these markings the upper or broad edge of the blade is tapped gently with the mallet. This operation starts the board. By rocking the upright handle to and fro the blade opens a seam and is driven deeper with little exertion. Ten or fifteen seconds of this prying operation will release a perfectly smooth board from the bolt. All of the lumber used in the building operations was produced by this method.



The same process was applied to shingle making. The 2,000 ¼-inch boards required for roofing purposes, all split from 18-inch log lengths, were turned out by two operators with mallet and frow in a day and a half.

Other timbers required, such as the solid oak foundation sills, the plate sleepers, or flooring supports, the joists and the rafters, were all handhewn with a broadax from unseasoned trunks.



The work bench for hand planing and finishing lumber was improvised from a half-log, 24 inches in diameter, mounted on two large stumps and held in position with wooden pegs. Smaller wooden pegs were used also, to an extent, as a substitute for nails and screws in the building operations. An abbreviated assortment of carpenter's and cabinet maker's tools constituted the outfit.

Completed, the dimensions of the house are 16x18 feet and there is a second story and shed, a kitchen and bathroom annex. The wing is eight feet wide and extends the length of one end of the house.

The main living room is most ingeniously arranged for both convenience and comfort. It is at once convertible into either a sitting room, a dining room or a bachelor's den. In one corner of this room is a hread, turning stairway, easy to ascend, with a rustic balustrade, artistically designed—all made of young hickory. The variegated colorings of the natural bark appear as if oxidized, which lends a feeling of soft warmth and comfort. The cozy corner is diagonally opposite the stairway. Its overhanging shelves are at once a gallery of interesting photographic studies and a miniature museum of natural history. They are a repository for a collection of Indian pottery, flint arrow heads and implements, queer freaks of vegetation, fascinating bits of strange mineral formations, brilliant plumage of rare birds, hawk's claws, antlers and a variety of curios, each one of them a pleasant reminder of some little adventure or of an exciting chase through the forest. The cozy corner is fitted with a mission seat and all its appurtenances are in the same style and design. Within this corner one may enjoy the all-pervading solace of knowing the reality of one's surroundings. The imagination is undisturbed by the vision of a furniture factor's process of imitating the craftsmanship of the pioneer. A mass of cushions, some filled with pine needles and others stuffed with wild-duck feathers, creats a desire to tarry for a rest in good, old-fashion comfort. A gun rack, cartridge belts, holsters and other of the articles of a hunter's paraphernalia decorate the walls on each side of the inviting nook. Tables, chairs, hookcase and writing desk are all in accord and all hand made of raw materials. A few clever articles of conventilia furniture lend considerable freedom and convenience in a room that otherwise would be overcrowded. Among these is a screened dummy elevator which takes the place of cellar and refrigerator and which may be readily converted into a kitchen table when required, in carving meate, kneading dough and for other culinary purposes. The elevator platform is four feet in height, with a series of shelves, and it is so constructed that its top forms a square panel in the floor when the carriage is lowered out of view. The whole thing is so well balanced with weights operated by cords and pulleys that it requires but little effort, with one finger in an iron ring, to raise the top to table height above the floor.

The dining table is cleared after supper and supplied with a new cloth,—all fresh and clean. Then it is rolled on its larga castore to another part of the room, directly under a hanging lamp, to serve the purpose of a library table for the remainder of the evening. The lamp is suspended, through a hole in the floor, from the ceiling of the bed chamber on the second floor. When all are ready to retire the lamp is shifted to the sleeping apartment by means of the raising-and-lowering device.

The most marked display of ingenuity has been applied to the kitchen furnishings. Everything but the cook stove and pipe is home made. Large pails and vegetable tins have been converted into cooking dishes and utensils of every description. A goodly amount of cooking gloins and a two-gallon soldering set produced all of the tinware used in the kitchen. On the stove is a cottolene pail that has been converted into a teapot, complete with spout, handle, cover and inside strainer. Two deep tin covers, soldered together at their rims and supplied with a neat wooden handle have produced a very serviceable hot-water kettle. Then there are stove lifters and shovels, frying pans and a number of other small utensils made from sheet iron stove-pipe lengths—all bent, soldered and riveted by hand.

Both the kitchen and tha bathroom are supplied with running water conducted to the house from a spring higher up through a system of wooden troughs. The bathtub is of wood, enameled, very serviceable hot-water kettle. Then there are stove lifters and shovels, frying pans and a number of other small utensils made from sheet iron stove-pipe lengths—all bent, soldered and riveted by hand.

Dare to Be Happy.

Let us never be afraid of innocent joy; God is good and what he does is well done; resign yourself to everything, even to happiness; ask for the spirit of sacrifice, of detachment, of renunciation, and above all, for the spirit of joy and gratitude, that genuine and religious optimism which sees in God a Father, and seke no pardon for his benefits. We must dare to be happy and dare to confess it, regarding ourselves always as the dependents, not as the authors of our own joy.—Amiel.

REMEMBER PISO'S for COUGHS & COLDS

When the Hare Won

By M. DIBBELL

"Mother, I am going to try to write stories."

Little Mrs. Harrison breathed a patient sigh and answered, "Yes, dear. Do you think you can find a market for your stories?"

This tall, handsome, impetuous daughter had always been a problem too deep for her to solve. Why anyone whose family was in comfortable circumstances should persist in efforts to be self-supporting was utterly beyond her comprehension. But, also, since it was Ruth who was attempting it of course it must be right.

"Yes, mother," continued the girl. "I really think I can write quite as interesting tales as the general run of those with which the papers and magazines are filled—at least I mean to try."

Later when Ruth informed her father of the new field of labor she intended to enter he simply laughed and wished her every success in her undertaking. At once she set to work and her first effort in the literary field was sent out to all the available markets. And the regular return of the manuscript in her own expense, with unfailing regularity, did not discourage her.

When over six month of unrewarded effort had passed Mrs. Harrison said to her daughter:

"Ruth, child, don't you think you might succeed better with your home made candies than you do with the writing? You know that everyone who has ever tasted your candies always longed for more and I am sure you could get any number of orders for them."

Ruth smiled at her mother's suggestion as to her change of occupation, but answered:

"No, mother, I mean to keep on trying; I have just finished a dear little love story which I am sure will be the very thing for Up-to-Date Romance and I shall start it at once. I have never sent the editors anything."

At last her patience and perseverance were rewarded. After a short time, instead of the usual bulky envelope, came one of the ordinary business size with Up-to-Date Romance printed on its corner and enclosing a check for her story. The letter contained also the encouraging information that if she could send them anything equally good they would be pleased to see it.

"She Was Wandering About the Garden"

After this the regularity with which Up-to-Date Romance accepted and printed everything coming from her pen seemed remarkable. Ruth thoroughly enjoyed this new work and devoted all her spare time to the production of some very readable stories.

For nearly a year this state of affairs continued. Then, upon answering her daughter's room one afternoon, Mrs. Harrison found Ruth dissolved in tears.

"Why, Ruthie, what is the matter?" queried her mother.

"Mother, I shall never write another word," answered a doleful voice. "It has been a farce all through. Frederic Mortimer owns a large interest in Up-To-Date Romance and he has made them accept my stories just because he thought it would please me—I never forgive him."

"Why, child, how did you find that out? And if it is so surely it was kind of Frederic to want to make you happy. Why should you be angry with him?"

But Ruth was not to be comforted. "I would much rather have won on my own merits," she said miserably. "I know it is true, for I heard John Carlton at his office one hour ago how he liked the magazine business and if he were making a fortune out of Up-To-Date Romance. Frederic told him it was the best paying investment he had ever made. They did not see me, for I was down at the dark end of the news store by the magazine counter. When they left I started for home, but Frederic overtook me part way out. Then I taxed him with his duplicity and he had to acknowledge that it was true."

Mrs. Harrison gazed at her daughter in perplexity. What could one say to such an unreasonable young person as this? The desire of her heart had long been that Ruth would wed the son of her dearest friend, Jane Mortimer, and settle down to a life of peace and happiness. And now, because Frederic had tried his best to do what would give her pleasure, every thing apparently was at sixes and sevens.

Finally she said, "Well, since Frederic says the magazine is the best paying investment he has ever had he cannot be losing money even if he is printing your stories. People must like them or they would not read them."

Frederic himself had presented this view of the subject to Ruth, but she was too angry to hear reason from any one; and now with the reckless abandon of youth she promptly put all her remaining manuscripts in the fire.

For four years Frederic Mortimer had been trying to win Ruth Harrison's promise to become his wife, but her reply was ever the same—that she wanted to have her own share in the battle of life, not become merely an onlooker.

The incident of the stories was only half as bad as Ruth considered it, for unless they had been worth printing they never would have been published in Up-to-Date Romance, even with Frederic's influence.

It took time and patience for him to make his peace with the offended young woman, but before many weeks they were apparently on their usual terms—all a lover's devotion on Frederic's part, friendship on Ruth's.

Not long after Ruth's and fall from the pinnacle of fame a cousin of Frederic's arrived to spend the summer with him. This was the cousin's first trip east, for he had been born and reared on a big ranch in California. He was a fair type of the breezy west, tall, straight, handsome, full of life and vigor and with a happy disposition.

From their first meeting there seemed a mutual attraction between Ruth Herrison and Guy Atkinson.

Guy Atkinson had heard of his cousin's love for Ruth, for Frederic could not keep some mention of her out of his letters and the cousins had corresponded for years. He was prepared to admire her as Frederic's sweetheart, with no thought of danger to himself.

There were many picnics and other social gatherings during that summer and Ruth often met the Californian.

Mrs. Herrison was delighted with the way in which her daughter had changed. She said to her husband:

"The child really seems to be growing fond of household duties and I never hear a word about any new effort at earning money. I believe Frederic's faithfulness is beginning to touch her heart."

Toward the end of the season a party of young people planned for a sail down the river; the party to have a picnic supper on a small island which was a favorite resort for such affairs, and take the homeward sail by moonlight. The program was carried out perfectly until the point of getting supper on the island. Here some of the number wanted to make a fire to boil the kettle for a pot of tea. They all at work collecting sticks and soon had a merry blaze.

Ruth and Guy were left to tend the fire while the other were busy spreading their repast on a convenient knoll. After a few moments Ruth, with the impedience of youth, bent over the fire to see if the kettle was beating as rapidly as it should. Suddenly, the hem of her dress touched an outlying brand and at once blazed up. Guy was a few feet away and saw the accident. Tearing off his coat he quickly wrapped it about her, and in a few seconds the flames were smothered. He had fallen in his knees to reach her flaming skirt, and now looked up into her white face.

"Darling, you are safe," he said simply—then he realized the term he used and a slow flush spread over his face. It was matched by the scarlet of Ruth's own.

He rose in his feet and their friends came rushing up. Guy donned his slightly scorched coat and Ruth's friends gathered to her side repairs.

The girl herself felt as if she were in a dream, and both she and Guy Atkinson were unusually quiet and subdued for the remainder of the evening.

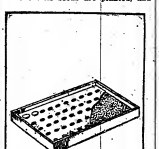
The next morning Ruth received an early call from the Californian. She was standing among the beautiful rose garden which was the pride of her father's heart when Guy found her.

"Miss Harrison, I wish to apologize for speaking as I did to you. I have known for a long time you were to become Frederic's wife and I did not know until I saw your danger how I loved you. Forgive me—I wish you and Frederic every joy."

For a moment Ruth did not answer, then she said slowly: "I shall never marry your cousin. I do not care for him except as a friend." She hesitated, "I, too, made a discovery yesterday."

Poor Frederic was forgotten by them both; the light of hope and happiness came into Guy's eye, while he asked, trying to speak calmly:

"Can I dare to ask what that discovery was?"



Ruth lifted her gaze to his without any of her old timidity—and the answer must have been in her eyes, for she spoke no word.

TRAY IS GOOD SEED TESTER

Device Enables Seed Grower to Determine on What Mixture of Soil to Best Suited.

One of the most ingenious devices for the testing of seeds yet put out is that designed by a Minnesota man. It enables a seedgrower to determine which mixture of soil is best suited to a particular seed. A tray has a layer of some moisture retaining material in the bottom, and on top of this is a removable cover with a number of holes, all numbered. Little conical cups, open at the bottom, fit into these holes and the cups are filled with different mixtures of soil, having different proportions of loam, etc. In these different soils seeds are planted, and by keeping a record of the numbers the growers can tell which soils are best suited to his various purposes. The moistening pad in the bottom of the tray keeps the soil moist and dictates the necessity of watering it daily, besides keeping all the uniform degree of moisture.

GOOD ROAD ERA HAS BEGUN

Once Constructed, Highways Should Be Looked After Regularly—Dust Preventative is Needed.

The good road era has begun in many states, and already the steam roller, the piles of crushed rock along the roadside and the digging out of the old gravel roadway are familiar sights in many of the eastern states. The roads built are generally of approved macadam construction, which, completed, are perfect strips of white ribbon running through the green fields and hills af the rural sections.

These roads are perfectly built, and as soon as completed the farmers and other ratepayers contentedly sit back and exclaim: "These roads are now good for a generation or more without trouble." This is a serious error, and one being made in many states. That it is an error is borne out by the dust cloud raised by a passing car traveling at 20 miles per hour, or perhaps faster.

Many fail to realize that whenever dust is raised a road is being destroyed, says the Motor Age. This is particularly the case on smooth macadam surfaces, where there is nothing to hold the dust on the road, and where every cross wind blows off any loose material.

As soon as roads are built arrangements should be made to keep them in repair. With roads it is essentially "A stitch in time saves nine." Some dust preventative should be used immediately macadam roads are completed, in order to prevent dust.

Oil, tar and many special preparations are now on the market, and the communities should be educated to looking upon these additions as a legitimate part of the road maintenance. California has its oiled roads, and which motoring is a pleasure to the motorist and not a dust-bath to the citizen who happens to be on the road the same day, or who has the misfortune to reside along a well-traveled highway.

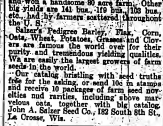
Massachusetts proved last year that road treatments are a success and more economical than continuous applications of water; and in England dust preventing is always considered a part of the road problem.

Importance of Manure.

Perhaps the most important thing on the farm is not how to take care of the manure so that it can be put on the land with as little loss as possible either of the liquid part or any that is of a dryer nature, but the fact is very apparent that the waste of manure on every farm is more or less according to the means used to secure every part in the best possible way.

Buy Seed Corn Early.

It is best to buy seed corn early. Buy it in the ear and buy from a field to a half more than you really need for planting, so that all inferior ears may be picked out and discarded. We usually buy three bushels and cull out one bushel and find that it pays in increased yields. That which is culled out may be used for feed and is not a total loss.



OATS—250 Bu. Per Acre.

What is the answer to yield of Bushels Wanted, Corn, Oats, Barley? Read from Salzer's Reinvegated White Russian oats and you'll get a handsome 80 acre farm. Other big yields are 141 bus. 170 bus. 110 bus. etc., had by farmers scattered throughout the U. S.

Salzer's Pedigree Barley, Flax, Corn, Oats, Wheat, Potatoes, Grasses and Clovers are famous the world over for their purity and tremendous yielding qualities. We are easily the largest growers of farm seeds in the world.

MILD, GENTLE LAXATIVE FOR WOMEN GIVEN FREE

So many of the ills of women are due to habitual constipation, probably because of their false modesty on the subject, that their attention cannot be too strongly called to the importance of keeping the bowels open. It is always important to do that, regardless of the sex, but it is especially important to women.

Given the time the first begins to menstruate until menstruation ceases she has always vastly better prospects of coming through healthy if she watches her bowel movements. If you find yourself constipated, with bad breath, pimply complexion, headaches, belching gas and other symptoms of indigestion and constipation, take a small dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a woman's favorite laxative. You will find that you can do away with salts, strong cathartics, etc., which are entirely unsuited to women's requirements.

Mrs. Katherine Habersirch of McKees Rocks, Pa., and Mrs. A. E. Herrick of Wheeler, Mich., who was almost paralyzed by stomach and bowels, are now cured by the use of the remedy. A free sample bottle can be obtained by addressing Dr. Caldwell and after you are convinced of its merits buy it of your druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle. Write the free sample address Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

A Helpless Invalid

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A woman who is sick and suffering, and won't at least try a medicine which has the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is, it would almost seem, to blame for her own wretchedness. Read what this woman says:

Richmond, Mo.—"When my second daughter was eighteen months old I was pronounced a hopeless invalid by specialists. I had a consultation of doctors and they said I had a severe case of ulceration. I was in bed for ten weeks, had sinking spells, and was pronounced to be in a dangerous condition. My father insisted that we try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I got the first bottle gone I began to improve, and before it had all been taken I was as well and strong as ever,—my friends hardly recognized me so great was the change."—Mrs. Woodson Branstetter, Richmond, Mo.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read what another woman says:

Jonesboro, Texas.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for myself and daughter, and consider it unequalled for all female diseases. I would not be without it for anything. I wish every mother in America could be persuaded to use it as there would be less suffering among our sex then. I am always glad to speak a word of praise for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and you are at liberty to use this testimonial."—Mrs. James T. Lawrence, Jonesboro, Texas.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering from the same trouble?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, it has thousands of cures to its credit.

If the slightest trouble appears which you do not understand, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for her advice—it is free and always helpful.

The NATION'S WEALTHY WIDOWS

By WALDON FAWCETT

WEALTHY American widows have come in recent years to play a most important part in several important divisions of the world's affairs. It is not, either, merely here in the United States that these moneyed women are making their influence felt. On the contrary, their influence has proven fully as potent in many circles abroad—so much so, indeed, that the good people of Europe have been compelled to sit up and take notice of the American widows as a class well worthy to rank with any subdivision of society abroad (not even excepting the nobility), if the comparison be made on the basis of gowns or millinery or jewelry or any of the other standards by which the feminine world sets such store.

Here in the United States it would be difficult to name a sphere in which the wealthy widows have not been exerting tremendous influence of late years. Even in politics they have not waited upon the victory of the suffrage cause to enable them to take a hand. For the present, to be sure, their influence is indirect, but it is none the less tangible, as witness the power of the action maintained by that brilliant woman, Mrs. Hitt, widow of the late chairman of the foreign relations committee of the house of representatives and the backing which Senator Beveridge of Indiana has had through the fact that his wife is the kinswoman of Mrs. Marshall Field, widow of the Chicago merchant.

Socially there is no question as to the tremendous power of the American widow. To realize it one has only to stop to reflect how the polite world is dominated by the hospitalities of such well-to-do widows as Mrs. L. Z. Leiter, widow of the Chicago multi-millionaire and mother of the late Lady Curzon, Vicereine of India; Mrs. George M. Pullman, widow of the car builder; Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, widow of the "Mining King;" Mrs. Mary Scott Townsend, widow of the Pennsylvania coal and oil magnate, and Mrs. M. A. Hanna, widow of the late United States senator from Ohio.

Mrs. Hanna's life since the death of her husband, we may here digress to explain, has illustrated how great is the latitude of life open to the modern wealthy widow in contrast to the circumscribed existence of the average widow of a prominent official of a century ago, who, upon the death of her husband, was wont to retire to his plantation or country seat and live in the utmost quietude if not in actual seclusion. After the death of her husband Mrs. Hanna lived for a time in a fashionable hotel in Washington. Then she built a large house and occupied it for a time, later disposing of it to a prominent army officer. Next she had a special apartment arranged to her order in one of the largest of the new hotels in New York, even providing a special kitchen for "Maggie," her "jewel" of a cook. Then desiring a change, she hit upon the idea of her present program of life, which calls for an extended sojourn in Europe each spring and summer and a winter residence in Washington, where she has two apartments of 14 rooms each in a fashionable apartment house.

Mrs. Hanna's 28-room apartment might seem a pretty pretentious residential establishment for a lone woman to maintain, but it is scarcely a circumstance to the enormous four-story mansion erected at the national capital by Mrs. Slater, another wealthy widow, who is the sole occupant of this palace save for the 18 servants who minister to her needs. Wealthy widows, it may be added, have not shirked the responsibilities of home building, indeed, on the contrary, it seems to be one of their fads. Mrs. Leiter, in addition to her town houses, has lately been building a summer "cottage" costing hundreds of thousands of dollars on the North Shore of Massachusetts near the summer home of President Taft. Mrs. Hay, widow of the late secretary of state, has built a magnificent mansion in Cleveland; Mrs. Pullman and Mrs. Marshall Field have ordered new homes from plans which they had a hand in making; Mrs. Hitt has built a splendid home since the death of her husband and the wealthy Mrs. Wyeth of Philadelphia had her nephew-architect carry out her ideas of a distinctive home.

In point of achievement, however, unquestionably the greatest of all the house builders in the coterie of wealthy widows is Mrs. Albert Clifford Barney, who inherited one fortune from her father, a Cincinnati pioneer, and married another. Mrs. Barney is of a most artistic temperament and is indeed an artist of no mean ability in both oils and water colors. She spends much time in Paris, where she and two of her daughters, who devote themselves respectively to painting and sculpture, are much in their element. When she is in this country Mrs. Barney divides her time and her boundless energy between the staging of Greek plays and other amateur theatricals of a most ambitious character and the designing and building of houses for love of it. These unique habitations that she creates Mrs. Barney sells or rents, and be it said to her credit that she is a clever enough business women to make her art profitable in dollars and cents as well as in personal satisfaction.

In the list of plutocratic American widows bevy of late years accomplished so much good as to make these bereaved ones as a class the most respected and most admired contingent of American multimillionairedom. The generosity of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst in good works has insured her a place for all time in our real hall of fame and Mrs. Herriman's gift of a splendid park to the city of New York bids fair to be but the first of a series of notable benefactions. Mrs. Russell Sage is another woman who in a comparatively brief widowhood has helped the needy in many ways, and the late Mrs. Gardner Hubbard, widow of the man who reaped the greatest financial rewards from the invention of the telephone, was lavish during her lifetime in good works.

There is one group of widows in the United States in the members of which—for all that they are most of them living princes—the public is bound to take a keen interest. This group is made up of the widows of former high officials of the nation, including the widows of our military and naval heroes. Conspicuous among the number are the two surviving widows of presidents, Mrs. Mary Lord Harrison and Mrs. Grover Cleveland. Mrs. Cleveland spends most of her time in the family home at Princeton or at her farm in New Hampshire, though she has of late devoted all little time to residence in Switzerland, where her children are being educated. Mrs. Harrison, likewise, spends much time abroad, though she maintains a home in Indianapolis and indulges in occasional lengthy vacations in a log house in the Adirondacks.

Of the widows of the nation's warriors probably the public bears most frequently of Mrs. Phil Sheridan, widow of the famous cavalry leader, although Mrs. Logan and Mrs. Pickett, the latter the widow of the Confederate chieftain who led the desperate charge at Gettysburg, have been more or less in the public eye owing to their literary work and their careers on the lecture platform. Mrs. Sheridan, alike to both these other widows, resides at the national capital and an anecdote is told of Mrs. Sheridan to the effect that she silenced some gossip which speculated as to her remarriage by the remark, "I would rather be the widow of Phil Sheridan than the wife of any man alive."

And speaking of the remarriage of widows, it may be added that one of the circumstances that renders these widowed women of wealth interesting to many people is the possibility of remarriage—an ever-present incentive to speculation, even though the object of such public curiosity may have not the slightest intention of again entering the bonds of matrimony. And that this solicitude is by no means restricted to disinterested observers or confined to the United States is eloquently attested by the attentions which eligible members of the nobility of Europe have showered upon Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. "Jock" Gardner, Mrs. Marshall Field and—most courted of all—Mrs. Nonnie Worthington Stewart Leeds, the dazzlingly wealthy as well as dazzlingly beautiful young widow of a multimillionaire who garnered the golden harvest of the tin-plate industry and sundry railroads.

Almost all the wealthy American widows seem to have a penchant for spending more or less of their time in Europe and there are others who live there continuously, returning but seldom to their native land, and then only for visits. In this class are the widows of foreign diplomats who receive pensions from the governments served by their late husbands. A conspicuous example is afforded by Baroness Sternburg—the former Miss Langhem, a Kentucky beauty, who as the result of a genuine romance thet began as a case of love at first sight on a transcontinental liner, married Baron Speck von Sternburg, a very capable German diplomat, who lost his life as the result of disease contracted while serving his government in India.

In the field of art many American widows, such as Mrs. St. Gaudens, are factors, if not by virtue of their own talents at least as custodians of the masterpieces left by their deceased husbands, and in such work is true in the spheres of literature and public life, where the collection of the papers of an eminent man or the publication of his memoirs has frequently devolved upon the widow. In the financial world wealthy widows, by sheer force of their monetary possessions, wield an influence recognized by all men of affairs. The most notable example, of course, is that afforded by Mrs. Hetty Green, who controls one of the wealthiest and most powerful of the New York banks.

CURRENT WRECKS

A BRIDGE

Twenty-Seven Big Timbers Are Cut Through in One Day by Aid of Electricity.

One of the most ingenious uses to which electricity was ever put was in the wrecking of a bridge over the Wabash in Indiana.

This bridge had been purchased by the county authorities, who intended to replace it by a steel structure erected on the old piers and abutments. The owner agreed to remove the bridge in 60 days.

The chief difficulty lay in the short time agreed upon for the removal of the bridge. Several wreckers to whom the matter was submitted declared that it would be impossible within 30 days to pull down the old bridge without injury to the piers.

The structure might be blown up with dynamite, but the explosion would also destroy the piers. Were it fired, the heat would crack and injure the masonry of the bridge. The 30 days expired, and an extension of one week was granted.

The owner was at his wits' end, when he chanced upon an electrician who proposed, not to blow up the bridge, but to burn it apart. His proposal was gladly accepted.

Each span of the bridge was composed of nine chords of three timbers each. The 27 sills were to be cut simultaneously, so that the span would drop between the piers into the river. The cutting was to be accomplished by burning through the wood with loops of iron resistance made red-hot by the passage of the electric current.

Fifty-four resistance loops were heated to wreck each span, and the spans were wrecked one at a time. Sufficient current was used to heat the iron wires cherry red. The result was exactly the same with every span. Between the turning on of the current and the fall of the span an hour and 40 minutes elapsed. Then the last of timbers fell into the water well inside the piers, so that they were uninjured.

The cut made by the hot wire was sharp and clean, and the wood was not charred more than an inch from the place of fracture.

The current was first turned on at about five o'clock in the morning, and at two in the afternoon the last span crashed down to the river bed.—Scientific American.

A BALL FOR BABY

If ever love is stitched into a gift it goes into the one that celebrates baby's first birthday. One of the prettiest presents, which will give the little one great joy, is a large edition of those balls which the happy mothers of today delighted to fashion as children with two circles of cardboard perforated in the center.

Instead of making the circles an inch or two in diameter, make them full six inches in size, and use pink and white or pale blue and white wool of a very fleecy type. Tie the wool through the perforation in the cardboard and then proceed to fill up the hole by drawing the wool through and through over the cardboard until no more will pass. Cut it and tie it between the two circles and remove these by tearing them away.

The ball should be sewn on to narrow satin ribbon, blue or pink, as the case may be, and to this ribbon should be attached a quantity of little gold or silver bells, which will jingle merrily when the ball is swung to and fro by the ribbons.

RENEWS ANTIQUE WASHSTAND

Long Islander Sells Piece of Furniture for Fifty Cents and Buys It Back for $20.

An elderly Long Islander once attended an auction of old furniture. Among the articles for which bids were asked was a heavy marble-topped washstand. The Long Islander bid ten cents for it, and as he was the only one who spoke the washstand was knocked down to him—rather to his dismay, as he had to take the thing removed and the interior of the stand serving as a receptacle for cans of paint.

One day a clerk from a furniture store in the neighborhood called at the Long Islander's and accidentally caught sight of the inappreciated washstand. He made some inquiries concerning it, and eventually purchased it for 50 cents. The clerk took his purchase to the store, gave it a thorough renovating and it became a handsome piece of hardwood furniture, the marble-top adding the finishing touch. Not long after this transformation the elderly Long Islander and his wife visited the furniture store, and when the wife saw that beautifully polished antique washstand she fell in love with it, for it just filled her ideal. Her husband, seemed to have a suspicion of the truth, and endeavored to distract her attention. But the affair ended by the husband purchasing the stand for $20, and it is now one of her most highly prized possessions.

Bell Must Be Tuned.

The general impression is that the tone of a bell is largely a matter of accident, but this is not so. A bell must be tuned the same as a piano or any other musical instrument. Every bell has five sounds, which must blend together in perfect harmony, and this is accomplished by shaving down certain parts until the desired harmony is secured. In the event of shaving too deep the bell is not injured, but the tuning operation is prolonged, as other parts must be operated on and cut away to a corresponding degree.

QUEER MOVING BALL

Remarkable Phenomenon in a Marion, Ohio, Cemetery.

Great Granite Sphere Actually Turns, and Furnishes Scientists With a New Subject for Their Various Theories.

Marion, O.—In the last few years the attention of scientists, and of the public in general, has been attracted to a remarkable phenomenon discovered in connection with the monument to the memory of C. B. Merchant, in the Marion cemetery.

The monument consists of a stone base, rough in finish, upon which is mounted a polished granite ball. The ball is 26 inches in diameter and weighs 4,200 pounds.

When the ball was placed in position in 1896 the monument builder left but one spot of it rough. This was the segment of contact with the stone pedestal, or that part of the ball which rested on the supporting stone. So thoroughly was the rest of the ball polished that its surface is like a mirror. It reflects perfectly the trees and shrubbery which surround it.

In 1900, four years after the monument was erected, a visitor to the cemetery discovered that the granite sphere had shifted its position. Investigation proved that the rough spot was no longer in contact with the pedestal. Repeated efforts on the part of cemetery employees failed to return the ball to its former position.

Those who attempted the task realized that the ball had not been turned by human hands. At first its movement was ascribed to the motion of earth. This was the commonly accepted theory until newspaper reports called the attention of scientists to the phenomenon.

Men of science from the Ohio universities made special trips to Marion to study the problem. As the story of the ball was spread scientific men from universities further away came to study the ball.

When the first professor of physics looked at the sphere the rough spot on the ball was about half way up toward its top as it rested on the pedestal. He took a photograph of the ball in that position, the rough spot designating that the ball was moving in the vertical circle.

The next scientist who took a picture of the ball showed it in a different position. The ball had turned in part in the vertical circle and then had revolved in the horizontal. This led to further controversy until many men of science met to study the unique problem.

C.B. MERCHANT

Many theories were advenced as to the cause of the movement of the ball. Finally many geologists of note and recognized authority evolved a theory which is generally accepted as true. That is:

The constent moving of the ball—that is acceded—is due to the unequal expansion of different parts of the sphere's surface. As a sphere its surface is presented to the four winds of heaven, and the portion of it to the rays of the sun would become more highly heated than the part of its surface exposed to the north and its cold winds. Also the surface of the whole would be more apt to become more heated during the day then would the base upon which it rests, the latter is larger and heavier than the ball itself.

Now if one part of the ball expands a minute quantity more than the other with each beating of one side, and contracts in the same ratio on cooling there would be, in time, a slight creeping movement which in time would move the ball sufficiently to let the change in its position be noted by the naked eye. Naturally the expansion of one side of the ball would make that side heavier then the cooled side, and the heated side would work its way toward the bottom.

The case is considered one of the most remarkable on record and best furnished science with a new idea concerning the expansion and contraction of solids. The conclusions of American scientists who examined the ball were submitted to scientists of Europe. All agree that the action of heat and cold of the four seasons cause the ball to change its position a minute particle every day

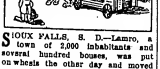
No Revolution Talk in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY.—The capital of Mexico is much more interested in the performances at the local theaters than in the revolution. Two evenings each week, Thursday and Sunday, there is music on the plaza and the typical music of Mexico has been succeeded by the fascinating strains of Lehar's operas.

No one here can see that the revolution is being considered seriously by residents of the capital. It is undoubtedly worrying President Diaz, although revolutions should be familiar to him by this time, as he was once an insurgent himself. No doubt the disturbance has kept some of the wlotar tourists away, but thara seams to be as many sightseeing Americans on the plaza as usual.



Under the circumstances the Americans hero are being treated with the utmost consideration. It seems to be the desire of Mexican officials to retain the friendship of Americans during these days of minor internal disturbances, for the alienation of American capital would he a worse disaster than is likely to result from the insurgents.

Any antipathy in the city toward Americans comes from the lower classes, the professional agitators and malcontents. They sometimes rally around the sentiment "Mexico for Mexicans," but here in this city this element is in a hopeless minority.

It has developed since the revolution began that it was financed largely by Mexicans who live in Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, led chiefly by Flores Magon, once sentenced to prison in California for violation of the neutrality laws.

Since the troubles began less than usual has been seen of President Diaz and this started rumors that he was very ill and even that he was dying. A few days ago when such rumors were flying the President and Mrs. Diaz came out on the lake by driving through the city in an open carriage and going to a park.

Western Town Moved Away on Wheels

SIOUX FALLS, S. D.—Lamro, a town of 2,000 inhabitants and several hundred houses, was put on wheels the other day and moved over to Winner, where, as the result of a bitter county seat war and agreement between the two towns, it was consolidated with Winner and as a town ceased wholly to exist. Store buildings, with their valuable contents, were moved intact. Banks, with their cash in the vaults, were put on wheels and made the trip across the prairie. Without disturbing the officials, the county court house was hitched to two of the largest traction engines ever built and was hauled from Lamro over to Winner, where it was placed on a foundation previously prepared for it.

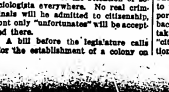
Lamro was unique in being a town built by Indians for the use of white men. Indians promoted the town, sold lots, opened business houses, and finally elected themselves to office. Indians were elected to the offices of county commissioner, county judge, county treasurer and to all other places.

However, the Indians were at last outgeneraled by the white men. The red men were familiar with many things, but they did not understand the ways of the American railroad builders. Lamro was promoted while the railroad was still 20 miles away, but headed in that direction. In fact, the survey ran through the spot upon which the Indians built the town. But the railroad made a detour just great enough to put Lamro off the line of road and the white men built the town of Winner on the road and only three miles from the Indian town. In the meantime Lamro had grown rapidly and was a town of 2,000 people, with all sorts of business houses.

The people living at Winner organized a county seat fight and carried the matter before the people at the November elections. By agreement between the two towns the loser agreed to abandon its site and move bodily over to the winner of the fight. True to its word Lamro was moved, but in a small vote, and the very next day arrangements were begun for the house moving.

Teaches Four Years by False Pretense

PHILADELPHIA.—Mrs. Mary E. Irwin has been teaching for four years in the Martin school of this city without a certificate and without having graduated from the high school as she claimed. Her maiden name was Mary B. Green. She desired to teach but had no certificate and was not qualified to pass an examination. She planned to get a teacher's position and study as she taught until she made herself competent. This she had practically accomplished.



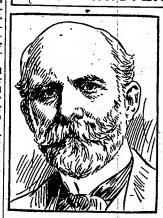
All these years she was posing as Carrie E. Green, who graduated from the high school in the class of 1898 and taught until 1891, when she married and moved away. She is said to be dead.

Sixteen years after the real Miss Green had left the school to marry, her impersonator applied for a place and said her certificate had been destroyed. The real Miss Green had made a good record as a teacher and her impersonator was employed without question.

A family quarrel caused her secret to become public. A brother-in-law, in a spirit of revenge, notified the school board that Mrs. Irwin was not the former Carrie E. Green. Members of the class of '98 were called as witnesses and they told Mrs. Irwin she had never been in their class, but she persisted they were wrong. Then a class picture was produced.

In a stata of collapse, frequently fainting, Mrs. Irwin insisted throughout the hearing that she was telling the truth but tha avidence against her was too strong and she was discharged.

Nebraska May Have 'Vagabond City'



LINCOLN, NEB.—Nebraska may soon have a vagabond city and all tramps, drunkards or delinquents of other kinds who drift into this state will be in danger of being made citizens of the new colony. The "city" will not rob the penitentiary of any of its prisoners, but is intended to take care of the large class of unfortunates designated by professional charity workers as "below the poverty line." It will be the first institution of its kind in the United States and as an experiment along untried lines is sure to attract the attention of sociologists everywhere. No real criminals will be admitted to citizenship, but only "unfortunates" will be accepted there.

A bill before the legislature calls for the establishment of a colony on the prairies, far from the temptations of a large city. The size of the institution is not mentioned in the bill, but its backers think from 5,000 to 10,000 acres will be necessary once the colony is in full working order. In addition to a big farming area there will be shops of all kinds, an iron foundry, a shoe shop, a book bindery, a tailor shop, a furniture factory, a planing mill and others of this kind. The output of the colony will not come in competition with that of private concerns, but will be used, in great measure, by the state in the different state institutions.

When one convicted within those lines is brought before the proper authorities, instead of being sentenced to the city jail or the state prison he will be sent to "Vagabond City." No fixed term of incarceration will be set, but the delinquent will be simply sent to the city until he becomes self-supporting, after which he will be sent back to the world as a man able to take care of himself. While in the "city" he will be taught an occupation or trade.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

NEW MINISTER TO PORTUGAL

Henry Sherman Boutell, who has represented the Ninth district of Illinois in the national congress for the past 12 years, but who failed of renomination last year, has been nominated by President Taft as minister plenipotentiary to the new republic of Portugal, at an annual salary of $10,000. He succeeds Henry T. Gage of Los Angeles, Cal., who recently resigned the mission because of ill health and to look after his private interests in southern California.

Mr. Gage was appointed minister to Portugal in December, 1909, and was in charge of the legation at Lisbon when the monarchy of King Manuel was overthrown and the republic of Portugal proclaimed in May, 1910. He returned to the United States soon after that event, and never has been personally accredited to Dr. Braga, provisional president of Portugal.

Since then the affairs of the American legation at Lisbon have been conducted by Mr. Lorillard, secretary of the legation.

At the state department it is declared that the appointment of Mr. Boutell to the Portuguese mission involves no change in the status of the diplomatic representatives of this government at Lisbon, and makes no change in the diplomatic relations between the United States and the new republic.

MAYOR IS OUSTED BY WOMEN

The women of Seattle, Wash., exercising their political power for the first time, recently ousted from office Mayor Hiram C. Gill and elected as his successor George W. Dilling. While the women did not accomplish this work alone, they were in a large measure instrumental in bringing it about, so much so that the result would have been different had they not voted. Gill was elected mayor of Seattle a year ago by a majority of 3,304. Women were then denied the right of suffrage, but in November they were clothed with that power. Almost from the start Gill's administration came in for sharp criticism.

As soon as the woman suffrage amendment to the constitution was adopted last November the movement to "recall" Gill under a provision of the city charter and elect a successor to serve the unexpired term took form and the women entered into the campaign with enthusiasm. Half the women of Seattle who were enfranchised in November qualified as voters by enrolling their names with the registration officers, and it was among them is dun the fact that in the recent election the majority of 3,306 given to Gill a year before was reversed and his opponent, George W. Dilling, was elected by a plurality of 6,231. The number of women registered exceeded 20,000.

The campaign was a bitter one. NEGRO NAMED FOR HIGH POST

One of the leading negroes of the country is William Henry Lewis of Boston, who was nominated by President Taft to be assistant attorney general of the United States. From the humble beginning in the lowly conditions of a slave he has thun risen to his present position of trust and responsibility. He was born of slave parents in Berkeley, Va., in 1863, while the Civil war was raging in all its fierce intensity. At the age of 23 he went to New England and entered Amherst college, where he made rapid progress in his studies and became captain of the football team. He was the class orator at commencement and won two of the mein prizes of the college. He then entered Harvard, where he added the record of proficiency in his studies and developed into an athlete. For two yaarn he played center in the football team and was intar ona of the coaches. On being admitted to the bar he began the practice of his profession in Washington and during the administration of President Roosevelt was appointed assistant district attorney.

SILENT MAN OF THE SENATE

The silent man of the United States senate is Winthrop Murray Crane of Massachusetts. Mr. Kean, Mr. Penrose and Mr. Wetmore could not be called silent men, for loquacity and disorderly compared to Crane, and their economy of speech becomes really prodigious when measured that way. The Massachusetts senator hates any kind of a racket. One could not imagine him banging a door, wearing squeaky shoes or summoning a page by clapping his hands. No sound heralds his approach as he comes down the senate corridor. He does not walk, he glides. His manner gliding he is sliding, and when not sliding he is flitting. The only thing disturbed when Crane comes into the senate or goes out is the atmosphere—he makes a slight draft, that is all. It is not seriously believed that Mr. Crane can walk through a door without opening it, and yet the faculty he has of appearing suddenly, noiselessly and unexpectedly in places where there has been no sign of him an instant before, almost invites the conviction that he is more an apparition than a man and a senator.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Army of Clerks Support Washington

WASHINGTON.—Who are the main support of the capital city of our nation? What class contribute most to the general prosperity of Washington?

The first city of the United States, unlike most other cities, has no industries that are furnishing a revenue to its citizens and for this reason the question of maintenance naturally arises. Many towns are kept in a flourishing condition by the industries, but Washington has no source of this nature from which to draw its support. Our capital depends on the government clerk. The government itself is the big mill that fills the envelopes of Washingtonians every week and the checks that flow into the purses of the grocer, baker, plumber, lawyer, doctor and clergyman come from the envelopes of the 40,000 clerks that keep Washington alive.

The members of the legislature really take more money out of Washington than they bring in. When the height of the season is on they lend an atmosphere of bustling prosperity to the town, but when the warm months come around they leave town with fitted purses and spend their bulky sums at the seashore and mountain resorts. The busy clerks stick to their posts in all kinds of weather and all through the year and when the gloom settles down after the big guns are gone the government clerk is the only hops of the merchant and the amusement managers. It may seem strange, but when closely figured out the humble government clerk is the mainstay of our capital city.

During the long months when the congressmen and senators are enjoying the luxuries of vacation the clerk must sweat for his daily bread. Those humid summer months of Washington are hard on a man's nerves and digestion and hence the physician and lawyer are kept from the door of poverty. Food, dress and amusement must be had and this necessity provides for the well being of still another class.

Labor Bureau Investigates Insurance

THE federal bureau of labor, after devoting a year's study to workingmen's insurance and compensation systems in Europe has put out a report in which it presents a study of the insurance and compensation systems for the benefit of workman in case of accident, sickness, old age, invalidity and unemployment in 11 European countries. Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor, believes the report will be of peculiar interest to working men in the United States at this time, in view of the fact that the subject of workmen's insurance is a live subject with discussion in the legislatura of nearly every state. He points out that within recent years eight states, Connecticut, Illinois, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio and Wisconsin, as wall as the federal government, have appointed commissions to study methods of compensating workmen for disability incurred in the course of their employment. As a result of these activities one state, New York, has already enacted compensation laws of general application, while two states, Montana and Maryland, have made provisions for state systems of cooperative insurance against accidents to workmen engaged in mining.

The forms of old age insurance now in operation in the European countries are classified by the commissioner of labor as voluntary insurance not subsidized by the government, voluntary insurance receiving government subsidies, compulsory insurance, and nondistributory insurance. The investigation revealed that in a number of European countries funds are found which provide old age pensions for employees on the basis of contributions from both employers and workmen. In other countries employer requires the workman to join the fund, so that as far as the employs is concerned the system may be regarded as compulsory.

Capital Society Women Hope to Fly

FIRST of all the women of fashion to take to aeronautics as a sport, Washington society leaders are planning to lend the world as "high flers," in the literal sense. The thrill attendant on sailing through the air has fascinated Washington mondolenes, and in order to indulge in it to their heartis content they are going to establish a school and obtain instruction in the science of operating model flying machines. The school may become an actuality soma time this spring and after a course of lessons mildly confidently looks forward to becoming a skilled "sky pilot" and taking a three or four mile "fly" every morning before breakfast.

Senate Shocked in Closing Session

FOR the first time in the history of the government the expiring gasp of a short session of congress was prolonged beyond the "legislative day of March 3" and into the legislative day of March 4. The precedent was set in the senate, and it happened this way:

Inadvertently a motion was adopted Friday to the affect that the Senate session of Saturday was to begin at 1 a. m. The custom had been to take a recess until the time agreed upon for the meeting on the calendar day of March 4, but early Saturday morning the Senate adjourned the legislative day of March 3. When the fiasco recovered therefrom it was for both the legislative and calendar day of March 4.

As soon as it became noised about that a custom had been violated senators began a hasty examination of precedents. Senator Gallinger was in the chair. He referred the question to Henry H. Gilfry, the senate parliamentarian. After a long search it was discovered that while the senate never had a legislative day of March 4 for the purpos of winding up a session of congress, there was no reason, except custom, for that fact.

For the first time, therefore, leadars of the senate learned that the calendar day is superior to the legislative day in determining parliamentary situations.

The Reason.

"Your wife told me that you always give way to her in an argument."

"Yes."

"Is she always right?"

"No, but she's always present."

THE PRICE OF PROGRESS.

The historic reluctance of Oriental races to indulge in reforms is little understood, but time and experience will explain. These races are old in experience and in wisdom. Therefore, they are always apprehensive of the ultimate ends to which any reform will reach, says the Detroit News. Japan has modernized rapidly. It enjoys the benefits of a very improved form of government. Out of this change develops a gradual rise in the status of the masses and one of the consequences is a discontent. Alexander II. of Russia emancipated 23,000,000 serfs in the spring of 1861, after giving all landowners and serf masters three years' notice to prepare for the event and settling his own serfs free as an example. In 1881 the sons and daughters of the emancipated serfs, having enjoyed the benefit of education and thereby discovered the wrongs of the past and the oppressions to which the poor were still subject at the hands of the nobles and great land owners, expressed their discontent by killing the emperor who had lifted them to the status of free men and women. Russian discontent was founded by Michael Bakounin, the founder of terrorism in Russia. Japan has her Bakounin in Denjiro Kotoku, a publicist of discontent. Recently a band of 26 conspirators were arrested upon the charge of plotting against the life of the emperor, and 12 of them have already been executed. These terrible blunders seem to be unavoidable consequences of a change in the status of the people of any nation, but to the superficial observer could condemn all attempts at progress because, a government is not railroading, they involve a certain element of danger.

Rats are regarded as the most dangerous propagators of the bubonic plague that is raging in the East, and the matter has been under consideration by the Russian military authorities east of the Caucasus. They believe in killing off the rats to check the spread of the disease. But some of the methods they propose to employ will arouse the special wonder even of an age which is accustomed to remarkable developments. The military inspector of the district in question has issued an order in which is set forth "the hypnotic influence of music, as employed by wizards and witches," and it is remarked that this should not be ignored. In fact, the methods by which rat-catchers can lure their prey from the hiding places are specified, and the order concludes with the assumption that "it is very possible that among the soldiers of the Caucasian military district there are such wizards." If there is a pied piper in the Russian army he may now proceed to get busy.

Ecuador has rejected the proposition to submit the boundary dispute with Peru to The Hague tribunal. Colombia has sent a force of troops into territory claimed by Peru. War seems inevitable between those perennial squabblers, Haiti and Santo Domingo. And what looks like a pretty full-fledged revolution is under way in Honduras, says the Troy Times. It would seem that there are several unruly children in the international family of the western hemisphere who need a little wholesome discipline to make them behave themselves properly.

MEXICO TO SHOW NO MERCY

Leniency for Insurrectos is at an End—Citizens of United States, Held in Jails, Are Assured Civil Trials for Sedition.

El Paso, Tex.—Two heavy charges of attempted arson were exploded under the barracks occupied by Mexican troops Wednesday night at Juarez, Mexico, and the buildings occupied by the soldiers were badly damaged. The attempt to blow up the barracks is attributed to revolutionists.

Two of a small band of insurrectos who secretly had entered the town were wounded and captured.

Assurance of the safety of all Americans now confined in Mexican prisons is given in an official statement issued at Juarez.

Americans now prisoners will be given trials in the civil courts on charges of sedition against the Mexican government, but hereafter all insurrectos, whether citizens of the United States or not, may be subject to the death penalty under summary military procedure.

The statement from the Mexican officials was issued relative to the seventeen foreigners now imprisoned in the federal jail at Casas Grandes. Fifteen of them are Americans. Pending their trials they will be given the consideration due to prisoners of war.

Colonel Cuellar, in command at Casas Grandas, is suffering from wounds, and as soon as he is able to move, the prisoners will be marched 170 miles to Chihuahua to face the civil courts.

The two other foreigners are European "soldiers of fortune" who have fought in Central American revolutions.

Colonel Manuel Tamborel, military commander at Juarez, said:

"The Americans have not been shot and will not be. Colonel Cuellar has been reported in Juarez and in Mexico City. It is the intention to give the men a fair trial. This does not mean, however, the same consideration will be given to foreigners hereafter captured."

Colonel Tamborel at first said he had been advised that forty foreigners had been captured, but later said the report was incorrect. He said he had not received the names of the Americans.

It is said the citizens of the United States now fighting in the insurrecto ranks number 600. The largest force is with Capt. Oscar G. Creighton, who has been active in blowing up railroad bridges. Government officials received orders to put a stop to the crossing of Americans from El Paso into the insurgent territory.

New York.—The sudden departure from New York Thursday of Senor Limantour, the Mexican minister of finance, after a week of conferences and negotiations, the precise nature of which has not hitherto been clear, was Friday explained by the understanding that he has succeeded in effecting a tentative plan by which substantial reforms are expected to be put in force immediately by the Mexican government, and the leaders of insurrectos, being satisfied, are to aid in restoring peace.

Calexico, Cal.—Firing from the American side of the international line, Mexican customs officials at Ilgodoaes Wednesday sent a volley into the insurrectos, the latter reply ing by firing scores of shots into the American town of Andrade. No one was wounded so fas as is known.

Late Nicaragua President Explains to Europe That This Nation Will Dominate Western Hemisphere.

Paris.—Jose Santos Zelaya, former president of the republic of Nicaragua, attacks the attitude of the United States toward the Mexican affair most violently in an interview here. It will be remembered that Mr. Zelaya was forced to relinquish his office at the time of the recent rebellion in the Central American republic.

Zelaya charges that the United States government, inspired by the prospect of commercial and financial gain, is waging a merciless war not only with Mexico, but against the whole of Central America, which is old man, who despite his eighty years plunges daily in a cold bath and rides his horse like a gentleman," as "patriotically and bravely but vainly resisting American encroachments."

INDICTED FOR FRAUD

NINE MEN ARE CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY BY FEDERAL GRAND JURY.

ONE TRUE BILL A SURPRISE

Witness Called to Aid Prosecution in Alleged $10,000,000 Alaskan Land Grab Shares Fate of Others at End of Inquiry.

Chicago.—The federal grand jury Thursday returned true bills against nine men charging them with having defrauded the government out of 10,000 acres of Alaskan coal land.

They were Albert C. Frost, former president of the Chicago & Milwaukee Electric company and promoter of other enterprises, who is now in Europe; Pierre G. Beach, former secretary of the Alaska Coastal company and at present secretary and treasurer of the A. C. Frost company; George M. Seward, receiver for the A. C. Frost company; Frank Watson of Spokane, Wash.; George A. Ball of Muncie, Ind.; Duncan M. Stewart, Seward, Alaska, formerly manager of the Southern bank of Toronto, Canada; Henry C. Osborne, Gwyn L. Francis and Francis H. Stewart of Toronto, bankers and brokers, who aided Frost.

There are now about twenty indictments pending in different parts of the country growing out of the Alaskan frauds, and more are promised as soon as these cases are out of the way. An early trial will be demanded.

The alleged conspiracy began at Chicago on April 1, 1908, it is charged, to defraud the government of large tracts of coal lands within the Cook inlet precinct and recording district in Alaska, and to obtain title of lands attached to the land office of the United States at Juneau.

"The said coal lands aggregated approximately 10,000 acres, ara of the value of $10,000,000," the indictment reads.

"It was a part of said unlawful conspiracy that by cunning persuasion and promises of pecuniary reward and by other corrupt means, persons severally qualified by law to make location upon and entry and purchase of said coal lands should be induced to make fraudulent locations of coal lands, ostensibly for the exclusive use and benefit of said coal land claimants respectively, but in truth and in fact for the use and benefit of said conspirators or some of them."

It is charged that by such means the conspirators, or some of them, hoped to receive and enjoy the benefits of a greater number of locations and entries of coal lands, and of a greater number of coal lands, than allowed by law.

The indictment of Receiver Seward is a surprise, as he had been summoned as one of the witnesses to testify before the grand jury.

INCOME TAX LAW IS UPHELD

Law Provides That All Incorporated Bodies Shall Pay Tax on Net Incomes Above $5,000.

Washington.—Without a dissenting opinion the Supreme court of the United States Monday handed down its decision that $625,000 of the corporation tax law constitutional. This case of controversy waged almost continuously since its enactment, suggested its enactment to congress.

Justice Day read the decision, in the corporation tax case suits testing the law having been brought under the section of the country. By its affirmance the provisions of the income tax law are increased annually more than $25,000,000 from the tax on the net incomes of corporations doing business for profit, in addition to which the principle of the right to levy such a tax is vindicated and the most effective test for which the government has been striving, access to the books of the big corporations and full publicity with regard to their affairs is obtainable.

The main points of the opinion, as read by Justice Day, are:

It was within the power of the senate to insert the corporation provisions in a tariff law which originated in the house.

That it is not an "excise tax on the doing of business," which is exactly the basis on which the government defended the law.

The provisions of the law are not the arbitrary exercise of a power. This was urged in argument as a reason why the law should be held unconstitutional.

The tax is regarded as measured by income rather than being a tax on income.

Of all the objections to the tax raised by suits in all parts of the country none of them was found sufficient to nullify the law.

The tax is on per cent of the entire business over and above $5,000 received from all sources.

SEE BIG PEACE PACT

ARBITRATION TREATY BETWEEN U. S. AND ENGLAND POSSIBLE.

Draft of Convention May Be Ready for Submission to Extra Session of Congress.

Washington.—It is believed here that it is possible that when congress assembles in extra session President Taft may be able to carry out his promise to submit a treaty with Great Britain providing for general and unlimited arbitration of all questions arising between that country and the United States.

It is known that Secretary of State Knox and the British ambassador, James Bryce, have discussed such a pect to the extent of exchanging opinions, but the provisions of such a treaty have not yet been committed to paper.

Now that England so far as her press is concerned, has taken the attitude of commendation of Sir Edward Grey's offer in the house of commons to conclude such an agreement with the United States, the actual consideration of a step of this nature appears to be materially clear. The fact that negotiations have proceeded so far that a treaty can be drafted and put in shape to be presented to congress shortly after the opening, raises the question to a question of unusual, almost imminent, importance.

Advocates of world-peace will avail themselves of this opportunity to urge action as the accomplishment of the century. It has been characterized as "The greatest step that can be taken towards the ultimate eradication of war."

The noteworthy feature of the treaty as suggested by President Taft in the proposed agreement to submit all questions, even those involving national honor, to arbitration. Heretofore such questions have been expressly excluded from arbitration agreements, and the pending arrangement already makes it itself the honor of being the most comprehensive movement to secure a guarantee of peace between the two countries that has ever been initiated.

The most important single difficulty that presents itself to an agreement of this kind so far as the United States senate is concerned is the insistence of that chamber on its constitutional right to pass upon every question that involves the national honor. The action of the senate on a treaty which does away with this privilege cannot, of course, be foreseen, but the attitude of the senate on this question will not be settled until it declares itself either for or against the ratification of the treaty when submitted.

STANDARD ASKS RETRACTON

John D. Archbold Telegraphs Elgin Pastor Who Assails the Company.

New York.—The Standard Oil company denies that it subscribed to corruption; fund alleged to have been used to influence William Lorimer to a seat in the senate. The following telegram was sent last Thursday to the Rev. Milton B. Williams, pastor of the First Methodist church, Elgin, Ill.:

"Dear Sir: In the morning papers of this city it is reported that at a mess meeting held in Elgin to denounce Senator William Lorimer, you have declared that the charges against the recent session of congress to obtain the acquittal of Senator Lorimer and that the money had been put up by the Standard Oil company and other big financial interests.

"As the statement is foully and wholly false so far as it concerns the Standard Oil company, I call on you for an immediate public and complete retraction and an apology for libel and slander. The best of public discussion does not protect the plain citizen, much less a minister of the gospel, in such unmeasured denunciations, from the rigors of the law.

ANARCHIST ECHO IN MURDER

Stinie Morrison, Convicted in London, Is Believed Connected With Houndsditch Gang.

London.—Stinie Morrison was found guilty of the murder of Joseph Beron and sentenced to death.

Morrison declared he killed Beron. After the verdict was returned, he exclaimed:

"I am innocent. I do not believe there is a God in Heaven."

The police tried to connect the tragedy with the Houndsditch anarchist burglar gang and the trial was one of the most sensational ever held in London.

The mutilated body of Beron was found in Clapham common early in January. The police theory was that the victim was a member of the Houndsditch crowd, and had been killed for treachery by his associates.

The trial occupied nine days. The evidence was wholly circumstantial.

Try This for Colds

Prescription Known for Results Rather than Large Quantity.

Go to your druggist and get "two ounces of Pinex and half an ounce of Concentrated Pine Compound, mix them with half a pint of good whisky. Shake well. Take one to a tablespoonful after each meal and at bedtime. Smaller doses to children according to age." Any one can prepare this at home. This is said to be the quickest, surest and best cure known to the medical profession. Be sure to get only the genuine Pinex Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes in the screw-top sealed case. If your druggist is out of stock he will quickly get it for you from his wholesale house. Don't fool with uncertain mixtures. It is risky.

EYES WOULD BURN AND STING

"It is just a year ago that my sister came over here to us. She had been here only a few weeks when her eyes began to burn and ache and sting oe if she had sand in them. Then we used all of the home remedies. She washed her eyes with salt weter, used hot tea to bothe them with, and bandaged them over night with tea leaves, but all to no purpose. She went to the drug store and got some salve, but she grew constantly worse. She was scarcely able to look in the light. At last she decided to go to a doctor, because she could hardly work any more. The doctor seid it was a very severa disease, and if she did not follow his orders closely she might lose her oyesight. He made her eyes burn and applied electricity to them, and gave her various ointments. In the two and a half or three weeks that she went to the doctor, we could see very little improvement.

"One day we had read so much how people had been helped by Cuticura that we thought we would try it, and we cannot be thankful enough that we used it. My sister used the Cuticura Pills for purifying the blood, bathed only with Cuticura Soap, and at night after washing, she anointed her eyes very geatly on the outside with the Cuticura Ointment. In one week the swelling was entirely gone from the eyes, and after a month there was no longer any mucus or watering of the eyes. She could already see better, and in six weeks she was cured." Farm Operating Cost Figured by Experts

Hamline.—An exhaustive analysis of the cost of producing farm products in Minnesota, based on statistics gathered during the years from 1902 to 1907 from five representative farms of the state, showing there is greater profit for the farmer by raising corn, potatoes and vegetables than in the production of grains, is contained in the eighteenth annual report of the agricultural experiment station made public by the director, Dean Albert F. Woods.

The report, which covers the work of the college and substations at Crookston and Grand Rapids, contains detailed accounts of the research investigations and scientific experiments being conducted by every department and division of the agricultural station as well as the financial statement of the department by divisions. In the report, which is addressed to John Lind, president of the board of regents, Dean Woods urges the necessity of further appropriations both for extending the work of the institution and the employment of more professors and experts for instructional and investigative work.

Cost of Farm Operations.

Featured in the report of the treatise are Professors Edwin C. Parker and Thomas Cooper of the department of agronomy, whose minute investigations as to the cost of farm operations extend over five years, from 1902 to 1907. The information was gathered from conditions prevailing on five farms of the state, one near Northfield, Rice county; Marshall in Lyon county; Halstad, Norman county and a section farm in Stevens county. Trips were made to the farms and close inventories were kept on all expenditures to the end that an exact estimate was secured as to the ultimate cost of everything. This was then compared with the market prices prevailing for farm products and the university investigators were then afforded a basis of comparison as to the most profitable products on the farm.

Entering into the investigation as factors governing the cost of production were the following: Man labor, horse labor, values consumed in the farm machinery, seed, twine, etc., and the rental value of the land.

Potatoes and corn were discovered to be the most costly in production, but their returns justified the outlay of expenditures as the net profit per acre worth $50 was $24.43, while in those cases where fertilizers were used and the potato raising was carried on on more intensive scale the net profit per acre was 54.2 per cent on an acre worth $50.

Summary of the Report.

The article concludes with a summary of the findings of the investigators as follows:

For the years 1904-1907 the average monthly wages paid farm laborers during the eight "crop-season" months, April 1 to November 30, were approximately as follows: Northfield (1905-1907), $26.16; Marshall, $26.64; Halsted, $25.65, and the large farm in northwestern Minnesota, $26.77. During the months of December, January, February and March the average monthly wage at Northfield was $15.80; Marshall, $14.26; Halstad, $11.69, and the large farm in northwestern Minnesota, $14.36.

The cost of farm board per month for one laborer averaged for the three years, 1905-1907, amounted to $14.36 at Northfield, $12.73 at Marshall, $11.58 at Halstad and $10.02 on the large grain farm in northwestern Minnesota. The average cost per acre was 47.9 cents at Northfield, 42.4 cents at Marshall, 38.6 cents at Halstad, and 33.1 cents for the large farm in northwestern Minnesota; the average cost of board per month on all farms was $12.65 per month and per day, 42 cents.

The average cash value per hour of farm labor on all farms for the three years 1905-1907, is 11.2 cents for December, January, February and March, and 12.7 cents for the "crop-season" months, April to November, inclusive. While wages are lower in the winter months, the number of hours worked by the laborers is much less than in the summer—thus there is little difference between summer and winter in the cost per hour of farm labor. This cost is based upon the wages paid to men plus the cost of board.

Cost of Farm Work-Horse.

The average annual cost of maintaining a farm work-horse during the years 1904-1907 amounted to $90.40 at Northfield, $87 at Marshall, $75.07 at Halstad and $65.23 for the large farm in northwestern Minnesota. This cost is based on the following items of expense: Interest on investment, depreciation, harness depreciation, shoeing, feed, labor, and miscellaneous expense.

The labor of the farm horse comprises a large proportion of the cost of crop production. The average cost per hour of horse labor, 1904-1907, was 9.25 cents at Northfield, 8.36 cents at Marshall, 7.32 cents at Halstad and 7.48 cents on the large farm in Northwestern Minnesota. The annual cost of maintaining the farm horse has been divided by the total number of hours of work in a year to obtain the cost per hour.

The depreciation in value of all classes of farm machinery is approximately 7.3 per cent annually. The annual depreciation of the most universally used farm machinery is as follows: Grain binders, 7.91 per cent; grain drills, 6.76 per cent; corn binders, 10.03 per cent; corn cultivators, 7.25 per cent; mowers, 7.8 per cent; hayrafts, 7.3 per cent, sulky plows, 8.4 per cent; wagons, 4.89 per cent, harrows, 8.72 per cent, and harness, 6.17 per cent.

The annual values consumed per acre in a number of the most universally used farm machines are as follows: Grain binders, 18.1 cents; grain drills, 7.5 cents; corn binders, 82.6 cents; corn cultivators, 15.5 cents; mowers, 20.6 cents; hayrakes, 8.5 cents; plows, 8.7 cents, and harrows, 1.7 cents. The term "values consumer" includes the machinery cost items of depreciation, interest on investment, and repairs. The average annual acreage covered by each class of machinery is divided into the total cost to obtain the cost consumed per acre.

The value in farm machinery consumed per acre for the corn, grain and hay crop is as follows: Northfield, corn, $1.748; grain, 51.7 cents; hay, 54.8 cents; Marshall, corn, $1.448, grain, 55.8 cents; hay, 47.7 cents; Halstad, corn, $1.143; grain, 37.2 cents; hay, 29 cents; large farm in Northwestern Minnesota, grain, 27.7 cents; threshing outfit, 33.5 cents; hay, 20 cents.

Cost of Field Crops.

The total cost per acre of producing a number of the staple crops of Minnesota is as follows, including seed, labor of men and horses, twine, machinery depreciation, and land rental: Corn husked from the standing stalks, Northfield, $11.568; Marshall, $9.662; corn cut, shocked and shredded, Northfield, $15.297; corn grown thickly and siloed, Northfield, $20.627; Minnesota Agricultural Experiment station, $19.187; flax seed, threshed from the windrow, Northfield, $10.072; Halstad, $7.272; large farm in Northwestern Minnesota, $6.283; fodder corn, cut and shocked in the field, Northfield, $10.733; Halstad, $8.912; hay, timothy and clover, one cutting, Northfield, $6.185; Marshall, $5.553; Halstad, $4.567; mangels, Minnesota Agricultural Experiment station, $32.682; oats, fall plowed, Northfield, $9.854; Marshall, $9.039; Halsted, $7.110; large farm in Northwestern Minnesota, $6.073; potatoes, machine production, large farm in Northwestern Minnesota, $26.366; intensive culture, $37.721; wheat, fall plowing, Northfield, $9.861; Marshall, $8.389; Halstad, $6.977; large farm in Northwestern Minnesota, $6.056.

The net feeding value of forage crops per acre, as determined from statistical and feeding investigations, is $8.69 per acre for a 2¼-ton yield of timothy and clover, $4.79 per acre for a 3½-ton yield of cured fodder corn; while the net loss on ten tons to the acre of ensilage is 39 cents, and for a 20-ton yield of mangels, $6.68. One dollar expended in capital and labor in hay production gives a return of $2.21; fodder corn, $1.38; ensilage, 98 cents, and mangels, 79 cents. Under conditions of higher feed values and relatively higher prices for feeds than are assumed in table XXI., these relative net values or net losses would not apply.

Cost of Potato Crop.

Potato production by machine methods has greater possibilities in Minnesota for large profits per acre than grain crops. The cost per acre of producing potatoes as determined from a large potato farm in Clay county, Minnesota, is $26.37, this cost including seed, labor, machinery cost, land rental, and the cost of labor and materials to spray the crop three times for blight and the potato beetle.

The average yield per acre was 127 bushels, which, at 40 cents per bushel, gives a gross income per acre of $50.80, or a net profit of $24.43. The rate of profit on land valued at $50 per acre is 48.9 per cent. Where fertilizers and more intensive methods are used the cost is increased to $37.72, with an increase in yield to 162 bushels per acre, and at 40 cents per bushel give a net profit of 54.2 per cent on $50 land.

The cost per acre of fall plowing, as averaged from 4,773 acres at Northfield, Rice county, is $1.256; from 5.947 acres at Marshall, Lyon county, $1.141; from 7,186 acres at Halstad, Norman county, $1.133, and from 5,363 acres on the large farm in northwestern Minnesota, 92.4 cents.

The cost per acre of fall plowing, as averaged from 4,773 acres at Northfield, Rice county, is $1.256; from 5,947 acres at Marshall, Lyon county, $1.141; from 7,186 acres at Halsted, Norman county, $1.13, and from 5,363 acres on the large farm in northwestern Minnesota, 92.4 cents.

The average farm price December 1, 1902-1907, in Minnesota for barley is 40 cents per bushel; corn, 38.5; flax, 96.3; hay, $8.05 per ton; oats, 29.2 cents per bushel; potatoes, 41.5 cents, and wheat, 74.2 cents.

At these prices the amount of product per acre necessary to cover the cost of producing field crops is as follows: Barley, 20.53 bushels; corn, 27.11 bushels; flaxseed, 7.78 bushels; hay, 0.92 ton; oats, 30.48 bushels; potatoes, 63.51 bushels; wheat, 9.78 bushels.

Value of Land a Factor.

When interest on the investment in land is considered as an item of expense, the cost of producing wheat on $20 land is $7.18, and on land valued at $100 the cost increased to $11.98, an increase of 66.9 per cent in cost. Potatoes can be produced on $50 land for $20.266, on $100 land for $29.366, an increase of 9.7 per cent in cost. Fifteen bushels of wheat, at the average farm price of 66 cents, when grown on the $20 land will return a net profit of 13.8 per cent and on $100 land will give a net loss of 2 per cent. A yield of 38.8 bushels must be obtained on the $100 land to yield the same rate of profit as could be secured on the cheap land with 15 bushels. Potatoes yielding 100 bushels to the acre, and valued at 39 cents per bushel on the farm, when grown on $50 land will return a net profit of 24.5 per cent, and a net profit of 9.6 per cent on $100 land.

Wheat and other grain crops grown on high-priced land can not compete with grain grown on cheap land, for such crops are not adapted to intensive culture, as are the corn, potato and onion crops, or as are forage crops fed to productive milch cows near good markets.

The average length of the working day for men on the farms at Northfield, southeastern Minnesota, is 8.94 hours, with 3.64 hours for Sunday work. At Marshall, in southwestern Minnesota, 8.66 hours for the week days and 3.05 hours for Sunday, and at Halstad, in northwestern Minnesota, 8.10 hours for the week days and 2.76 hours for Sundays. The average length of the working day for horses at Northfield, southeastern Minnesota, is 3.03 hours; at Marshall, southwestern Minnesota, 3.29 hours; and at Halstad, northwestern Minnesota, 3.14 hours.

Cost of Keeping Cow.

Milch cows in Minnesota were maintained at an average annual cost per head of $40.97, exclusive of the cost of shelter, which will range from $4 to $8. The total cost was made up of the following items: Grain, $6.89; roughage, $10.28; pasture, $4.92; labor, $17,038; interest on investment, $1.846. The average annual value of the product from milch cows (550 in number) was $50.95, leaving a net value of product of $9.98.

The amount of grain fed annually to the average cow concerning which statistics were collected was 921 pounds; roughage, 4,973 pounds. The average cow receiving these amounts of feed gave an annual milk yield of 4,950 pounds, containing 186.49 pounds of butter fat.

One dollar expended in cost of maintenance of milch cows at Northfield gave a return of $1.34; at Marshall, $1.15, and at Halstad, $1.14.

Individual herds show a much wider difference between cost and value of product. One of the best dairy herds at Northfield gave a return of $1.41 for every dollar expended, and one of the poorest herds at Marshall gave a return of 99 cents to the dollar. While a better market at Northfield than on the other routes has some influence in determining the greater profit in dairying in that region, more productive types of cows and better management are the chief factors.

The average labor cost of feeding and managing three sows and 19 pigs amounted to $30.37 per year.

The average annual labor cost of feeding and managing a flock of 48 sheep amounted to $20.34.

Yearlings and 2-year-old cattle on pasture made an annual gain of 271.6 pounds, and calves averaged 182.7 pounds. The cost of production of pasture per acre on $70 land is about $4.07.

The average cost of feeding a farm work horse a year was $51.39. The average quantity of grain fed per horse was 4,686 pounds, and the average amount of roughage, 6,346 pounds.

Minnesota Legislature

Proceedings at the Minnesota State Capitol for the Past Week.

No Free Car Rides.

St. Paul, March 15.—Governor Eberhart vetoed the Fuchs bill, which permitted street railway companies to grant free transportation to policemen and firemen.

St. Paul, March 17.—Following an effort by Governor Eberhart to induce the Republican senators in the Minnesota legislature to redeem their party pledges, and pass a reapportionment bill, the governor met with the Republican members of the upper body.

There were only 14 present, most of the absentees being listed against reapportionment and by inference repudiating the attempt on the part of the Republican executive to carry out the definite pledge of the party made in its platform.

On the eve of the fight in the senate for reapportionment, the enemies to the proposed measure claim 33 members and the Democratic senators, who have led the opposition, have a good chance of winning their victory, with the result still in doubt.

May Call Extra Session.

If they do, an extra session, called by the governor to take up the matter, is imminent and is being considered. The situation is a tense one, and will be a severe test of the sincerity of the Republican party of the state, which will be on trial.

Temperance Measure Up.

Local option in cities of the fourth class not governed by a home rule charter was favored by the house. By a vote of 80 to 27 the lower branch of the legislature passed the temperance committee bill allowing cities of less than 10,000 population to vote on the license question after a petition signed by 25 per cent of the voters has been presented. Several attempts were made to amend the bill but without success. Rufus P. Morton offered to amend by allowing the question to be put on a petition signed by 10 per cent of the voters. J. N. Johnson then offered an amendment lowering the percentage to 20 per cent.

The Hanlon bill, making it a gross misdemeanor to sell or give liquor to minors and drunkards was passed by a vote of 99 to 15.

The house passed the bill making it a misdemeanor to induce a minor to enter a saloon and to carry liquor to minors. The Clague bill giving conductors police power over intoxicated people on board trains was also passed.

A new policemen and firemen bill, allowing municipalities to enter into contracts with street railway companies for transportation at reduced rates, is being drawn by Representative Fuchs as a substitute for the free transportation bill vetoed by Governor Eberhart.

The house passed the bill introduced by Representatives R. C. Dunn, O'Neil, Webb and MacKenzie, appropriating $8,000 to experiment in reclamation work in northern Minnesota. It provides for the reclaiming of 10 40-acre tracts of state swamp lands and placing the reclaimed land in the market for sale.

Representative Kelley introduced an anti-tipping bill. It not only prohibits the receiving of gratuities but also the giving of them.

A bill was introduced to prohibit saloons within one mile of the university on the east side of the river, or within 1,500 feet of any school building or to have more than five saloons in one block on one side of a street within the patrol limits when the saloons faced the other side of the street not in the patrol limits.

The committee on Indian affairs, Senator Olson, chairman, recommended for passage a bill pensioning all the participants in the Minnesota Indian war of 1862. The pension law as it now stands gives pensions only to those who were disabled.

St. Paul, March 18.—Ignoring the representations of the governor of the state, and going on record as being opposed to any kind of reapportionment by voting down a motion to recommit the Congdon reapportionment bill to the committee for further amendment, the senate defeated the Congdon measure by the decisive vote of 36 to 27.

The almost solid vote of the Democrats of the senate, aided by a Republican faction, accomplished the overturning of one of the most definite pledges of the Republican platform.

The legislature is facing the possibility of an extra session, and to avoid it Republican members of the senate are bestirring themselves for the purpose of preparing a new bill which will give some sort of fair reapportionment and yet at the same time avoid the falling of the big stick which the governor has taken out for the first time since he went into office.

How They Voted.

The roll-call was as follows: Noes—Anderson, Bedford, Benson, Carpenter, Cashman, Clague, Collier, Cook, C. F., Cooke, L. O., Dale, Donaldson, Duee, Duxbury, Glotzbach, Handlan, Haycraft, Klein, Lende, McGrath, Marden, Moonan, Murray, Nelson, Odell, Olson, Peterson, Poehler, Putnam, Rockne, Schaller, Stebbins, Swanson, Thoe, Van Hoven, Weis, Works. Total, 36.

Ayes—Ahmann, Boyle, Cheadle, Denegre, Dunn, Elwell, Fosseen, Gunderson, Gunn, Dwinnell, Froshang, Hackney, Henson, Johnson, C. D. Johnson, V. L., Johnston, L'Herault, Pauly, Pugh, Rustad, Sageng, Saugstad, Sullivan, G. H. Sullivan, J. D., Sundberg, Wallace, Wilson. Total, 27.

With the defeat of reapportionment an important factor, tonnage tax went down to defeat in the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 70 to 48. The final vote was taken after a debate which lasted more than four hours. C. A. Congdon, R. C. Dunn, L. C. Spooner, Albert Pfaender, J. A. A. Burnquist and J. J. Moriarity opposed the measure while J. N. Johnson and Thomas Frankson, the authors of the bill were the only members advocating its passage. The big majority of the Democratic members were against the bill. Only five members voted for it and of these four declared that they had been pledged to its support. Eighteen Democrats opposed it. Albert Pfaender, the floor leader of the minority party came out unalterably opposed to the measure. He spoke for the Democratic organization and sounded the doom of the proposed law. Mr. Pfaender in eloquent terms recalled the position taken by the late Governor Johnson in his veto of the bill two years ago and declared that if there were no other reasons, this alone would lead him to oppose tonnage tax. Other members as W. I. Nolan and Lawrence Wisniewski declared that the defeat of reapportionment turned them against the measure.

St. Paul, March 20.—The defense opened its case in the state drainage investigation. Peter E. Hanson of Litchfield, former secretary of state, was called to explain his connection with ditch work prior to 1904. He testified principally as to the Hebron ditch which had been declared a failure. He said lack of funds was to blame for the failure.

The committee decided to employ an expert engineer to inspect all the state ditches under controversy and report before the close of the legislative session.

Mrs. Chapman and J. W. Serff, Edward Mosher and J. E. Stuart of Aitkin all testified that the drainage work in that district is satisfactory. Mr. Stuart was employed by Foley & Gleeson as foremen on ditches 86 and 68. He testified that the earth was spongy-like, which accounted for the filling up of the trenches making them shallow. A. C. McMullan of Marshall county, who resides near ditch No. 83, testified that although the ditch is satisfactory the contractors are exceedingly slow in completing it and that as a result he is forced to go ten miles out of his way to get the nearest market. This is caused by the fact that a bridge has been torn down during the construction of the ditch.

Senator Elwell introduced a bill to make the university a health district.

Two important bills relating to the conservation of state minerals and lands were decided upon at a meeting of the house committee of public lands. One authorizes the people of the state to vote on a constitutional amendment which would create a state land department separate from the state auditor's office. The other provides for the appointment of a legislative commission to investigate the state resources and recommend an organization which will conserve these resources to future generations. The proposed bill calls attention to the value of the three million acres of state land and the great mineral possibilities of this property. It declares that the state has already received $24,000,000 in royalties from iron mines on its lands and that approximately $150,000,000 additional will be received in the future.

A reorganization of the state forestry board is provided for in a bill introduced by the committee on forestry. Under its provisions the state board is to be made up of the director of the state forestry school, the dean of the state agricultural colleges, three members to be suggested by the board of regents of the state university and four members to be recommended by the state forestry association, state agricultural society, state horticultural society and the state game and fish commission. This board is to appoint an expert as state forester. The bill embodies a drastic regulation in the forestry districts to prevent fires. The bill carries an appropriation of $150,000 a year.

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Elwood, Ind.—"Your remedies have cured me and I have only taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was sick three months and could not walk. I suffered all the time. The doctors said I could not get well without an operation, for I could hardly stand the pains in my sides, especially my right one, and down my right leg. I began to feel better when I had taken only one bottle of Compound, but kept on as I was afraid to stop too soon."—Mrs. Sadie Mullen, 2728 N. B. St., Elwood, Ind.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

GRAND VOYAGE TO THE POLE.

Make Good.

"Wake up, Cull," says the burglar, shaking the man by the shoulder.

The man wakes up, and jumps up, too.

"I went troo dis house las' week an' got $100 an' a bum gold watch," explained the burglar; "an' de paper said det you said your loss was $100 en' joolry to the amount o' five or six hundred."

"Ye-yes?"

"Well, make good, sport. Me perdner det was watchin' on de outside made me cough up de difference between what I got and what you said I got. Now, you got to make good. You can't beat me dat way."—Judge's Library.

A Good Samaritan.

"Once, when I was ill, he gave me a punch in the stomach."

"I don't see why you should be grateful for that."

"It was a milk punch. They strengthen, you know."

Short Trip.

"Twobble started to read Doctor Eliot's Harvard Classics."

"How far did he get before stopping?"

"As far as the bookcase."

Reckless.

"Pipps doesn't care what he buys on credit."

"No. You would think that every day he lives is his last day on earth."

"The Memory Lingers"

POSTUM CEREAL CO., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Pioneer Dies Suddenly.

Ulen.—Paul Van Vlissinger died very suddenly while on his way from his house to the postoffice in the town of Hitterdal. He went into a hardware store on his way, where he expired in a few minutes from a severe hemorrhage of the lungs. He was 70 years old and a pioneer of Clay county.

He served as county auditor and county commissioner several years, and later was cashier of the Moorhead National bank and cashier of the Security State Bank of Hitterdal.

Robber Suspect Breaks Jail.

Walker.—Harry Colby, who was in the county jail to stand trial for robbery, escaped by securing a duplicate key to the padlock which held the heavy swinging bars of one of the windows, and Sheriff DeLury has been unable to locate his man. There was an Indian in the jail at the time, who was serving 60 days for drunkenness, but he refused to escape and aroused the jailer and informed him of the escape. Colby was arraigned in justice court for robbing a companion.

ST. BONIFACE SCHOOL BURNED.

Valuable Library and Indian Dictionary Lost in Winnipeg Fire.

Winnipeg, Manitoba.—St. Boniface industrial school was destroyed by fire. Eighty occupants of the building escaped. A valuable library of 5,000 volumes, as well as an Indian dictionary in manuscript, was destroyed. The dictionary represented the work of pioneer missionary priests for 100 years. The loss from the fire is estimated at $125,000.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Pennington County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

As soon as your land is fit for working sow your wheat. The early sown wheat is the surest crop.

Be it said to the credit of the country newspapers, that they did not bite at the free paper bait thrown them by the paper trust, but are putting up a fight in the interest of the farmers of the Northwest, against that Canada reciprocity treaty.

Some of the daily papers that favor reciprocity with Canada was so sure of its passage, they began to notify the consumers, "that it may not imediatly lessen the cost of living but would eventually." They want to let the consumer down as light as possible until the meat and milling trusts get their snout into the trough, then they will let them and the prodncers, "root hog or die."

With this issue we complete the publication of Volnm X of THE SUNBEAM, which makes the paper ten years old to day. It was established by the present owner and publisher and has never changed the name at the head of its editorial colum. We was poor when we started the paper and have about held our own ever since. If a young man is looking for a get rich quick job we would not advise him to go into a country newspaper, but if he is just looking for steady work it is as good a job as he can get for he will always find something to do. We expect to continue in the business as we never had any great longing for great riches and think we are as well off as Rockefeller, and are sure our stomach is in better condition than his is.

A fellow made the remark the other day that he had got a letter saying that he had another years extension of time, to make his final proof and that he was going to let the fools pay the taxes and he was going to keep his land as a homestead. All right old man, We are one of the fools that pays taxes and we propose to try some of you smarties a string, when your seven years are out. Take this as your notice and if you are sure of your friends opinion stick to it, and let the fools continue to pay taxes, but you may strike a man that is as smart as you are that is willing to pay taxes on your farm.

PLEASE EXPLAIN.

On the same day Congress adjourned (March 4) without adopting Canadian Reciprocity, wheat bounded two and one fourth to two and three eighths cents a bushel in Minneapolis while the Liverpool market closed a trifle lower." How do President Taft and Jnmn J. Hill at all account for that, in the light of the claim that "the price of wheat is governed by the export price and would not be affected by reciprocity?" The fact is that the price of wheat in the Northwest is "a local issne," and would be directly affected by Canadian Reciprocity. Will Mr. Hill rise and explain who is the "ignoramus or the demagogue?"—Northwester Agriculturist.

Now if the U. S. Senate can hold old Taft down and head him off from railroading that treaty through the Northwestern farmers will owe them a debt of gratitude.

Reaping What You Sow.

Re apportionment was defeated by a vote of 27 for 36 against in the senate. There is nothing like setting county option men to the legislature from northern Minnesota. But they don't get county option-or anything else. Do you remember we told you about this last September. Did we not tell you the result, when we told you if you put a county option man in that senate that all Northern Minnesota would get was a manority vote for county option? You are now reaping the crop you sowed in Septem ber and here it is 9 0 against 9 0. We do not blame the representatives for the poor fellows are doing the best they can, but they are in a hopeless manority.

STEENERSON EXPLAINS.

On Tuesday we received the following letter from Congressman Steenerson, which we publish with pleasure, as it settles the question of when the present holders of homesteads on this reservation became tax payers.

Washington D.C.
March 13, 1910.

THE SUNBEAM,
Sunbeam Minn.

Gentelmen:

For the information of settlers on lands in the Eleven Towns, I have the honor to advise you that the time in which to make payments and proof on ALL such land expires on March 26th, 1912.

Hoping you will give the publicity of this matter special attention, I remain Yours very truly,

H. STEENERSON.

The above removes the bone of contention, so far as the settlers up here, who have or have not made final proof, are concerned, as a man who makes his final proof in May 1911, will not have to pay taxes any sooner than the one who proves up in March 1912, as all lands are listed for taxation May 1st each year. Cut this out and paste it in your hat so you will not have to write and ask the same question next week.

To Subscribers.

The fact that the postoffice department will not permit weekly papers to circulate in the mails at pound rates when subscriptions are more than one year in arrears is an old story. But it may be news to some that this order is being rigidly enforced and all publishers must cut off all delinquent subscribers. The SUNBEAM, as well as nearly all publishers, regret the situation, but there is no way of evading it and we ask every subscriber to kindly put his account in shape so as to satisfy the postal department. We would sincerely regret cutting off any subscriber, and if it is not convenient for any one to pay cash we will gladly accept a note for the amount payable next fall, and credit your subscription so as to comply with the rules. We hope that everyone will realize our position and help us out.

Queen Elizabeth and Her Portraits. The modern grievance of the illustrious against the photographer of the halfpenny paper has a parallel so far back as the early part of Queen Elizabeth's reign, when her minister, Cecil, issued a proclamation against the circulation of all favored likenesses of her majesty. It advised that, as her majesty had perceived "a great number of her loving subjects to be much grieved with the errors and deformities" displayed in many popular portraits of herself, she had been pleased, "being herein, as it were, overcome with the continual requests of so many of her nobility and lords, to enjoined that some cunning person should shortly make a portrait of her person or visage to be participated to others for the comfort of her loving subjects."

"The Only Thing That Will Relieve Neuralgia."

The piercing pains of Neuralgia, which often follows a bad cold or la Grippe, are frequently almost unbearable and few medicines afford any relief to the sufferer.

"I am a rural mail carrier and have been a user of the Dr. Miles' medicines for years.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills can't be beaten. They are the only thing I have found that will relieve my neuralgia and I have tried most everything, besides medicine from the doctor. I am willing to say that what the Anti-Pain Pills did for me."

CHARLES HILDERBRANDT,
Box 205 Woodvill. Ohio

If you, like Mr. Hilderbrandt, "have tried most everything" in vain, why not do as he did, fight your aches and pains with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. Let the pills bear the brunt of the battle. No matter how stubborn the conditions, they will come out victorious.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills stand on their record, which is a long list of cures extending back a generation.

Druggists everywhere sell them. If first package fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.

The X Ray.

The X ray, so called, was discovered on Oct. 8, 1895, by Professor W. C. Roentgen. The professor was experimenting with a Crookes vacuum tube, electrically excited, and enveloped in a black covering, when he noticed that some of the rays proceeding from the tube passed through the black paper and affected a fluorescent screen some two or three yards away. In such way did his great discovery come to him, when he was least expecting it.

Friendships.

There are three friendships which are advantageous and three which are hurtful. Friendship with the upright, friendship with the sincere and friendship with the man of much information—these are advantageous. Friendship with the man of specious airs, friendship with the insincere and friendship with the glib tongued—these are injurious.—Confucius.

The Hunting of the Tahr.

Of all the ways of hunting surely that of the hillmen of Carlsrad is the strangest. This, according to Major the Hon. C. G. Bruce, in "Twenty Years in the Himalayas," is their method of killing the tahr, a local species of goat: Villagers driven the tahr into deep nullahs with most precipitous sides, out of which there are certain well known tahr runs, they proceed to cover these runs where the ground is most difficult with mats made of split bamboos which have been previously well drenched in water. The result is the mats freeze and become as slippery as glass. Then they frighten the herd and drive them over the mats, with the result that they are precipitated down cliffs and that the Garhwali pick up the remained perhaps twelve basketfuls."

Mostly Hail.

A New Yorker bought one of those fine old colonial pieces down in Virginia, principally on account of the glowing description of the real estate agent and on information from friends. When he went down to see his mansion he was much impressed by the great pillared portico, spacious porch and particularly the great hall running from the front to the back of the house.

He inspected the place and came to "Mostly Hail."

"What shall you name it?" he was asked.

"I think," he replied, "I shall call it Mostly Hail."—Sotnday Evening Post.

Philadelphia Is Not So Slow.

"Mother," sold a thoughtful Boston child, "is Philadelphia older than Boston is?"

"Of course not, my son. The first settlement was made in Charlestown in 1630, while William Penn did not arrive on the site of Philodelphia until fifty-two years later."

"That was always my impression, mother. How is it, then, that Philadelphia is mentioned in the Bible, while Boston is not?"—Boston Star.

Making the King's Bed.

Among the duties of the yeomen of the guard in the olden times was the singular one of making the king's bed every night and searching it for any dangerous weapon that might be concealed therein in the detriment of his majesty's sacred person. First one of these stalwart soldiers had "to tumble up and down" the mattress. Then "the esquire for the body" took the sheets and rolled them on his arm or "stirpped" them through his hands. Wherever the yeoman touched the bedclothes they had to make the sign of the cross and kiss the place, which must have rather prolonged the ceremony! Finally, when the bed had been made, with much quaint but interminable "ritual," the said esquire sprinkled it with holy water, and then the mortal tediousness retired to a supper provided for them "without the troveres"—i. e., across the corridor.

Henry VIII. greatly embellished the yeomen's costume and presented them with cloth of gold horse cloths valued at 45 a yard. His first queen, Katherine of Aragon, by the way, had a bedyguard all to herself, which, after her divorce, passed into the service of Anne Boleyn.—Richard Davey's "The Tower of London."

When Tolstoy Tried to Fly.

From earliest childhood Tolstoy was remarkably observant of the things that were going on in the world around him. Thus, while still in his teens, he had him taken an interest in the art of flying that was too practical to suit his devotel mother. With characteristic thoroughness he invented a design of his own and with equally characteristic courage proceeded to put it to an immediate test from a second story window. But the bay, who was afterward to find food for thought for the whole civilized world, was not destined to make his mark as an infant neroplanist. He fell instantly to the ground, and, though by great good fortune no bones were actually broken, the concussion was so great that young Tolstoy afterward slept for sixteen hours on end.

Killing the Bad Taste.

"Maybe I won't have to take medicine again, and even if I do have to take it maybe the doctor will prescribe an ambrosial mixture, but if I should be condemned for my sins to swallow what doses I know how I'll take them," a city lolesman volunteered. "A man who was doctoring himself in the drug store showed me the way.

"The druggist had mixed a particularly obnoxious dose. The man before taking it asked for crushed ice. The druggist boy brought it, several spoonfuls nearly perverted. The sick man held that in his mouth until it melted, after which the medicine seemed as mild as tea.

"I always prepare my mouth that way for a disagreeable medicine," the man said. "The ice numbs the nerves, and the medicine slips down without leaving any taste, good or bad."—Exchange.

PATENT OFFICE COURT OF CLAIMS

Decision rendered in favor of Webster's International Dictionary as to priority of claim to patents. Full text of opinion of the court, comprising many pages, will be furnished to any one who writes for it.

We are of the opinion that the allegation which comes out against the merits of the case, has been accomplished and the result that the invention has been thoroughly established, has been secured in as full a degree as has been attained in the largest and science investigations. Knew Just How.

Many years ago in Paris at the first presentation of a tragedy that had for its closing scene the murder of a Swedish king which had taken place nearly half a century earlier all went well till the murder scene came on, when a very dignified old gentleman in that stage box showed signs of strong dissatisfaction and at length called out angrily:

"Absurd! They've got it all wrong!"

The manager himself heard this piece spoken comment, and, being naturally disturbed by so unseemly a condemnation, he sought out the critic and politely begged to know what fault he had to find with it.

"Why, my good sir," cried the old man, with an air of authority, "the whole grouping of the scene is incorrect! You have made them kill the king to the right of the door, whereas we murdered him on the left!"

The Tea Chewers.

"Chewing tea comes from Siam," said a traveler. "They call it miang. It is a plug, like chewing tobacco, and it has a villainous smell. This smell is due to the fermentation it has undergone. The tea that the Siamese employ for chewing purposes is very coarse, rank plant. It is gathered like ordinary tea, but the leaves after being compressed into plugs are buried for fifteen days. They ferment during burial. On their resurrection they are very, very fragrant indeed. The Siamese hostmen chew tea. The rickshaw men chew it. The litterateurs chew it. They say it makes them work better. This is probably the truth, for I chewed a plug myself in Africa, and it exhilarated me strikingly. But the aftermath was bad—a headache, smarting eyes and nervous depression."—Washington Post.

The Donkey's Choice.

The vexed question of the future life of animals has troubled the Mohammedan, as it has other religions. The question, it seems, was considered by Allah a long time ago, and all the animals were asked if they wished to enter paradise. They at once said yes, except the donkeys. These were cautious and asked if little boys went to heaven. The answer being yes, they replied, "In that case we prefer to go to the other place." S. H. He Could Wield an Ax.

The skill of the old M. inc shipbuilders in the use of the axe and broadax was wonderful. One old time yarn is of a carpenter who applied very drunk. It a shipyard for employment. In order to have a little fun with him the foreman set him to give a proof of his skill by hewing out a wooden bolt with no chopping block but a stone. The carpenter accomplished his difficult task without inverting the keen edge of the broadax and showed the foreman it might handle both. Then he brought the ax down with a terrific blow that shattered its edge upon the stone. "I can hew that rate all day without a hitch," he hiccoughed, "but I'll be blamed if I can make the ax stick in it when I get through." The story runs that the foreman lost no time in employing such a workman.

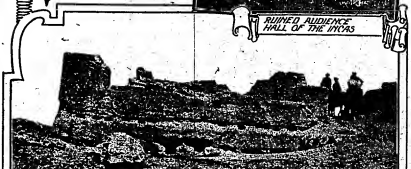
WHERE INDIANS WORSHIPPED B.C. 2000



By MABEL LOOMIS TODD

TEMPLE OF THE SUN FROM A DISTANCE

CENTURIES before the benvolent if autocratic sway of the Incas, in the days of prehistoric Peru, Pachacamac, "creator god of the world," "ha who animates the universe," "world adjuster," was worshiped by primitive Indians. And despite the magnificent temple of Tahuantco, that marvelous and enigmatic structures near Titicaca, 13,000 feet above sea level, and the splendors of Qorikancha's golden courts at Cuzco, the Pachacamac temple by the sea was regarded as more awe inspiring than either of the others. To its oracles all pilgrims flocked. But during the period immediately before the Spanish conquest these three rivaled one another in richness and sanctity.

Little is left of the old glories today. Walls rise, still showing bits of mural painting, preserved in the hot and dry desert air; indications of terraces remain, of courts and avenues, a labyrinth of city streets; and thousands of skulls whiten the surrounding sands, grewsome reminders of the multitude who formerly lived and worshiped at these ruined shrines.

Peru has few merely tourist visitors, and of these fewer still see Pachacamac, the trip from Lima being considered long and hard. But for one accustomed to the saddle (and little of South America can be otherwise save) Pachacamac is comfortably accessible.

The simplest route is by the excellent electric cars to the pretty suburb Chorrillos, beyond Miraflores, where horses should have been ordered in advance to await the traveler.

Over rondside walls of mud or adobe brick wild nasturtiums clamber in a riot of color; here, high hills rise at one side; the battlefield of San Juan, famous in the Chilean war, and here and there populous haciendas are passed before the open country is reached. A mile or two of jungle-like swamp follows, rich in interest for lovers of birds and growing things. But beyond this fertile tangle one may canter along the hard sand beach for nearly all the remaining miles. Sea birds in such myriads that the sun is actually darkened as they fly up at our approach, seven or eight lines of superb Pacific rollers breaking in thunderous surf, a rampart of high sand mountains just back of the beach—and in two or three hours appear the familiar walls and dun-colored remains of Inca occupation.

For Pachacamac has been the scene of several superimposed civilizations, whereby its study is rendered more confusing than that of other ancient shrines. The many graves and their contents were seemingly at variance—chronologically isocoexistent—with fragments of pottery and implements found near by. But it is certain that pre-Inca Indians had here their chief temple, and that when these all-conquering nobles with their hordes of willing workers arrived triumphantly upon the scene, so far from trying to wipe out the old faith they treated it with much respect, perhaps from prudential motives, building their great temple to the sun on the hill above, but still permitting, even encouraging, continued worship of the creator god, Pachacamac, so that the temple's religious prestige did not suffer under the Incas.

The Sun temple seems to have been built to include this earlier sanctuary, which shows an amicable relationship between the older cult and that worship of the sun which the Incas ultimately imposed on conquered tribes.

A beautiful site these early dwellers chose for their rites. Although desert bounded on north and east, the temples themselves sit in sand by whose encroaching drifts they are now half covered, towering above the blue Pacific, and southward lies the green and fertile Valley of Lurin, watered by its river of the same name, off whose mouth rise rugged islands, the wings of myriad sea birds flashing in the sunshine as they dip and circle and soar about the lofty cliffs.

Only 2½ miles wide at the coast, the little Lurin valley narrows rapidly toward the interior. A mile and a half distant lies the village, on the same side of the river as the ruins. Only 600 inhabitants now belong here, but perhaps 2,000 can be counted in the whole parish. Modern Pachacamac holds about 800, its parish 2,000. Trees of many kinds abound—the willow (Salix) always prominent, with cana (canillo) and trees bearing the chirimoya, palta, lucuma and other fruits. In old days maize and cotton were extensively cultivated here and in many of the earliest graves seed pods of cotton have been found. It still grows easily in a soil supposingly rich when irrigated. A nearby hacienda, apparently containing the most extensive of the ancient burial places, is chiefly devoted to the fluffy bolls and brown stalks of this plant.

The most scholarly and reliable authority upon Pachacamac history is undoubtedly Dr. Max Uhle, now head of the new National museum at Lima. To him is due elucidation of many puzzling anachronisms in this rich region, and it was very good fortune to be accompanied on this trip by Doctor Uhle—to whom every wall and angle and brick has absolute significance.

The name of the creator god, as applied to sanctuary, town and river, came into use only about 170 years before the Spanish conquest. No older name has yet been found.

Burial places always bring rich returns to those who can interpret their annals. Here is an enormous number of graves, not less than 60,000 to 80,000, among them a few stall-like cells, much cruder and earlier than the majority. Graves are found in the open, in houses, in temples, most of which have, years ago, been rifled for the gold, silver and gems supposed to be interred with the dead.

Previous to the Inca conquest probably at least two civilizations rose in Pachacamac—the culture of the highlands and the newer customs of the coast. After a cemetery had been used for a long time the temple was destroyed; even the sort of civilization itself was changed. A third epoch shows a cultural decline, inferior but supplanting, despite the general advance of the world at large. The founding and growth of the Inca empire was one of the last great events of pre-Spanish centuries.

Although Pachacamac graves were so rich in articles from which the story of the past can be read, larger outlines of life and custom may be traced in the ruins of town and temples.

Approaching from the north one sees the convent, still called by its ancient name, Mamacone ("mothers," as applied to the nuns), and a subject of especial study by Doctor Uhle. In the land of the Incas celibate women were not uncommon, and were generally attached to some temple of the sun. The mamaconas were secluded on three sides, the front only facing plain and sea, with entrance openings. No fewer than 200 of these nuns lived here, and they were obliged to pass through the inner and outer sanctuary of Pachacamac to reach the sun temple.

From the convent it is best to pass on to the former, a huge structure 400 feet long, 180 wide and covering two-thirds of an acre. Once there were terraces on three sides, each 20 feet high, but the sand has so blown in and over and about them that they are really discernible now upon only one. Its approaches are by five low and narrow "gradas," slightly over three feet high and six in length; the walls once covered with polychrome frescoes, rich in color and extremely ancient, though traces of design still remain.

The top of the temple is a large plateau, 820 feet by 130. It was at least once rebuilt before the Inca period, and may date from about B. C. 3,000; but it is not, in any event, later than B. C. 1,100.

The valley, and indeed the entire region, was ruled by a chief at Pachacamac, who had the right to enter the temple of the highest deity, as, at a later epoch, the Inca might do at Cuzco. At the center of the northwest front the holiest shrine was placed. We can follow shapes and sizes in hall and gallery, the walls of the large hall in ruins, but still showing that they were 11 fast high. The old "hishop" probably stood here to receive the envys of chiefs, after they had waited on probation for an entire year to come into his presence. A fast of 20 days was required before entering the first court, and of e twelvemonth for the upper court. As little nourishment as possible was taken during this time and an abstemious life in all particulers was enjoined.

The ecclesiastical dignitary received the envoys with covered head, praying, after hearing the messages. Pizarro disdainfully called it "heving speech with the devil," when the old man retired to an adjoining cell.

Doctor Uhle has arrived at some interesting and surprising conclusions es to the inaccessibility and extraordinary sanctity of this temple. As the shrine was completely demolished by Hernando Pizarro, brother of Francisco, so the entire temple seems to have been peculiarly the object of early fanaticism no less than of treasure hunters, which despite the rainless climate made of it a mere mass of ruin more than others in Peru. Smoller then the later sun temple of the Incas, it was more gorgeous. Not only painted with designs in many tints, it was also, quite certainly, incrusted with precious stones and gold presented by the Inca Hvaina Ghapac.

Of the ancient city at least one-quarter was occupied by the temple district and the remainder was divided by cross streets, 13 and 16 feet wide, with courts and buildings of palatial proportions. In the city are four hills, the walls encircling it all conspicuous. The northwest these barriers were from 11 to 13 feet high and in general 8 feet broad, although this was in places increased to 16. Vast crowds must have filled the city at many times, for the wide adobe houselops and walls, which were used constantly by pedestrians, are worn perfectly smooth on certain thoroughfares by the constant passing of multitudes.

Outside the city walls is a widespreading desert, one will (distant only half e mile), not less than 20 feet wide and 476 yards long, still curving around the deepest riches of the sacred region.

Of all this great ruined area the sun temple itself is most conspicuous, rising 300 feet above the general level, on a series of terraces; four on the northeost and northwest, five on the southeast.

The modern history of this most interesting region begins with the journey of Hernando Pizarro, ordered by his more famous brother in 1533 to capture the temple treasures of Pochecamec. Pizarro had heard of its splendors at Cajamarca, when the Inca Atahuipa had told him that "ten days owäy on the road to Cuzco" was a "mosque," chief sanctuary of e whole people, and held in highest reverence by himself and his father, Huaina Capac; and that it contained vest treasure in gold and silver offerings. But Hernando Pizarro traveled only about 16 miles a day, taking 22 days to cover the 340 miles; whereas the swift Indian runners bore messages of warning in far less time (one old Indian once ran from La Paz to Tacna, 190 miles, in three days), and much of the golden treasure was removed or concealed before his arrival. Enough remained, however, for colossal riches.

His conquest was complete on reaching the sanctuary. He at once demolished the shrine of the temple of Pachacamac, and its most sacred idol, in presence of the whole people assembled, raising a cross upon the debris. Thus began the decline of what was once so splendid and so vital a part of the early life.

After taking Cuzco Francisco Pizarro came in 1534 to Pachacamac, bidding wild orgies in the sacred courts and still farther horrifying e people already crushed and outraged.

The final struggle came, however, and the depopulation of the entire valley began, in the wars of Manco Inca, who in 1535 gathered all the Indians in a futile death struggle with Spain. After that the sands blew in and over the old faith, actually and metaphorically; Franciscans, Augustinians, Jesuits came successively to the valley, and its distinctive history was past.

But the keenness of archaeological vision has made the old days live again, has vitalized the ancient faith and brought before modern eyes the actual daily life and worship of these prehistoric tribes, whose whitened skulls still cluster about their violated shrine.

Folwell Adds Local Color

By M. J. PHILLIPS

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

Gerald Folwell came to a realization of the fact, presently, that his hosts were making game of him. It was a novel sensation. In college he had been so popular because of his athletic prowess that they had not "ragged" him. Perhaps an additional reason for his immunity was his known clearness with his fists.

Since taking up his profession, engineering, he had shown the ability to get along with people and to command respect. And yet here, up in the Michigan jackpine wilderness, in the presence of as pseudo-woodsmen wars trying to put something over on him! And trying it, furthermore, in the presence of as pretty a girl as one might wish to see.

The jokiest game in the log cabin was eelfenced by covert allusions to his stiff hat, starched shirt and other evidences of a too-effeminate civilization. The boundless presumption of the genius tenderfoot was also a subject for much discussion.

Folwell did not mind it at first. "Boys will be boys," he said to himself, tolerantly, though the "boys" were as old as himself and one was bigger. So he chatted with the pretty girl and calmly ignored the young men.

The jokieg became more personal and offensive. He noted that the inhospitality of her friends was becoming embarrassing to the girl. A glint appeared in Folwell's eye. That meant trouble.

When the meal was finished the engineer strolled out of the cabin. Darkness had settled over the lonely landscape. The snow was more then knee-deep and a storm was setting in —a grim, determined sort of storm more appropriate to December then early March. The wind was searchingly cold.

After a moments hesitation Folwell plunged through the drifts to another cabin a short distances away—a squatty log house with a slegis window.

Folwell Dominated the Scene.

through which a light shone. He knocked and entered. Sam, the teamster, who had driven him from Princeville, rose to greet him.

"Sam," said Folwell, when the teamster, after puffing appreciatively at one of his cigars, "I didn't come over here exactly to pass the time of day. I wanted to ask a few questions, and does this look to you?" "This" was a dollar bill.

"Looks good," grinned Samuel.

"Well, then, what sort of a game have you put me up against? You agreed to drive me to Rocky Creek instend, you head over here, claiming your harness is broken. And two chaps, fresh as paint, try to give me third degree. What's the joke, anyway?"

"Aw, you'll get to Rocky Creek, all right," replied Sam. He grinned again uncomfortebly. "And you'll get a better bed here then you would over there. The creek's only a couple of hours away. You won't get med if I tell you!"

That depeeds. Anyway, you'll get your dollar."

Sam smoothed his scraggly mustache, cleared his throat and began:

"This here, an' most o' the county so fa'r's that goes, belongs to old Tommy Slade. He has been a lumberieck and a timber cruiser. We've had some high old times together, for Tommy was oeo of tho boys. But he saved his money an' bought a'cmp nine hundred acres of timber an' coal lands. Ho held 'em till the prices went up, an' so he's a millioeaire.

"He lives in New York, but he built theso cabins an' comes back every winter; comes for the smell o' spruce. Brings his family, too."

"Whcro is he now?"

"Dreve over to Rocky Creek with his wife; bo back after a wblic.

"Tha girl in there is their daeugbter, Grace. She stays with them in the big shanty on the knoll back there. Tho yellow-haired lad is old Tommy's son, young Tommy. His friend, the big chap, is a play actor from New York. Name's Vance Courtland; over hear o' bim?"

"Yes. I thought I'd seen him before. He plays in western dramas."

"That's him," nodded Sam. "Well, young Tommy is a-writing a play for him. They coll—coll—"

"Collaborating?"

"That's it. The house where you ate supper is their studyo. They eat an' sleep an' write an' box there."

"Box, you say? Have they gloves?"

"Sure. An' tramp through the woods loaded with deadly weapons, like Davy Crockett. But they don't shoot anything. Never saw a man who wouldn't wear suspenders that could hit an acre o' plee stumps.

"Here's where I come in. This play they're writin' is a backwoods drammer; an' they need what they call 'local color.' Whenever I pick up a likely-lookin' chap goin' from Princeville to Rocky Creek, my harness breaks sad I tote him up here. They'ee stann this (with plenty of any kind) mad so's he'll talk stiff they can put in their play.

"I get two dollars a bead for each one. An' I've brought em' some birds. A couple o' lumberjacks started to rough-house one night, but a little money fixed 'em.

"The girl don't like the way they act. She says it's shaming the name of hospitality. That keeps them in bounds a little, for Conretand wents to marry her. But I don't believe she cares a cnet for him. Old Tommy, he just laughs and tells them to go ahead. He says they'll get theirs yet."

Folwell rose. "Here's your dollar, Sam." The glint in his eye was more pronounced. He was smiling a pleased sort of smile.

"Much obliged," said the teamster, pocketing the bill. Then he looked curiously at Folwell. "Boy, what you going to do?"

"I'm going to give them—theirs."

In less then fifteen minutes young Slade was eegerly proposing thet the trnvelar put on the gloves with bim. He believed it was his own suggestion entirely; but Folwell, occustomed to leading timid and close-bated capital into costly engineering projects, had really goaded bim to the challenge. Courtland, the vain and bendsome, was also blinded by bis cleverness; but in the eyes of Miss Slade, as he was pulling on the gloves, Folwell caught a look of amused comprehension.

Tommy Slade would never have made bis mark in the ring. He was game as a pebble, but too impatuous. His tried to rush Folwell after several insert raps had brought the tears to bis eyes. One particularly eagry and incautious charge the engineer sidestepped. At the same moment be eecelerated Tommy's speed with a swieg behind the ear.

As a rasult, the millionaire's son crasbed into the log well, bead down, and dropped in a heap. He was up in an instaet, but too dizzy to see. By common consent the bout wes terminated. Courtland, anxious eager to show his prowess before the girl he loved, dooned the gloves which Tommy wearily relinquished.

The actor bad reecb and strength; but cigarettes bad weakened his endurance and be met the engineer's acience. So Folwell, bis gray eyes emitting sparks, battered bim with a right good will. The door swung open on the climax.

Old Tommy Slade, smiling quizzical. ly, as seen, a-grin through bis mustache, noted Tommy nursing e bump on his bead as big as an egg; Courtland, with bood dazed against the wall where he bed fellen, bis eristocratic nose bleeding and his right eye swollen shut; Folwell, gloved hands on hips, dominating the scene from the center of the floor; and Grace curled up in a big chair, seeing spellbound at the victor.

"This ought to make the big ect for thet play," murmured old Tommy, with an edge in his gentle tones thet made bis son writhe and Courtland bite his lips. "I reckon you bucks'll flrt with the jam till somebody got e brutelet."

He turned to Folwell. "You the chap thet's goin' to put a power dem across Rocky Creek?"

"If I can get the capital," said the engineer, unlecing the gloves.

Old Tommy's glence rasped over the Gentlemen collaborators again. "You'll get it, all right—if you argue like you fight." By cracky, this makes me think I'll back you myself! Come over to the house. We'll talk it over."

The storm bad increased and the wind bit the perspiring Folwell to the bone. But he seemed to floet over the drifts instead of plowing through them, for Groce Slade was beside bim, ber hand nestling confidingly into the crook of his arm. And he dared to bope that her bent kept time to the mad, sweet dance of bis own.

HORTICULTURE

PLAN FOR A WINDOW GARDEN

One Must Know Characteristics of Plants and Their Requirements—Space Is Factor.

(BY E. RYMAN-GAILLARD)

We who grow plants in our homes do so for the beenty of their foliage, flowers or both, and get pleasure from them to just the degree that we bring them to their utmost perfection. To attain this (with plants of any kind) one must know their characteristics and requirements and consider whether available conditions in the home are adapted to the plants desired.

If a plant standing in the open beds, or in sunny, southern windows is making a grand showing of flowers, or brilliantly colored foliage do not get ons like it expecting the sams results unless it can heve similer ceoditions. The same results cannot be secured if the plant is put into e shaded or northern window.

On the other hand primulas and other plants that produce perfect flowsirs in cool, semi-shaded rnoms will not exert rage had brought the tears to bis eyes. One particularly engry and incautious charge the engineer sidestepped. At the same moment be eecelerated Tommy's speed with a swieg behind the ear.

As a rasult, the millionaire's son crasbed into the log well, bead down, and dropped in a heap. He was up in an instaet, but too dizzy to see. By common consent the bout wes terminated. House Plants.

House plants that are bogey and shaggy and refuse to improve should be thrown ont. They are an eyesore. Better. enfollish the window garden than to mock nature with the victims of ignorance or neglect.

USE CALADIUMS TO BEAUTIFY

Excellent Plant to Cover Unsightly Spots in Rear of House—Plant Early in the Spring.

If you have an unsightly spot in the rear of the house—which, by the way, should never exist—you may hide it from the casual visitor by a border of the beautiful, broad-leaved caladium.

Arrange to separate the kitchen garden from the lawn by planting a border of caladiums. And against a background of sweet peas or salvia it produces a beautiful effect. The best way to cultivate caladium is to plant the tubers as early in the spring as the ground will permit. The soil should be very rich with leaf-mold and well rotted cow or sheep manure and should be worked up with a little sand into a loose loam. The addition of bone meal, well worked into the soil, will help the growth of the plants and add to their beenty. Of the fancy-leaved caladiums those best suited to outdoor planting are those having a predominance of green in the foliage, as the highly colored kind do not do quite so well.

SHRUB BLOOMS VERY FREELY

Brugmansia Suaveolen Is Rather Tender Plant, but Does Well in Northern Climats Badded Out.

The brugmansia suaveolen is a rather tender shrub, but does well at the north bedded out in a perfectly sbeded place in summer. It should be potted in autumn and kept in a frostproof room. It blooms freely outdoure in summer, and in the greenhouse it blooms almost continuously, says the Park's Floral Magazine. A large plant in the editor's greenhouse is, at this writing, full of big fragrant flowers. It is readily raised from cuttings, and the plant blooms when quite small. The seeds do not germinate well. In Florida the plants are desirable for the yard or lawn.

Ramags by Rabbits.

Demeging to trees by rabbits gnawing the berk can be stopped in the following way: make a thick whitewash, sleeking the liquid well right in upon it. To each pallet of the whitewash add three tablespoonfuls of Paris green and paint the trees with it. Stir frequently when epplying it.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

Most nut-bearing trees do best when not transplanted.

Tomatoes should be in soil give it a good coat of manure.

A ripe pepper fruit is very handsome in all its stages.

There is no best time to prune all varieties of fruit in all climates.

From current reports it seems that the Son Jose scale is increasing rapidly.

Peach trees are inclined to push their buds on the approach of warm weather.

Bordeaux mixture woe discovered hy accident in the fall of 1882 by Professor Millardet.

Fruit orchards suffer from drouths through the summer when the fruit is nearing maturity.

To make chrysanthemums bushy and compact, pinion the branches back several times.

A medium-sized tree can be removed with a two-horse team; large trees will require a double team.

Transplented trees should be frequently watered during the growing season to encourage root growth.

Life in fruit trees, as in everything else, comes from within. The tree must draw its vitality from the soil through the roots.

To get rid of the red spider, dust the leaves or fruit with powdered flowers of sulphur after moistening to make the powder adhere.

With a few exceptions grapes of the Labrusca species, at which Concord may be taken as the type, are the most satisfactory for general planting. It is reported that an edible and nutritious fruit has been obtained from the climbing rose by cross breeding by a California horticulturist.

Girdled Trees.

Many trees that bave been girdled by mice can be saved by bridge grafting, which consists of bridging over the bark above the place where the mice have gnawed and that below.

Use small scions two or three inches longer then the width of the girdled place. They should be cut in the fall and carefully preserved during the winter. The grafting should be done as early as possible in the spring.

Guard Against Overchurning.

Overchurning should be guarded against as well as under churning, for butter that is over churned will retain a large amount of buttermilk, which is very difficult to remove by washing. Consequently the butter will in time take up a rancid or buttermilk flavor directly from the buttermilk that is retained.

House Plants.

House plants that are bogey and shaggy and refuse to improve should be thrown ont. They are an eyesore. Better. enfollish the window garden than to mock nature with the victims of ignorance or neglect.

What Ails You?

Do you feel weak, tired, despondent, have frequent headaches, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in morning, "heart-burn," bolching, gas, and feelings like after eating, stomach gnaw or burn, foul breath, dizzy spells, poor or variable appetite, nausea at times and kindred symptoms?

If you have any considerable number of the above symptoms you are suffering from biliousness, torpid liver with indigestion, or dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made up of the most valuable medicinal principles known to medical science for the permanent cure of each and every one of these. It is a most efficient liver invigorator, stomach tonic, bowel regulator and nerve strengthener.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a patent medicine or secret nostrum, a full list of its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper and attested under oath. A glance at these will show that it contains no alcohol, or habit-forming drugs. It is a fluid extract made with triple-refined glycerine, of proper strength, from the roots of native American medical forest plants. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Prop's, Buffalo, N. Y.

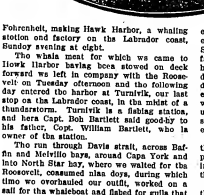
BIG GAME of the ARCTIC ICE

by E. P. LARNED

COPYRIGHT BY HERALD & TRIBUNE



IT WAS due to the initiative of and to the preparations made by Mr. G. F. Norton of New York and to his kindness in including me in the party, that I owe this opportunity to set forth here a brief account of the hunting trip taken by Fred Norton, Harry Whitney and myself during the summer of 1902 on the sailing steamer Erik, which sailed as tender to the Roosevelt as far as Etah, North Greenland, on the memorable expedition of that year, which resulted in the discovery of the pole by Commander Robert E. Peary. Whitney was a member of the party until we left Etah to return home.

The ship being our headquarters for the whole of the trip, we were able to take along as large an outfit as we wished. In addition to the usual paraphernalia we took with us an 18-foot whaleboat propelled by a three-horsepower gasoline engine.

Sydney Cape Breton Island, was the rendezvous for the two ships of this expedition, the Roosevelt and the Erik, to which place Norton and I proceeded by train from New York. The Erik had come from St. John's several days before and was taking on coal and provisions. The Roosevelt arrived on the fourteenth, with Whitney and other members of the expedition, with the exception of Commander Peary, who came by train on the same day. At Sydney we met Mr. Craft, from Carnegie Institute, Washington, who was to become a welcome member of our party aboard the Erik.

Of the ship's company was Capt. Sam Bartlett, uncle of Captain Bob; of the Roosevelt; first mate, Tom Bartlett, at ons time skipper for Dr. Grenfell; second mate, Harold Bartlett, son of the "old man," as the crew called Captain Sam; chief engineer, Richard Pike; second engineer, Jim; another Jim, the steward; Joe White, the cabin boy, and the cook, bootsrain, two stokers and a crew of five sailors—all Newfoundlanders—with the exception of the cabin boy, who was, I believe, an elevator boy in a New York hotel before we took him along as chief administrator to our comfort. This was the gathering aboard the Erik when she sailed out of Sydney on Friday, July 17, at 12:30 a. m., leaving the Roosevelt to follow later and making the start of o polar expedition which was to become in a little over a year's time, the most famous in history.

We passed through the Straits of Belle Isle during the night of the eighteenth, having experienced both clear and foggy weather and a drop in tha temperature to 40 degrees

Fokrcheit, making Hawk Harbor, a whaling station and factory on the Labrador coast, Sunday evening at eight.

The whala meat for which we came to Hawk Harbor having been stowed on deck forward we left in company with the Roosevelt on Tuesday afternoon and the following day entered the harbor at Turnivik, our last stop on tha Labrador coast, in the midst of a thunderstorm. Turnivik is a fishing station, and here Capt. Bob Bartlett and good-by to his father, Capt. William Bartlett, who is owner of the station.

The run through Davis strait, across Baffin and Melville bays, around Capa York and into North Star bay, where we waited for the Roosevelt, consumed nine days, during which time wo overhauled our outfit, worked on a sail for the whaleboat and fished for gulls that wouldn't bite. We crossed the arctic circle on the twenty-eighth of July. At midnight on tha thirtieth of July I took a snapshot photograph of the ship from the end of the bowsprit.

Tho Roosevelt came in on the third of August, having stopped at Capa York to pick up dogs and natives, and at the suggestion of Peary we lost no time in preparing for a walrus hunt. Commander Peary helped us in every way possible—as indeed he had done from the start and continued to do until the ships separated—procuring Eskimo guides for us and telling us where to go and what to do when we got there. We left the ships at three fa tha morning with three Eskimo guides, steering our power whaleboat west through Wolstenholm sound to where Saunders Island lifts its steep, bara sides, washed on the west by the open water of Baffin bay. In the sound and about Saunders Island congregate tha old bull walrus, while further north in the Whale sound regions are found only the cows and young bulls.

Off the eastern end of the island one of the Eskimo pointed to a black spot on a floating cake of ice, and as we pushed nearer the black turned to a dirty brownish yellow, soon easily recognized as two big walrus bulls lying asleep on the ice pan. The engine was stopped and the boat drifted up quietly. Two Eskimo stood in the bow with harpoons ready, I stood next, and the others somewhera behind me. When within about 30 feet both walrus raised their heads, showing long white tusks and thick necks criss-crossed with scars. As Whitney and I fired they started sliding off the pans into the water. The Eskimo in the bow, first to throw his harpoon, missed the nearest animal as he sank, but the second man threw true, with a long, tight-casing with n jerk as he snubbed it on a cleat. So he had one walrus, at any rate, hard and fast on the business end of the line. When he came up to breathe—for he was far from dead—I fired at him again and missed, and he ducked under. The same thing happened several times, and though I did finally finish him with a bullet through his brain, I had no idea until then what o lot of practica it takes to shoot accurately out of n boat when rocked even by small waves, as was ours.

The sixth of August was calm and warm, the sun shona brightly and the innumerable pans of floating ica glistened under the slanting raya, as the Erik shoved her nose into the mouth of Whale sound.

"Just the day for walrus—no wind and they'll be out on the ice sleeping in the sun," said Mat Henson, who had come aboard from the Roosevelt to take charga of the hunt; and Mat knew, for he had hunted walrus in Whale sound many a time.

In half an hour several pans of walrus had been sighted—it was then four in tha morning—and two boats were launched; Norton, Henson, two Eskimo and myself in a rowboat; Whitney, with a crew, in the launch. Wa were soon busy. When an animal was killed an oar was hoisted and the ship steamed up to the spot and hauled the dead monster aboard with the winch; the boat shoving off again to search for more game. Some of the "tricks of the trade" were soon learned, for instance: a walrus killed in tha water would sink nlaa times out of ten, and unless there was a harpoon in him would be lost. The same was ganerally true of one shot on an ice pan, unless killed instantly—he would slide off into the water and sink.

Our party finally returned aboard exhausted, to find that about 40 walrus had been taken.

When I awoke next morning we were dropping anchor off a little Eskimo village named Kangerdersiookssoah, situated near the month of Inglefield gulf. Commander Peary had been with us aboard the Erik since leaving North Star bay and said that he would remain here long enough to give us a chance at the caribou. That afternoon we pushed off in the whalchoat, bound for the head of the gulf, our five Eskimo companions as pleased and as excited as children at the idea of a hunt. We worked along shore, zigzagging between low slebs of ice, where sea pigeons flooted and little auks dovs and flew away as the host approached. Looking over the side one could see their little black-and-white bodies shooting tha water, using their wings vigorously and leaving a trail of bubbles behind. Several seals were seen and as we rounded o point half an hour later, another village appeared, the pointed huts hardly distinguishable at first from the pointed rocks. A nativs cams out in a kayak to accompany us ashore.

At least half the population expressed a strong desirs to go with us, by getting into the boat when wa were making ready to leava, a compromise being finally effected by our taking along two fine-looking young bucks each dressed in a new bear and sealskin suit.

At seven the next morning the sun burst through the mist and shone on the wst rocks, the white ice in the bay, and also on the glistening black head of a curious seal wallowing about just off shore. Things were moving in no time. The huskies crawled out from under the boat cover and beat their fur clothing with sticks to get but the dampness and the oil stores were set going in preparation for breakfast. At eight wa started inland, accompanied by the Eskimo hunters, carrying rifles and a few biscuits.

The first ridga rose sharply from the shore, the trail beyond leading up a broad, rocky valley. Here we separated, my two guides turning up a dry creek bed. It was hard traveling over the broken rock in the valleys and the steep slants of the ridges, and my 495 Winchester got pretty heavy before we sighted the first game, in the shape of two blue-gray caribou bulls, feeding at the edga of a rock-rimmed pond. One of the huskies and I circled around the down-wind side and crawled on our bellies up to a big boulder near the head of the pond, bringing both animals within ragge. As we reached the boulder and peeked cautiously around it the nearer caribou began to get uneasy and started out of the water, but pulled up on the bank, at a range of about 100 yards, long enough to get himself properly shot. At that distance his cost was much the same shade of gray as the rocks on which he fell.

Not long after, leaving this pond we killed, between us, 15 ptarmigan with the .22 rifle. A few hours later, standing on the top of a high ridge looking across n big valley with a lake at the bottom, the inland ice cap could be plainly seen curving down, smooth and white, smothering all but this narrow strip of barren land along the coast; and at the foot of the ridge on the other side, standing ankle deep at the edga of another little pond, were two more caribou, a bull and a cow. We dropped back of the crest of the ridga and, following down a ravine further on, came out on a level with the pond, hidden from the sight of the game by a small hummock of rock. By crawling to the top of the hummock we were able to get a view of the pond. The caribon were still there, but lying down among the stones, and so like them in color that they were very hard to locate without the glasses—though only 200 yards distant, as I afterward placed it. It was useless to try to get nearer, as there was no cover, and I fired at the bull and could see he was hit by the way he staggered on he jumped up and tried to run. The cow jumped up also and stood still, broadside on, and when I fired at her I could hear the bullet strika very plainly. Though it did not knock her down, she seemed unable to run, and another shot put her out of her misery.

While still at this pond ths two Eskimo hunters with whom Whitney started out chased a cow and calf on the run right past us. I hit the cow in the side at the third shot and the calf stopped and was killed by one of the Eskimo.

We now had six caribou—a fair supply of meat—and two extra men to help carry it in, as the other party had had no luck. So I left them to bring in what they could and started for campialons. On the way I killed the biggest bull of all. He was alone on a hillside and I got within ranga without much difficulty. Whitney was in camp and said he had seen no caribou and Norton came in a couple of hours later, tired and disgusted, having shot a calf.

Our second sttempt at walrus hunting in Whala sound was practically a failure, the weather being unfavorable. The Erik was headed for Etah, where wa found the Roosevelt. At Etah the shore rises abruptly on both sides of the harbor and the sharp, rocky hills were dotted with Arctic hares. They are white with black-tipped ears all the year around and have extremely long and powerful hind legs, often running along almost upright for considerable distances. They were very shy when wa arrived, having been hunted for some days by men from the Roosevelt.

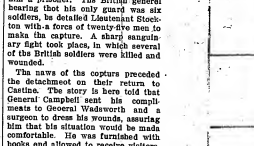
During the ten days spent at Etah the Roosevelt was making ready for her dash northward. The two ships lashed together, transferred supplies, coal and the vile-smelling whala meat, which we had carried for so long aboard the Erik. Coal and provisions were landed and the day before the Roosevelt sailed was spent in transferring some 250 dogs from an island, where they had been put ashore, to the Roosevelt's deck.

Early in the afternoon of the eighteenth of August the Roosevelt showed by signal that she was ready to start north. At the time the Erik was tied to the rocks, landing coal, and the Roosevelt was anchored further up the bay. The captain, Norton, Whitney and I rowed over to her and Commander Peary invited us into his cabin, where wa drank a glass of brandy to the health of all on board and to the success of the expedition, shook hands with everyone we could find amid the hustle and preparation of starting, and rowed back to the Erik. Whitney had decided to winter at Etah, and we left him there on the twenty-first, dropping him eatern in his rowboat about an hour's run off.

Here we were homeward bound and not a sight had we had of the greatest and most desired arctic game, the white bear. It was nearly a month later before we did see one. We killed a few more walrus, arctic hares and birds on our way south, visited the Greenland Danish settlements at Upernevik, Disco and Holstenberg and crossed Davis strait, striking the coast on the west side near the mouth of Cumberland gulf.

On the twenty-second of September, off the Labrador coast, we ran into an iceberg, the shock breaking open the old Erik pretty well back to this pavement. Fortunately the damage was about two feet above the water line; very fortunately, as none of the boats happened to be in a condition that would permit quick launching. The crash came about eight o'clock on a bright, starlight evening, with the northern lights shifting across the sky and probably blotting out the berg until it was too late to escape collision. This accident seemed to take the life right out of the old ship, though she had withstood so many dangers in the past, and it was a crippled old Erik with a badly smashed nose that finally dropped anchor in Brigus harbor.

OLD FORT GEORGE



Interior of Maine Fortress Is Now a Ball Ground.

Historic Earthworks Built by the British in 1779 and Named in Honor of England's King—Outlines Still Visible.

Augusta, Me.—Ancient Pentagoet, better known as Castine, situated on the eastern side of Penobscot bay and river, is one of the most prominent historic spots in Maine today. It has preserved the well-marked traces of the works of the past and no small settlement has within its borders so many earthworks and old forts. Foremost among the earthworks is Fort George, situated on the high land in the center of the peninsula. It was built by the British in June, 1779, and was named Fort George in honor of his majesty, George III. The fort is tetragonal in form with a bastion at each of the four angles. The bastion where was located the magazine was fully occupied by it, the entrances being made of arch passages of brick, which may be seen today, covered with mortar, and over them a layer of logs with a heavy covering of earth.

According to tradition and history, it was from these same barracks that Gen. Peleg Wadsworth escaped when held a prisoner in 1780, after being captured by the English at his home in Thomaston and taken to Castine, where he was confined for a long time. Following the departure of the British from Castine in 1815 the Americans took possession of the fort and the government had it repaired, strengthened and garrisoned, new barracks taking the place of those used by the British. The interior of the fort has long been used by the boys as a ball ground. The foundations of the old barracks are still visible.

History says that it was in this old fort that the gibbet was erected on which both Ball and Elliott were hanged. Both names were well known in the early period of Maine. The palisades, the barracks, the munitions of war and its buildings have all disappeared, but otherwise the old fort remains practically the same as when the British left it.

Old Magazine, Fort George.

In early February of 1780, while the country was in a session of quietude following the campaigns of the preceding fall, General Campbell, then in charga of the garrison at Fort George, learning that his hated American foa, Gen. Peleg Wadsworth, was at his home on the St. George river in Thomaston, determined to make him a prisoner. The British general bearing that his only guard was six soldiers, he detailed Lieutenant Stockton with a force of twenty-five men to make the capture. A sharp sanguinary fight took place, in which several of the British soldiers were killed and wounded.

The naws of ths coptura preceded the detachmeot on their return to Castine. The story is told that General Campbell sent his compliments to General Wadsworth and a surgeon to dress his wounds, assuring him that his situation would be made comfortable. He was furnished with books and allowed to receive visitors. Ha dined with the commandant and with all the principal officers of the garrison.

It was not long before General Wadsworth made application for a flag of truce, which was granted. He could traasmit a letter to the governor of Massachusetts and another to Mrs. Wadsworth. This was granted on the condition that the letter to the governor should be inspected.

General Wadsworth's escape followed soon after. In company with Major Benjamin Burton he bribed their water carrier and from him received a gimlat. They bored holes in the boards of the side of their barracks, covering the holes with chewed bread. One stormy night they cut their way with a knife and escaped. For miles they were forced to go through the then wilderness, crossing the river at Belfast, and were forced through Belfast, Northport and Rockland to Thomaston. The fort was finally vacated in 1815.

Petrified Woman 900 Pounds.

Bellefontaine, O.—One of the most remarkable cases of petrifiction ever on record was discovered here when the body of Mrs. J. W. Overly, who died 18 years ago, was exhumed at the Roundhead cemetery. The body and coffin had petrified and was hard to move owing to the weight reaching nearly 900 pounds. Mrs. Overly was a small woman. At burial both she and the coffin did not weigh as much as 300 pounds. The petrifiction is said to be perfect.

Plans for Fortifications at Panama

WASHINGTON.—Work on the final detailed plans for the fortification of the Panama canal, for which an appropriation of $2,000,000 was made by congress and which had been the subject of wide discussion, national and international, ever since the digging of the big ditch was undertaken by the United States government, has been begun here by Brig. Gen. W. H. Bixby, chief of engineers, and brig. Gen. Arthur Murray, chief of the coast artillery. Officials of the war department have already completed general plans for the fortifications, but maps will have to be prepared setting forth the details for the construction work before the ground can be broken, and it is this task which Generals Bixby and Murray are now undertaking. Active work on the building of the fortifications will begin about July. It is expected by the officials in charge that the fortifying of the waterway will be completed by January, 1915—the date set for the completion of the canal itself.

Brigadier General Crozier, chief of ordnance, has already drawn up plans for the manufacture of the $1,000,000 worth of guns and mortors required. These will be made at the government shops at Watervliet, N. Y. The entire armament will be used in fortifying the two ends of the canal, no provision having been made by congress for the defense of the locks and dams. Two sets of fortifications will be placed at the Colon end of the canal and one set at the Panama end. Four 14-inch rifles, eight 12-inch mortars and six six-inch guns will be placed at the Panama side and the remainder which the balance of the appropriation will provide at the Colon end.

Comparatively strong natural positions exist at both the Atlantic and Pacific ends of the waterway for defense against a land army.

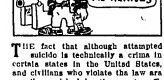
Plans for the protection of the docks at Pedro Miguel, Mia Flores and Gatun are now being drawn up

Not a Penny for Pressing Trousers

MILLIONS for art and not one penny for pants.

The solicitude that Uncle Sam displays that the public buildings and driveways of the national capital shall be maintained in the most artistic and approved style does not extend to his public mos. Uncle Sam is perfectly willing to spend hundreds of money for capital city plans, for guaranteeing that the Washington of the future shall be patterned after the most careful and exact designs, but when it comes to paying out money to make certain that the trousers of the government officials are creased properly and their clothes in as good public order as the capital's streets, he draws a distinct and impassable line.

"This might never have been found out if it had not been for Daniel H. Burnham, of Chicago, master city planner and chairman of the fine arts commission. Incidentally he raised a question as to what are legitimate traveling expenses and what are not.



Not so very long ago Chairman Burnham left Chicago for Washington, to attend a meeting of the fine arts commission. Anxious, as his chief, to uphold the aesthetic and refined nature, of the organization, he found on unpacking his wardrobe that many of his articles of clothing were in imperative need of a pressor before they would be in shape to do credit to the vista of Pennsylvania avenue.

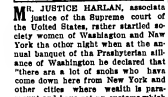
Without giving the matter a second thought, he turned the tailor's bill, with his railway ticket and Pullman expense, over to the treasury department, expecting to be reimbursed. The bill amounted to $4.75 and the auditor certified it, as a matter of course.

Not so, however. Controller Robert J. Tracewell—significant name—who can, on occasion, be considerable of a watch dog of the treasury. Mr. Tracewell scrutinized the bill, repeated the performances, and then, after some deep thought, wrote out a formal opinion as follows:

"The pressing of clothes has never, to my knowledge, been held to be a personal expense, occasioned solely by travel."

Attempts at Suicide Ignored in Army

THE fact that although attempted suicide is technically a crime in certain states in the United States and civilians who violate the law are usually punished by the courts, officers and enlisted men in the United States army and navy are never court martialed for this offense, new brought to light when the news was received from Germany that Emperor William had pardoned an army officer for attempting suicide and declared that his deed "can be judged neither by regular or honor tribunals."



Gen. George B. Davis, judge advocate general of the United States army, declared that since the organization of the army and navy of the United States no officer or enlisted man had been punished for trying to kill himself. It is a generally understood custom in both branches of the service, said General Davis, that this offense is not punishable by court martial, although a test case never has been brought up.

General Davis declared that attempted suicide is technically considered a crime in the army and navy.

"It is a fact, however, that many man and officers of the army and navy have attempted suicide, not one of them has even been court martialed," he continued. "Just why this should be I do not know.

"In both the army and the navy attempted suicide is considered a crime, but has never been officially recognized as such. Both branches of the service frown on the practice

Judge Denounces Sunday Entertainers

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States, rather startled society women of Washington and New York the other night when at the annual banquet of the Presbyterian alliance of Washington he declared that "there are a lot of snobs who have come down here from New York and other cities where wealth is paramount and have set up customs which are injurious to the people of this community. Sunday afternoon teas musicales and other social functions are, in my mind, a desecration of the Sabbath. Something must be done to stem the tide of depravity which will otherwise sweep over us."

Then this sweeping rebuke to society in Washington is in a measure firmly upheld by Mrs. Mathew T. Scott, president general of the daughters of the American Revolution and herself one of the cliff dwellers set. And ha it known tha cliff dwellers are not tha official set at all, but the old resident set of Washington. Until you have been admitted to that particular circle you are not really "in society," Mrs. Scott says.

"I think it is an outrage that so many of the leaders of society here should desecrate Sunday by giving large teas, dinners, musicales and other entertainments. Tha custom was brought here from the continent and has been growing ever since. If allowed to continue it will undermine the life of this country and bring ruin on us. I think that Sunday should be observed above all else, and that this continental habit should be stopped. I agree perfectly with Justice Harlan in all he said."

The custom of dinner giving, musicale entertaining and all that kind of thing on Sundays was really introduced in Washington by the Baroness Hengelmuller, wife of the ambassador of Austro-Hungary.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

PRESIDENT'S NEW SECRETARY

The new secretary to President Taft who succeeds Charles D. Norton is Charles D. Hilles, until recently assistant secretary of the treasury. The selection of Mr. Hilles meets with the hearty approval of the friends of the president. Mr. Hilles is a native of Ohio, but was appointed to his present position from Dobb's Ferry, N. Y., where he was conducting a boys' school. Mr. Hilles is about 40 years old. He will receive an annual salary of $7,500, congress having granted an increase of $1,500 for the position. Under the reorganization of the executive force which has brought about Mr. Norton's short term at the White House, that force, with the exception of the secretary, will be practically a permanent body.

That women are keen observers and not always without a sense of humor has been demonstrated by a Virginia girl. When the announcement was made that Charles D. Hilles had been selected for the position of secretary to the president the young lady wrote to Mr. Hilles a congratulatory letter in which she invited him to read Leviticus, chapter 15, verses 29 to 33. Mr. Hilles borrowed a Bible and read the following:

"And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat.

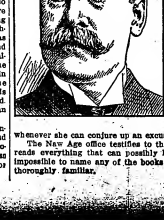
"And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited, and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness."

HEIR TO THRONE OF MONACO

Prince Louis, who is heir to the throne of the little principality of Monaco, famous throughout the world as the greatest gambling resort in existence, may never wield the power now exercised by his father, Prince Albert. Although the profits from the casino pay all the taxes of the principality, thereby freeing every citizen from financial obligations to the state, the people are not contented. They have made demands upon Prince Albert for a constitution, and the prince, immediately after the expulsion of Miguel from Portugal, granted them one. They rejected it, however, demanding fuller political rights, and even made demonstrations before the palace, in which the red flag of anarchy was unfurled.

It has been charged that a corrupt condition of things exists. By the terms of the last concession granted to the Casino, about $2,400,000 was handed over annually by it to Prince Albert, who also drew about $800,000 a year from the local post-office and stamp duties

FISHER SUCCEEDS BALLINGER



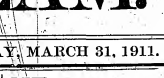
He is a native of West Virginia and is 49 years old.

Mr. Ballinger says he intends to protect those whom he considers have been his enemies. In defending himself against those who have been waging war upon him Mr. Ballinger says that he spent $25,000 and he today a poor man. His health, too, has been impaired.

Walter Lowery Fisher of Chicago, succeeds Richard A. Ballinger as secretary of the interior. Mr. Ballinger's resignation was presented in January, but at the request of the president, was withheld until after congress adjourned. Mr. Fisher is a lawyer, and has served in several public capacities. Singularly, he has been one of Gifford Pinchot's staunchest supporters in the matter of conservation of natural resources. He was president of the Conservation League of the National Conservation Congress, which succeeded the league and of which Mr. Pinchot is president.

He has always taken a deep and active interest in conservation. He was instrumental in the formation of the Municipal Voters' League of Chicago and was its president in 1896. Recently he was appointed a member of President Taft's commission to investigate the feasibility of regulation of stock and bond issues of railroads.

MAINE GOVERNOR AN EDITOR



Gov. Frederick W. Plaisted of Maine is a newspaper editor before he is anything else. He has passed the greater part of his life in the atmosphere of a newspaper office and will never get the smell of the printer's ink from his fingers. His apprenticeship was served under one of the old school of Maine journalists, Gen. Harris M. Plaisted, his father. For many years they published the New Age together, and the paper lives today, a monument to their efforts.

Governor Plaisted leads an ideal home life. Mrs. Plaisted was Miss Frances B. Gilliken, and for several years assisted him in the New Age office. She still retains a lively interest in that publication and, although the wife of the governor of the state, democratically lays aside her social duties and plunges into the grind of "getting out" the paper whenever she can conjure up an excuse for so doing.

The New Age office testifies to the bookish tendencies of the owner, who reads everything that can possibly be of interest and profit to him. It is impossible to name any of the books most widely read with which he is not thoroughly familiar.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Kansas Man Has Streak of Hard Luck

TOPEKA, Kan.—John S. Dawson, attorney general, is working on a case that is the prize hard-luck story for any Kansan since the days of the grasshoppers and the hot winds. Lorenz Schreiber is the "goat." Less than six months ago he owned 560 acres of fine land in Butler county, Kan. He does not own the land and he in debt between $5,0000 and $6,000.

The attorney general, acting under a long-unused law, is protecting Schreiber and assisting him in finding just how much he is in debt. The attorney general may bring civil and criminal suits to collect from those who are charged with swindling Schreiber.

Schreiber has two sons and they wanted to leave the farm and become millers. A flour mill costs money, and while Schreiber had a farm worth about $12,000, he had little extra cash. But he was willing to help his sons, so they found a mill near Herper, Kan., reputed to be worth $40,000. Schreiber did not know the actual worth of the property, but he bought an eleven-twenty-fourths of the mill, giving in exchange his farm and notes for $8,000 for the minority interest.

Schreiber and his sons were ready to take charge of the mill, when it was burned. One insurance company has absolutely refused to pay any insurance and the other three insurance companies, which carried policies on the property, will not pay more than one-half the face value of the policies because of evidences of incendiary origin of the fire which the insurance agents have found.

Schreiber's farm is gone. His mill is goes and he cannot collect more than $3,000 se eleven-twenty-fourths of the insurance money. The ground and oalvage has been seized by the creditors of the mill. Schreiber can pay whatever he received on the notes he signed, but that will leave about $6,000. Attorney General Dawson may be able to compel a return of notes given by Schreiber on account of alleged fraud.

Baby Pleas Win the Father's Liberty

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—She was just a little mite of a girl of eight years. But Hazel Burns wasn't a bit afraid of the big man who sat at a desk covered with great, thick books.

"Please, mister," she said, shaking o chair to attract the big man's attention. "Please, mister, but can you tell me where the judge is?"

"Why, I'm the judge," the man replied. "But what can I do for a little girl like you?"

"Wait a minute," she said. Then she ran from the office to the head of the stairs.

"Come on up, mamma; he's up here," she yelled down the stairway.

And Mrs. Burns, carrying Richard Burns, two years old, with Evelyn Burns, four years old, and Irene Burns, six years old, tagging behind, climbed the stairs while Hazel led them into the judge's courtroom. Judge Latshaw—the big man Hazel had found—soon had one of the youngsters talking gleefully.

"It's my husband," the mother explained; "he's in jail and I haven't anybody to support these." And she pointed to the flock of youngsters about her.
